Some will say they do not believe in this proxy business. To me, one may as well say that he does not believe in the atonement which was wrought out by our Lord and Savior for the redemption of the human family; for that is certainly a work of proxy. He becomes the Savior and Redeemer of mankind. We become the recipients of the blessings of the atonement, so far as being redeemed from our individual sins is concerned, only when we have accepted him as such, and when we have accepted of his mission as the Redeemer and Savior of the world. So men are authorized to act for the Lord by authority given them, and do for their dead kindred, a proxy work; thus they may become Saviors of men. So that with those for whom the work shall be done properly, as the Lord has revealed it through his servant, the Prophet Joseph, when they accept of the work done, it becomes efficacious for their salvation.

RESPONSIBILITY UPON THE PERSON, THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

With regard to this expression: if it were not so the whole earth would be smitten, would be utterly wasted at his coming, it seems to me that this refers not only to the individual members of the Church, but to the Church as a whole, and not only to us, but to the people of the world. Elijah came in fulfilment of the prediction that he would come before the great and glorious coming of our Lord and Savior, and he conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, in the Kirtland temple, on the third day of April, 1836, the keys of the dispensation of the turning of the hearts of the children to the fathers; and he told them on that occasion that by this they might know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord was nigh, even at our doors. Eighty-seven and one-half years have passed since that time. We are that much nearer the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and his coming is assured. Is the earth going to be wasted at his coming? I firmly believe from my experience and observation, and from what history tells us, that there has never been a time since the visitation of the Angel Moroni to Joseph Smith, when there has been so much wickedness as now in the world and so much destruction of life and property, all fulfilling the predictions of the prophets, being signs of the time of the coming of our Lord and Savior.

THE SPIRIT OF ELIJAH.

When Elijah delivered his message, there went forth to the world a spirit, even the spirit of Elijah, which was seen in Great Britain, in the parliament of that great nation: for almost immediately, we learn from the history, they enacted laws making it obligatory upon the parish clerks and others in the subdivisions of the government of Great Britain that they keep correct records, records of births, records of deaths, records of marriages, etc., the very data that are required to enable us to perform the work for our dead in the temples of the Lord; and a place was designated for the safe keeping of these records as they became completed. In Great Britain, in other nations of Europe, and throughout the United States, from that time went forth a spirit and a desire among men to know of their kindred dead, such as had never been witnessed before, and genealogical societies were organized, and men and women of wealth and nobility have expended their fortunes and years of their time in searching for the very information that we desire and need in order to discharge ourselves of the obligations resting upon us concerning the dead, and we have now accessible all through the country, libraries containing thousands and thousands of printed histories of families and of branches and of counties and shires and parishes, and I think that the people of the world are doing their duty in this respect, perhaps as well as are the Latter-day Saints. We have builded temples at great cost and are maintaining them at great expense, and there are but a few of us who have been very active in looking after our kindred dead.

IMPORTANCE OF TEMPLE WORK.

The importance of this work was stated emphatically by the Prophet Joseph when he said that the Lord has never laid upon this people a greater responsibility than that of looking after their dead, which means, inquiring after them, learning of them, building temples and redeeming them by administering unto them the saving ordinances of the gospel.

The gospel is preached to the world; it is the poor of the world who are receiving the gospel. This work in the Church is being performed by the poor of the Church. Think it over, brethren and sisters, we have men of means, we have men who could well afford to inquire after their dead, make extended research, and could pay for proxy work in having that work done, and men, too, who are active in other religious lines of work, who seem never to have let this important question enter into their minds; who have never been active in obtaining genealogy and in doing temple work. My motive is, in speaking these few words this afternoon, brethren and sisters, that I might inspire in the minds of some of my brethren and sisters who have been neglectful of this responsibility, a desire and a determination to take up this work, to learn where their responsibilities lie, and to discharge themselves faithfully of these responsibilities, while they have the opportunity.

AN OPPORTUNITY TO WORK AT HOME.

Time will not permit me to extend my remarks upon this subject, which is one of the most glorious and most important, and many examples of faithfulness on the part of our people are worthy of the emulation of the whole. I would that all could know the sacrifices which some are making in these temples, and in obtaining a genealogy for their dead. Those who cannot go abroad to preach the gospel, who are physically disqualified, men who are wrapped up in business and professions, so that they cannot answer the call, have an opportunity here at home to do a work for which they are well adapted, where they can use their means to the very best advantage and accomplish just as great and glorious a work as if they were abroad in the world preaching the gospel. Will you do it, brethren and sisters? That is the question. Are we going to be as the world—hearers of the word and not doers of it, deceiving ourselves? I trust this will not be the case. God help us to discharge our duty faithfully, that the earth may not be wasted at his coming and that we may not be reproached when our life's work is ended, with having neglected our dead, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I feel very weak this afternoon, and I desire your assistance and the blessing of my heavenly Father that I may be able to say something that will be profitable to you.

GRATITUDE AND THANKS EXPRESSED

My soul is filled with a deep gratitude that I cannot express, for membership in this wonderful organization. I am thankful that my lot has been cast with this people, I am grateful that I was born of goodly parents, and that the environment of my life has been such that I have participated in the greatest blessings that the Lord has bestowed upon his children. While listening to the brethren who have addressed us, I have felt to pour out my soul in thanksgiving because of what we are enjoying. No other people upon the face of the earth have been honored as we have in having been given the knowledge of the gospel of our Lord. Think of belonging to a Church that has deposited with it the information and authority that is necessary for all humanity to possess before they can realize the purpose of their creation.

I sometimes feel that we do not appreciate the Holy Bible, and what it contains, and these other scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price that have been referred to by our beloved President as letters from our heavenly Father. They may be so received, at least they are his advice and his counsel to all the children of men given to them that they may know how to take advantage of their opportunities, that their lives may not be spent in vain. One of the sorrowful things in life is to see a man or a woman laid away in Mother earth with a realization of the fact that they have refused the greater blessings that our Father offered to them, and have continued grasping at the bubble that has itself disappeared. When I think of the millions of God's children in the world, and realize how little they are striving for the things that are really worth while, I feel sad, but when I see this body of people here today—representatives of the great Church that bears the name of the Redeemer—and realize that we who have accepted the gospel have been chosen, as it were, from among the multitude of our father's children to understand him and to know why we are here, my heart is filled with gratitude and praise to Him for his blessings unto us.

We believe in a pre-existence. The Lord has taught us that in the Scriptures, but there are millions of those who profess belief in the Holy Bible who do not believe in, or at least do not understand, what pre-existence really means. They do not realize that we lived before we came here; they do not comprehend that this body has been given to us as a reward for faithfulness in the spirit world before we came here. They do not know that by partaking of certain ordinances prescribed by our heavenly Father, we, as husbands and wives, may be united for time and eternity and enjoy the companionship of our children for ever. How thankful we should be for that knowledge that has come to us.

As I stand here now, realizing that from infancy until manhood I had the teaching of a loving father and a tender, sweet mother, and that I had explained to me what I should do in order to prepare for eternal life in the presence of our Father, I feel grateful indeed.

If I were to think, as many of the people of the world think, that now my beloved parents are gone, they have passed out of my life forever and that I will never see them again, that would deprive me of one of the greatest joys that I have in life, the contemplation of meeting them again, and receiving their welcome and their affection, and of thanking them from the depths of a grateful heart. These are some of the blessings that appeal to me as coming through the gospel of Jesus Christ.

THIS LIFE IS NOT THE END.

I am thankful that there has been revealed to us and made plain in this latter-day that this life is not the end, that this is but a part of eternity, and that if we take advantage of our privileges here, that this is but the stepping stone to greater and more desirable conditions. We are all of us passing rapidly to that time when we will be called hence. If we did not understand that there is a future life, if we did not realize that there is something more than the influence that we have received thus far, if there was not anything but the vanity and vexation of life for us to live for there are many, it seems to me, who would grow weary in the struggle that is to be made for existence here. But in the mercy of our heavenly Father he has bestowed upon us the most wonderful gifts that come to human kind. Think of the tenderness of our fathers and mothers, reared as we are under the nurture and admonition of the Lord; think of the homes of prayer wherein we have been taught that we must pray to our heavenly Father if we would be pleasing unto him. Think of the teachings that have come to us of honesty, of industry, of integrity, of sobriety, of purity, and cleanness of life. Think of the blessings that have come to us, inspiring in us charity for those who are less fortunate than ourselves. All the ideals and virtues that mankind has known, or will know, have been bestowed upon the members of this great Church.

NO DOUBT AS TO THE OUTCOME

We are not in doubt as to what the outcome will be. The Lord has not only said unto us, "In my Father's house are many mansions," "I go to prepare a place for you," but in the day and age in which we live the Lord has described the very places to which his children may hope to go. He has explained to us that there are various degrees of glory, has described to us certain requirements which must be complied with if we would enjoy those degrees of glory. The man who drinks with the drunken, and who lives an immoral life, and who gives himself up to evil things should not hope to go into the celestial kingdom of our heavenly Father, for the Lord has said he cannot go there. But the people of the world do not understand that. There are those who profess Christianity, who believe that even the murderer who has imbrued his hands in the blood of his innocent victim may, by saying the words, "I believe in Jesus Christ," be ushered into the presence of the Redeemer of mankind. This is false doctrine and I am thankful that this people are not deceived by such teachings, but that on the contrary we are placed in a condition to know how we may obtain the blessing of Celestial glory, and not be disappointed.

SOME CHOICE BLESSINGS THAT WE ENJOY.

I am glad that there is in this great organization a determination to sustain the laws of the land in which we live. I am grateful for this great government that our heavenly Father gave to us, for he has said that he raised up wise men to prepare for us the Constitution of this great nation, and I am thankful that he has given unto us the revelation that as long as the people of this land work righteousness, that he will be their God and their king, and that no other kings shall dwell upon this land. It is pleasing to know that this land has been consecrated to liberty, and that the way was prepared for the coming of the gospel in this great and wonderful nation.

I am thankful to know that all that is good and pure and holy, all that is sweet and that is worth while in life, may be enjoyed by the members of this Church within the folds of the Church. There has not been withheld from us one single blessing that mankind may enjoy, because of our membership in this Church. On the contrary, the Lord has taught us to be brothers and sisters in very deed, and not only has he given to us the Old Testament scriptures and the New Testament scriptures, but he has given to us the American volume of scripture that supplements the teachings of the divine mission of our Lord, and in our day has revealed to us through the Prophet Joseph Smith the doctrines that are necessary for us to observe in order that we may have the companionship of our wives and our children, our fathers and our mothers, throughout the ages of eternity.

These, my brethren and sisters, are some of the choice blessings that the Lord has bestowed upon us in this day, and I wonder if we appreciate them. All that he has asked of us in return for the fullness of the earth, all that he has asked of us in return for the blessings of this life, all that he has asked us to do in order that we may enjoy eternal life in his celestial kingdom, is to follow the simple teachings of our Lord, that he has given to the children of men, that all men may follow if they will, and while doing it, peace of mind, contentment and happiness may be theirs. The gospel of Jesus Christ is not a difficult road to follow, it is the pathway of peace, and gives assurance of the blessings of the Lord when life's labor on earth is completed. The gospel of Jesus Christ does not require us to torment ourselves with physical pain. On the contrary it teaches us that we may so live that health and vigor and strength will be ours, and that we can avoid the pains and anguish that are the result of violation of our Father's laws.

ARE WE WORTHY TO BE CALLED SAINTS?

I am grateful for that wonderful Word of Wisdom, simple as it is, and as the Lord says, "adapted to the capacity of the weak or the weakest of all who are or can be called Saints." I pause to ask this great congregation, are we worthy to be called Saints? All who hope to be called Saints should certainly be observers of the Word of Wisdom. And what does it mean to us? It gives us sweetness of life, it takes from us the poisonous vapors that many people breathe as the result of smoking tobacco. It avoids for us that nauseating condition that is the result of chewing tobacco. It preserves us, if we observe it, from the infirmities due to taking into our systems the narcotics contained in tea and coffee, and from the disastrous effects of liquor and hot and strong drink. Our heavenly Father, not only tells us what we should avoid, but tells us what we may use with profit. He has said to us that all grain, all wholesome herbs, the fruit of the vine etc., are good for man. Flesh of beast and fowls of the air; and these things he refers to we may use with prudence and thanksgiving; and, I want to emphasize with thanksgiving.

THE LORD OF LORDS OUR TEACHER

Brethren and sisters, you have had the greatest instructor that the world knows anything about. You have had for your school master the King of kings, the Lord of lords, the Creator of the heavens and the earth; who in his wonderful tenderness and consideration for us in this day, has sent his prophet into the world to explain to us, and to make clear to our minds the things that he gave to the world hundreds of years ago that have been misunderstood and have been misinterpreted very much to the detriment of our Father's children. But in our day he has renewed to us the truth, has given to us the blessed teachings that should qualify us to be men and women after his own heart, has held out to us the promise that if we will do the things that he advises our lives will be pure and holy, peace will be our portion here, and we shall dwell with him throughout the ages of eternity. What more could he give unto us, or, as has already been quoted by one of the brethren: "What more can he say than to you he has said, you who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?"

THANKFUL FOR NOBLE MEN TO REPRESENT US IN THE NATION.

I felt grateful today when one of the members of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, our great legislative body, stood here as a humble representative of the community in which he lives, as an Elder of the Church and testified of the truth, while at Washington he should radiate an influence for the uplift of every soul that he comes in contact with without being contaminated with the evils that beset mankind. He is a legislator of the greatest nation on earth, but he is more, he is a representative of our heavenly Father, with authority to officiate in the ordinances of the gospel of our Lord for the blessing of mankind. I am grateful for him and his brethren who are there with him. I am thankful that by reason of faith and good works we see men rising from the ranks, year after year, to stand in high places in our government, not to tear it down, not to break in pieces the structures that have been reared by others, but to show where the better way lies, to say to the children of men who are crying out for a change, and who are not satisfied with conditions: Let us legislate that we may all live in peace in the land and that we all may enjoy the blessings of the Lord while we live upon the earth.

LET US NOT CHANGE OUR BLESSINGS FOR FOOLISH ATTRACTIONS.

My brethren and sisters, I am thankful for my membership in this Church. I am grateful to be permitted to have the companionship of my brethren and sisters. I prize my citizenship in this great nation, and from the depths of my soul I am thankful that my lot has been cast with you. This great government was established by our Father, this land was prepared by him, and the particular part of it that is inhabited by the Latter-day Saints has been beautified until the eyes of the world are turned towards us, because of the picturesque and the grandeur of the home that the Lord has prepared for us. He has blessed us with all this and with every comfort, with the loving companionship and association of wives and husbands and parents and children and the presidency of the Priesthood of our Lord. Let us not be blinded by the cunning of the adversary to exchange any of these wonderful gifts for the foolishness that attracts mankind, for the pitfalls that have been prepared by the enemy of all righteousness. This is our Father's work, this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, it is the power of God unto salvation to all those who believe and obey it, and I pray that we who are here this day, may return to our homes with renewed determination to be loyal and faithful to those things that are righteous, and that we will live to honor him who gives all we enjoy, and who offers us the blessings of eternal life, eternal progress, eternal increase in his celestial kingdom. May the Lord help us to merit his blessings, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER REED SMOOT

No person who has attended the sessions of this conference is more thankful to our heavenly Father than am I. I want you, brethren and sisters, to know that whenever one of the general conferences is held, and I am unable to attend, I feel greatly the loss of it. I constantly pray to my heavenly Father that, on account of conditions that prevent me from attending the conferences, I may partake of the same spirit that is manifested through all of the speakers when I have the privilege of reading the reports.

APPRECIATION OF CONFERENCE AND THE SPEAKERS.

In standing before you this day I crave the assistance of my heavenly Father in what I may say at this conference. I trust that I may have the same degree of his spirit that has been enjoyed by all the former speakers. I have never attended conference where the testimonies had such an effect upon me, beginning with that of the President of the Church and continuing with every speaker that followed him. My soul and spirit said: "Amen" to the many truths uttered, and to the testimonies borne. I have heard President Grant bear his testimony to his knowledge of this gospel many times. I have heard him speak since he has been President of the Church, but never in my life have I been impressed with the power that he exercises, through the gift of God, as in his opening address at this conference. As President Penrose stood upon this stand, a servant who has declared the truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ for seventy-two years, I believe, even before any of the other General Authorities of the Church were born, and with the power that he exercised, granted to him by God; and the truths that were uttered rang through my soul, and I thanked God for such men.

CONDITIONS IN THE CHRISTIAN WORLD

Much has been said at this conference as to the conditions existing in the world, based upon the predictions of the prophets of the living God. It called to my attention the fact that on July 27, this year, Brother John A. Widtsoe and I were in Sweden, and at that time the great Baptist congress or conference of the Baptist churches in all the world was held there, and an account of the meetings held upon that day was cabled to the New York Times. I am going to take the time now to read from the New York Times of July 28, this year, a report of that particular meeting. It is dated, Stockholm, July 27:

"The Christian church has no message today for a dying world. As a matter of fact, the Christian church is preaching many gospels, and the result is confusion and failure," said the Reverend Doctor Curtis Lee Laws, of Brooklyn, in addressing the Baptist World Alliance here today. "Audiences are being rent asunder today," he said, "and those who have long been brethren are in warring camps contending, not only over non-essentials, but also over the very fundamental principles of Christianity. If this theological war is fought to a finish," he said, "at least the present generation will perish for lack of vision. Believing in the sincerity and high moral character of these theologians, I beg of them, in the name of Christ and perishing humanity, that they will quietly and lovingly gather about the table with God's book before them and let them settle every disputed question. That book is the ultimate ground for authority."

A MESSAGE FOR THE WORLD

I might add, my brethren and sisters, that there is a message in the world today for all its peoples. God has revealed to his servants the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It was given through his servants, as a message to the world, and humble as our missionaries may be in presenting that message to the world, dying, as the minister has already said, for want of a message, if it were heeded by the world today, existing conditions could not be as they are. It is true that there is a suffering world, it is true that there are dissensions among all the sects of the world, it was true when God spoke to the Prophet Joseph, calling his particular attention to it, and it will be true until the world accepts the message that God has given in this last dispensation of the fulness of time. Ridicule, my brethren and sisters, is not going to change that message, and the mere fact that someone says that in this enlightened age, the people of this dispensation, in this day of understanding and enlightenment, will never believe that the Angel Moroni appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and that he did deliver the golden plates to him, just as the Prophet testified.

THE PROBABILITY OF ITS TRUTH

Mere ridicule of such a statement does not make it untrue. Is it any more difficult to believe that an angel from heaven did just as the Prophet Joseph stated, deliver those plates to him and usher in the gospel of Jesus Christ, as practically every prophet in every dispensation has predicted—is it any more difficult to believe that than for the world's Christian people to believe the Bible? Isn't it just as probable, if they want to use that word, as when Moses is credited with the power conferred upon him by God, to have the waters of the Red Sea divide and the people of Israel go across dry-shod, is there any more mystery about one than there is about the other? If God's power with Elijah could enable him to stand upon the banks of the Jordan and smite the waters of the river and cause them to divide hither and thither, and he cross over dry-shod, isn't it just as probable, even to a skeptic, that the truth, as delivered by the Prophet Joseph Smith, is as it occurred? There are too many recitals of incidents in the Bible that are much more miraculous than the fact that an angel from heaven showed to the boy prophet where the records were concealed.

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHER

Together with Brother Widtsoe I had the privilege of visiting Europe during the months of July and August. While thus upon a special mission, and by the assistance of Brother Widtsoe, I had the privilege of visiting the Scandinavian countries. I also took the time during my last visit to go there, primarily, I will say, to visit my mother's old home. While a young man I used to say to mother: "Some day we will go back to the old home." I left it too late, as so many things are put off until it is too late; for my mother died when she was sixty years old. But I made up my mind that sooner or later I would go to the old home and see some of my relatives there. I haven't the time today to express to you the feelings I had when I stood upon the very spot where she was born, and when I saw the old homestead as it was. When I went into the old cow-shed and opened the old door that she had opened perhaps hundreds and hundreds of times, when I looked upon the spring back of the house, that I had heard her speak of when I was a boy and, as I stood under the shade of that wonderful tree her mother had planted and which she used to tell me about; and as I saw conditions surrounding that homestead, I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, I thanked God from the bottom of my heart that the gospel of Jesus Christ reached my mother, and that she knew it was true, when she was but a girl. All opposition and all persecution on the part of her father and her mother and her loved ones never had one iota of influence upon her testimony that God lived and that Jesus is the Christ.

A YOUNG CONVERT'S TELLING TESTIMONY

My cousins brought to me the old family Bible, and as I lifted the lid I saw a writing and at the bottom of the last page of it the name "Anna Kirstine Mauritz-datter." I could not read the writing, but I asked Brother Widtsoc to copy it as quickly as possible, then tell me what was in it. I desired to have it translated word for word. It was a message to her parents written on the day that she left home—the day she was driven from home by a loving father and mother who thought that she would not be gone very long, but that she would soon return and ask forgiveness, and deny that she knew that God lived and that Jesus is the Christ. She was only a girl, then, but I am going to take time now to read to this congregation, that letter, because it gives forth the spirit that makes women such as she. It is filled full of the spirit of our fathers and mothers who were willing to sacrifice all in this world for the gospel's sake; aye, it is the spirit of a missionary, teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. This was written in her own hand-writing, and it was the last farewell of a girl who loved her country, who loved her father and mother, and who loved her home, but who loved the gospel of Jesus Christ more:

"A few words from your daughter Kirstine, Dear, my parents: Pray God for courage to accept this great truth contained in this book and now restored, so that rejected knowledge may not be a testimony against you on God's great day to come. I pray God that on that great day we may be able to gather together in joy and happiness, and that we may then be crowned to God's glory, and that he may say to us all: 'Come now, my faithful children, you shall be rewarded for your labors.' This matter, and my desire that you may know the truth and accept it, have made me shed in secret many burning tears, and they have been increased when I have thought of the ungodliness of mankind. The years are speeding on, the day is approaching when all must listen to the Shepherd and render obedience to his will, or receive punishment. The great King is coming to reign and to rule. Sin and evil will be banished. May God grant that you may be among the worthy ones. My heart grows tender when I think of these things. God give that all mankind may repent. I shall pray to my heavenly Father that all who read these lines may comprehend the true purpose of his holy book, and may lay down the burden of sin. That which I have written is for all who may read these lines. I pray God to lead you into eternal life.

NOT ASHAMED ANYWHERE OF THE RESTORED GOSPEL OF CHRIST

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ; I am not ashamed of the testimony of the mother that gave me birth. I care not where I go upon the face of the earth, whether it be with kings, potentates, or any class of people in the world, I want them all to know that I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I pray God that I may have strength to do those things that he wants me to do, to say those things that he wants me to say, to live in a way that he wants me to live, and bear a testimony of his truth and of his work, that will be worthy of a man who comes from a mother such as I had.

THE BURDEN OF WAR THE RESULT OF THE BURDEN OF SIN

Yes, the burden of sin today, the cause of the World war, and the resulting burdens of debt, are on the backs of the people of Europe, and if they are fortunate enough to live, and if there is peace in the world for another hundred years, they will not entirely remove the burdens that have been placed upon them as a result of the world war.

Let me cite you a case: Take England, with her forty-five millions of people. I mean Great Britain and Ireland, not all of her colonies nor any of them. What do we find? Forty-five millions of people carrying a burden of over eight hundred dollars for every man, woman and child. We find the average tax imposed upon them equal to one hundred and two dollars every year, for every man, woman and child. We find that the costs of the last war, to England, were more than the maintaining of the British government for two hundred and twenty-six years, including all former wars. We find hardly a home in all England but what there came, through that war, the death of one or more of the family. We find unrest even there, and I want to say now to the good people here that I pray God that the time never will come when the English speaking peoples of the world will become enemies. I never want to see a conflict between England and America; for if it ever comes, just as surely as God lives, the English speaking peoples of the world will not thereafter control the destinies of the world.

WORLD CAN BE SAVED ONLY BY A KNOWLEDGE OF GOD AND THE USE OF COMMON SENSE

I have started, my brethren and sisters, upon a subject that will take too much time. I bear you my testimony that this is the work of God, and the only thing, it seems to me, that will save the world today is to acknowledge God and use good common sense. I hope and trust that the members of the Church will be even more willing to serve God than they have been in the past. Look to your homes, my brethren and sisters. See that the home is made the place where all in it will thank God for his many mercies, and are willing to acknowledge his hand in all things. May God bless not only our people here, but bless all the peoples of the world, and, as we often pray, hasten the day when Zion shall be redeemed, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

(President of the Central States Mission.)

I do not know that I have ever attended a conference when I have felt more of the Spirit of the Lord and the power of testimony than in this conference; and I trust that I may enjoy a continuation of God's Holy Spirit and be led to say that which he would have me say at this time.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is growing and will continue to grow until it fills the earth. Daniel, a prophet of God, made such a prediction, and it will not fail for God's word has never failed. Men have failed but his word has never failed, neither has the word of his servants. Wicked men, for periods of time, have prevented his power from growing in the earth, but when opportunity has come and when it has been expedient, he has restored it again. This power he gave unto Adam and it has been in the earth whenever his authority has been in the earth in the different dispensations of the gospel. The strength of the Church, it has been said, does not lie in its numbers, or in its wealth, or even in its educational work, but it is vested in the principles of the gospel which the Lord our God has revealed.

We are accounted a strange people and a peculiar people by some, and it is true, in a way, that we are. Our belief separates us from the rest of the world gathered together in the great churches of the day. As they meet to worship our Father, they are taught doctrines that are not in harmony with the gospel as the Lord gave it unto Adam, Noah, and Abraham and unto all who represented him in the earth before the Christ, and as he restored it in the dispensation of the fulness of times. Think of the millions of people called Christians who today are worshipping a Father without body or parts or passions and who sits on the top of a topless throne—something that really could not be; yet men and women enlightened by the theology of men and by the science of the earth believe that their Father and your Father and mine is without a body and without form. They believe also that they had their beginning here. Go where you may you will find few if any public speakers in any of the churches of the day who teach the ante-mortal state of man. They do not believe in preexistence. They believe that Christ existed before but that man had his beginning here. They believe that a man's life here is the end of his opportunity to work, that the Lord has provided a way for him and all he has to do is to acknowledge the Christ and be saved regardless of the life that he has lived.

It is no wonder that mere boys and girls who are sent into the world, can "hold their own" with the great leading minds of the country who study the scripture for their guide. These missionaries have the truth, the power of truth. The fact that a man is on the right side and has the right to operate and to stand for the Redeemer of the world makes him strong. It is no wonder that boys in the missionary field can hold meetings night after night, occupying one and two hours at a time, preaching to the congregations of the world the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is not to be wondered at, when we know that they have the truth.

The things that our missionaries accomplish are almost miracles. During the past summer, in the Central States Mission, two of our missionaries, and one of them with only a few months' experience, have held as many as ten meetings, night after night. The same congregation of people came again and again to hear them discuss the principles of revealed religion: that God who sits enthroned in yonder heavens is an immortal Being who has a body of flesh and bone and that we are his children, fashioned and made after him; that we lived before we came into this world; that we did not come here as a matter of chance but that we came here according to appointment; that some were leaders, some were followers, some were men of faith; that this time that is allotted unto men here in the great school called life is but preparatory for the future which surely must come to every son and every daughter of our Father in heaven; that to those who have not had the privilege of receiving the gospel of the living God in mortality, shall be given a chance in the hereafter.

These are only a few of the things that God has revealed which make life of interest and worth while, which cause men and women to say to themselves: I believe the voice of that young man or that young woman; the logic appeals to me. I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, that the world is filled with honorable men and honorable women, if we could only reach them. It takes time to change them, it is true, because they have lived believing they are right. They ought not to be condemned; God will not condemn them until he gives them a chance. That is why we are here today. That is why this Church lives. That is why the work of God will grow. Our Father will give his children a chance. He gives his missionaries opportunities. He is by their side. If the veil could only be lifted, we could see that his representatives are with them in the earth. It is not the power of man they possess, but the power of the eternal God, because they are only acting in his name. They are his agents, his representatives sent into the world in this day to give the people a chance to be redeemed.

The strength of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is vested in the truth which God has revealed. Men need only be willing to serve him, and by his power miracles are wrought from the pulpits. By his power miracles are wrought through the laying on of hands, through the speaking in tongues, through the logic given unto his children unto the convincing of the honest in heart that he lives and that the world is not without him, that his Priesthood is here in the earth, and that the authority to act in his name is here.

May God give the Latter-day Saints the power to continue to educate their children, whom they hold in trust for him, so that the Lord may be able to use them for the glorifying of his name, through his Son who died that we might live, I pray in the name of Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

(President of the Southern States Mission.)

When the president of the Church was speaking yesterday morning, the feelings of that vast congregation were such as were described by the two disciples who walked with Jesus after his resurrection.

They said: "Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?" And our hearts burned with the fire of the Spirit which has been rekindled and renewed by President Penrose and the rest of the speakers as we have listened to the message of life and salvation they have delivered.

This Church, I boldly proclaim and devoutly believe, has blessed the United States of America and all the world by its existence and by the doctrines it has taught. It has given to this nation especially, and to the world a treasure-house of scripture. I refer to the sacred Nephite record, the Book of Mormon. Let us take from this treasure-house one or two of the gems of truth. One of these gems is as follows:

"And there was not any man who could do a miracle in the name of Jesus, save he were cleansed every whit from his iniquity." (III Nephi 8:3.)

Isn't this a clarion call to purity of life? The cleaner our lives, the purer our thoughts, the greater will be our power, by the prayer of faith, to heal those who are afflicted with bodily ills. It is the truth that the many mighty miracles that Jesus the Redeemer wrought was due to the fact that he lived so close to the Father, lived so perfectly the celestial laws of God, that unto him was given that superhuman power.

Another truth: God said: "For my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be until the end of man, neither from that time hence forth and forever."

"The works of God continue, and worlds and lives abound; improvement and progression have one eternal round."

Over the portals of the prison house which God hath prepared for the sinners, the sectarian world has written this inscription: "Abandon hope all who enter here." But the Church of Jesus Christ has written above the entrance: "Prisoners of hope;" for God's mercy endureth forever, and shall reach the penitent and repentant when wrongs have been fully expiated for, even to the uttermost farthing.

Again, in the world today, who are denying the divinity of Jesus Christ, and also his resurrection? Some of the very people who have brazenly declared that this Church is not a Christian Church. Go to that splendid book of Mosiah and read the soul stirring testimony therein concerning the atonement of Jesus Christ, delivered by Abinadi, who sealed his testimony with his blood and suffered death by fire for daring to proclaim that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and through his atonement came forgiveness of sins and a redemption from the grave.

These are some of the gems from the treasure-house of scripture that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have given to the world; and I glory in and am thankful to God for the comfort and instruction in that book. It is true that many of the learned are denying the divinity of Jesus Christ. To be learned is good, says the Book of Mormon, if they hearken unto the counsels of God; when scholarship is made tributary to the truth of God, then blessed is he who uses his powers of learning in promulgating that truth. It was the common people who heard Jesus gladly. These ministers who arise in the pulpit and deny Christ's divinity and resurrection, are under the condemnation of the Redeemer who said: "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." The words which deny the divinity of the Redeemer are idle words and shall have to be accounted for in the day of the great judgment.

I bear you my testimony that this gospel is true and of God. It is the power of God unto salvation, because through the gospel have come to light, life and immortality, and Jesus Christ hath abolished death and brought redemption from sin, death and the grave. I bear my humble testimony that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God; and that President Grant stands in the power and right of his calling as President of the Church; and oh, how blessed are we who listened to his inspiring teachings yesterday morning, when to every heart was brought home the great truth that he is favored of God and magnified in his calling as President of this Church and the leader of this great people. This testimony I bear in humility, in truth, and in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

CLERK OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

Edward H. Anderson

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I wish to say that I have been very gratified indeed with our meetings here today. I feel that the Lord has abundantly blessed us in our gatherings and that we have had a rich outpouring of his Holy Spirit.

I regret exceedingly that we have to limit our brethren to a very few minutes when they speak here. There is hardly one of the brethren who has stood upon his feet but what, I am sure, could edify this congregation for an hour or more if the opportunity were presented; but if you stop to think of the fact that there are twenty-six of the general authorities, and that we are anxious to hear from the mission presidents and from as many stake presidents as we possibly can, you will realize that we can only barely have testimonies borne by most of the brethren in these conference meetings.

The congregation sang "High on the mountain top," and the closing prayer was offered by Elder Wallace Calder, president of the Uintah stake of Zion.

The meeting adjourned until Sunday morning, 10 o'clock.

THIRD DAY

MORNING SESSION

Sunday, October 7, 1923.

At 10 o'clock President Heber J. Grant announced the opening of the conference meeting. All the seats in the Tabernacle were occupied and every available standing space in the building, while many were unable to get in. An amplifying device had been arranged so that the large congregation assembled at the Bureau of Information and also in the Barratt Hall were able to hear the speakers in the Tabernacle. In the Assembly Hall, at which an overflow meeting was held, under the direction of Bishop David A. Smith, separate speakers were provided.

Prayer was offered by Elder Heber S. Allen, of the Taylor stake of Zion.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I regret to say that Brother Whitney's health is of such character that he has not been able to be with us during our conference, so far, and he feels that he cannot come this morning nor this afternoon. I am pleased to inform you, however, that his health has very greatly improved, during the past six months, and that he is again able occasionally, in fact nearly always, to meet with us once a week in the temple in the regular council meeting of the Presidency, the Apostles and the Patriarch. But considering the state of his nerves at the present time, he does not feel that it is wisdom to be here and mingle with a large crowd. He is with us in spirit and we hope and pray that he may be here in vigor of body and mind six months from today.

The choir sang, "I saw a mighty angel fly."

ELDER RUDGER CLAWSON

Like Elder George F. Richards, I am very thankful this morning for these amplifiers, for, like him, I am suffering from a cold which somewhat affects my voice.

TRUE AND FALSE EVOLUTION.

A gentleman said to me some time ago: "Do you believe in evolution?"

I said, "Yes sir, I do." And then I said, "You will remember that there are two views of this question of evolution, one bears upon true evolution and the other bears upon what I call false evolution." And I called his attention to the fact that the scriptures tell us—we find it in the first chapter of Genesis—that God created animals after their kind—that of man and that of animal—and it is set forth beautifully in these words:

"And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

"And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so.

"And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness;" [and we might add: after our kind], "and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

"So God created man in his own image," [and we might add: after his kind] "in the image of God created he him: male and female created he them."

ONE KIND OF ANIMAL NEVER CHANGES INTO ANOTHER KIND.

And so I remarked that following this test and this view set forth by the scriptures, one kind of animal never changes into another kind, that an elephant never changes into a man, because if he did there would be a tremendous reduction of avoirdupois, and as a matter of fact he does not. Neither is a mouse changed into a giraffe. But I did remark that animals might be improved after their kind and along their line, as we know to be the case. And then I added also, that man may be improved along his own line by education, by study and reflection and by worship of the God of heaven.

TESTIFYING IN SONG AND SERMON THAT JOSEPH SMITH IS A PROPHET OF GOD.

I was thrilled with the opening song this morning. It was wonderful that a great congregation of people, numbering thousands, should be testifying in song that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; and mark you, they have been singing that song into their lives and into the hearts of their children for many years. I have also rejoiced, oh, how much, in the testimonies of this congregation, in the remarks of our President and the brethren who have spoken. And let me remind you, brethren and sisters, that on Friday night there was a great body of men gathered in this tabernacle—nineteen hundred and forty-five filled the auditorium of the tabernacle—and these men, these solemn, earnest, and determined men, consisting of the Presidency and other general authorities of the Church—high-priests, seventies, elders, bishops and members of the Lesser Priesthood—represented and stood for divine authority. Oh, how thankful I am that all of the authority of God pertaining to his work does not rest upon the President of the Church, who is the prophet. He carries a great responsibility, let me tell you, in holding the keys, and by these keys this divine authority is distributed down through the Church, and rests upon all the male members of the Church. God is no respecter of persons, because this glorious authority and blessing even reaches to the women of the Church, for they will share and do share, in this divine authority through their husbands, which emphasizes most powerfully the great principle of marriage for time and marriage for eternity, because this divine authority not only comes to us upon earth, but goes with us into eternity.

CHURCH GOING FORWARD WITH INCREASING TEMPORAL AND SPIRITUAL POWER.

It seems to me, brethren and sisters, after one hundred years, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in which is involved the kingdom of God, shows forth great strength in spirituality and increasing temporal power. If it were all spiritual, the Church would be top-heavy. If it were all temporal, the Church would be top-heavy: but the spiritual and the temporal are fitly joined together by a dividing line that is invisible—you cannot see it but you know it is there—the spiritual merges into the temporal, the temporal merges into the spiritual, and thus the Church of God is established and will be built up on the earth.

And now you know, brethren and sisters, why we have to do temporal things as well as spiritual things. Some people find fault with this and they think the leaders of the Church ought not to be interested in temporal things. Well, if they were not interested in temporal things the Church of God could not continue, would not be built up. So I rejoice in the temporal as well as in the spiritual. Think of the great things that have been accomplished already, spiritually and temporally. Look at these great temples of God that are temporal and material in part, but they represent to us great spiritual blessings, because I fancy we could not rise to glory and exaltation without the blessings imparted unto us in the temples of God. There you see the temporal and the spiritual fitly joined together.

TESTIMONY.

Now, my brethren and sisters, I glory in these things. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I know it throughout my whole being. My soul responds to this testimony, and I know and rejoice in the fact that whatever of Priesthood and authority I enjoy and am able to exercise have come down to me from the Lord through Joseph Smith the Prophet. Oh, how I do revere the memory of that man. I do not worship him. No, I do not worship him, but I reverence his good name, and I reverence the authority that he held and exercised, and I reverence the authority that is held by one of his successors, our present leader, President Heber J. Grant. I sustain him with all my heart as the prophet, seer and revelator and the president of the Church. Oh, how sweet to me is the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, because if he was not the Christ, if his blood was not shed for the sins of the world, his Church would not be, and could not exist in the earth. This is the testimony I bear and the testimony that I leave with you. I pray God's blessing upon you, brethren and sisters, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS

(Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Eastern States Mission.)

Recalling the remarks of Elder Reed Smoot made yesterday, respecting the sacrifices and the burdens England incurred in the World War, I wish to say that I was very proud of England, the land of my birth, because I could not help but remember that England made those sacrifices, and took upon herself those great burdens of debt, not because of any iniquity on her part, but because she was determined that international obligations and treaties should be something more than mere "scraps of paper." Also I could not but remember that when she went to the side of Belgium and France, she did so in the interest of world-freedom, and against and to destroy the menace of autocracy, which endangered the freedom of the world. Also I could not help but remember that our own burdens in the same great war were made comparatively light because England's burden had been made so heavy. My heart was moved with great sympathy for England by these reflections, and I pray that, under the blessings of Almighty God, she may be relieved of those great burdens assumed in this great cause of human freedom as against autocracy, something before a hundred years shall elapse. You will pardon me, but I thought it was due that this much at least should be said in the extension of what was said yesterday, since just at this particular junction our shores are being visited by England's great war Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George. I am sure, however, you will not expect me to say anything further upon this subject; but you will most likely expect me to make some reference, in the nature of a report, concerning the Eastern States mission, and our summer campaign in that mission.

Our mission comprises the most densely populated territory within the United States. It extends from Maine to Maryland and West Virginia. It is the industrial, commercial, financial, and manufacturing district preeminent of the United States. Its population is equal to the population of the whole of the United States, nearly, at the time our Church was organized. During the last six months we have had a varying number of missionaries, from one hundred and thirty to one hundred and forty in the field. This force constitutes an irregular and here and there broken line of workers, extending through the twelve states that comprize the mission. You can well understand that our numbers are very insignificant for so great a field of labor. We have less than five thousand as a membership of our Church, in that great mass of people, a very little leaven indeed to leaven so large a lump of territory and of population. Yet I am happy to report that the workers of this thin, long line are extremely faithful and devoted to the work in which they are engaged.

MISSION MOTTO

One of the mottoes by which they are guided in maintaining their spiri ual uplift is—

"A mission in the Eastern States means absolute consecration of one's self to the service of God and fellow men; with all light-mindedness, folly and sin eliminated."

We recognize absolutely the great doctrine of the Christ, expressed in these terms: "Without me ye can do nothing." And so, as a word of good cheer to each other to be spoken in moments of sensed weakness or hesitance, we say to each other: "Immanuel!" which, being in erpreted is, "God with us." And if God be with us, we shall not and cannot fail.

These are principles that actuate your sons and daughters who are performing missionary work in the Eastern States. Our faith is in God; our trust is in him; we realize that he is the source of wisdom and of power, and that if he does not sustain this work; if he does not magnify it in the eyes of men, and does not give us the ability to set forth the great message that he has committed to his Church in the earth, then we can do nothing.

THE SUMMER'S CAMPAIGN

The outstanding feature of our work during the last six months has been the summer campaign, commenced on the 15th day of May, the ninety-fourth anniversary of the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood to the earth, the first divine authority officially communicated to man in this dispensation of the fulness of times. There was a reconsecration of our missionaries in the Eastern States that day to the work of the Lord. We had abandoned our lodgings, the elders took in their small grips all their earthly possessions, a little clothing and a few books, in a way burned their bridges behind them, and went out trusting in God to open the way for food and raiment and lodging. I think very likely if I had not myself had some experience in this kind of work, and had not learned how God can and will open the doors of deliverance for his servants, supplement their efforts by his own powerful aid, I should not have dared to put your sons and daughters to this great test of faith and patience and endurance. But recalling the providences of God to me in the early days of my own missionary experience, I did not hesitate to put them to the test, and the result has been glorious. They were not left to themselves; God abundantly opened doors to them. While they went out seeking disciples, they themselves in many, many cases, found God. They also found disciples, and it is a matter that greatly encourages me that we found so many of God's disciples in the Eastern States mission. He has caused it to be written in one of his revelations that "whosoever receiveth God's servants, that clothes them or feeds them, or gives them money, the same is his disciple, and by this we know God's disciples." (Doc. and Cov. Sec. 84:87-91). And we found many disciples. I kept in close touch with the development of this work. Through the kindness of one of the brethren in the mission, I had placed at my disposal an automobile. We found a chauffeur, among the elders, and so I visited many of the missionaries out in their fields of labor, where they were traveling, two and two. I joined with them in the rural meetings that they were holding, and witnessed their sublime effort at fulfilling the duties and obligations as servants of God, right in the field. So, throughout the summer I watched the development of this experiment of preaching the gospel, trusting in the Lord to open the way.

THE CONFERENCE AT CUMORAH

This summer campaign of four months was to culminate in the conference that we held at Cumorah, a fitting climax, I thought it would be, to the splendid labors of the missionaries in our Eastern States mission. I trust it turned out to be a great conference. There was one thing said about it in the Rochester Herald that I would like to put in the record of this conference, that it might have a permanent lodgment in the history of that event. It was written by no tyro of the press, but a man of comprehension, and I think also of deep feeling. It consists of but two brief paragraphs but the passage is of high value as an historical note. It is found in the Rochester Herald of Sept. 22, 1923, and is as follows:

"Unfolding like some graphic panorama of the past, epic in implications and dramatic in content, the story of an ancient civilization that peopled the plains and hills in this vicinity was the chief topic of discussion before the centennial conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints today. Reaching so far back into the dim yesterdays of history, back to days more than 2,500 years ago, this story came with a strange emphasis in the very places where its climaxes and denouements are supposed to have been reached. The narrative is the very basis of 'Mormon' theology and belief and leads directly up to the revelation given through Joseph Smith of the foundations of the 'Mormon' Church.

"The speakers at the conference told the story with the simplicity and directness of a Norse saga. As point after point of drama of the lost tribes, of their rise to a great civilization and of their final downfall in the bitterness of war was related, those not conversant with the tale were gripped and fascinated by the strangeness of the recital, and when a speaker dramatically pointed to the earth and mentioned that upon the very spot where he stood some of the epic events might have taken place, there was a decided thrill to being there."

We tried to so arrange the program of the conference that we should live again in the places and near places where the chief events took place in which the Church of the Latter-day Saints had its origin—we tried, I say, to live again, so far as we could in story and testimony and song, through the great epic events that resulted in the creation of this latter-day work. It is unnecessary for me to recount the visitation of angels and the revelations in which the work had its origin. You are familiar with them all.

THE MESSAGES OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

There is just one other thing, however—nay, perhaps two, that I want to call your attention to. The great outstanding thing in the Book of Mormon is the fact of the visit of the Redeemer to the inhabitants of this western world, and the message of life and salvation that he delivered here; the Church which he brought into existence, the divine authority which he established here in the western world. This is what makes the Book of Mormon of so much importance—it is a new witness for God and Christ and the truth of the gospel. These things being true, makes the advent of the Book of Mormon into the world the greatest literary event of the world since the writing of the Decalogue by the finger of God, and bringing it forth by the great Prophet Moses; or the collection and the publication of the testimony in the New Testament that Jesus is the Christ; that he is the resurrection and the life of men; the greatest event since the recording of the Sermon on the Mount, or the summary of the law by Christ: for the Book of Mormon is supplemental to all this, the necessary part to a consistent whole which manifests the mercy and the justice of God in providing these great things of the gospel for the men of the Western world, as well as to men in the Eastern world.

The other thing referred to is this: The Book of Mormon contains a wonderful message to the great Gentile nation—the United States of America—whose rise and supremacy it predicts. If you go no further back than 1830, when the Book of Mormon was brought to the knowledge of the world, it remains one of the mightiest prophecies that is of record—this prophecy of the rise of a great Gentile nation, upon this land of America. Here and there also we catch glimpses of the fact that the inspired men whom God raised up to found this nation, and whom God also raised up to preserve it by their wise counsels—here and there, I say, we get glimpses of the fact that God has inspired their minds to understand the great principles upon which this nation of ours may maintain its pride of place in this Western world, and in the whole world. For instance, in his very last public address, made before the Historical Society of New York, in 1852, Daniel Webster said:

“Let me say, gentlemen, that if we and our posterity shall be true to the Christian religion, if we and they shall live always in the fear of God, and shall respect his commandments, if we and they shall maintain just, moral sentiments and such righteous convictions of duty as shall con-tro! the heart and life, we may have the highest hopes of the future fortunes of our country; but if we and our posterity reject religious instruction and authority, violate the rules of eternal justice, trifle with the injunctions of morality, and recklessly destroy the political constitution which holds us together, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us that shall bury all our glory in profound obscurity."

And recently, in the Atlantic Monthly, for August of this year, one of the foremost statesmen in these modern times, in a very brief article, more widely read I think, and more largely commented upon, than any other utterance that has been made of late, said this, when treating of the subject: "The Road Away from Revolution." Mr. Wilson, Ex-president of the United States, for it was he who wrote the article referred to, said:

"The sum of the whole matter is this: that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually. It can be saved only by becoming permeated with the spirit of Christ, and being made free and happy by the practices which spring out of that spirit.

Only thus can the discontent be driven out, and all the shadows lifted from the road ahead."

But before Mr. Webster made this utterance of warning, and long before President Wilson uttered these sublime words of warning to the American Nation, the Book of Mormon, ages ago, but brought forth into the world in 1830, contains this message from God in respect of all this spoken by Webster and by Mr. Wilson:—

"Behold, this is a choice land, [referring to America] and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ, who hath been manifested by the things which we have written."

Such are the two great messages of the Book of Mormon revealed now some hundred years ago, and they constitute the sublimest message ever delivered to the world, because the witnesses whose words are within the book, testify of the Christ and of the truth of the gospel, of the eternal life of man and his power to become indeed, not only the sons of God, but the glorified sons of God: and also because it gives to us a sublime message for the great Gentile nation of this land, telling them the conditions upon which they may continue to enjoy the favor and blessing of God, and maintain their place and power for good in the world.

God has made his Church—this Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—his herald to the world concerning these things. May the Lord make us equal to so great a mission, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang, "An angel from on high," solos by Sister Sarah Wood and Hyrum Christensen. This hymn was sung on the Hill Cumorah recently on the occasion of the hundredth anniversary of the visits of the Angel Moroni to the Prophet Joseph Smith. On the present occasion only three of the verses were sung. President Heber J. Grant read the remainder of the words as follows:

The time is now fulfilled,
The long expected day;
Let earth obedient yield,
And darkness flee away;
Remove the seals, be wide unfurled
Its light and glory to the world.

Lo, Israel filled with joy,
Shall now be gathered home,
Their wealth and power employ
To build Jerusalem;
While Zion shall arise and shine;
And fill the earth with truth divine.

Words by Parley P. Pratt.

ELDER SERGE F. BALLIF

(Former President of the Swiss-German Mission.)

My beloved brethren and sisters, I can assure you that my heart and soul have been touched to their very depths with the things we have heard during this conference.

We are here assembled in answer to prayer one hundred years ago, when that boy prophet went into the woods and called upon God. I want to testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that I know beyond all question of doubt that God the Father and Jesus the Redeemer of the world appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith and spoke to him in distinct and clear tones in answer to his question: "Which of all the religions in the world is correct?" The answer came, without a doubt: "They are all wrong," and these words resound throughout the ends of the earth today—that all the other Christian denominations are wrong; they are founded upon a false foundation.

I rejoiced in our first session of this splendid conference, when I heard our president relate the experiences of the past six months, when he told of his dedicating the temple at Cardston. He also related his attendance at a conference in Rotterdam. It was my pleasure to be in attendance at that conference, and at that time I said that I never before had felt the Spirit of the Lord in such power manifested as it was at that time. It was also my good pleasure to be called by the president to attend the conference at Bradford, in England, to which he has made reference, and there again we heard some wonderful testimonies which made an impression upon my soul, which never can be eradicated. I also had the pleasure of accompanying our president through Germany, through Norway, Sweden, and Denmark; and I also had the pleasure of once being in a room with him at one o'clock in the morning. He called me in, and he took a newspaper and read from it in the light of the midnight sun. And I have thought: O, what a joy it would have been to me could I have attended that service at Cardston—the dedication of that temple. We have heard that a number of the leading authorities of the Church were present and men from all parts of the Church gathered at that most wonderful gathering. There were the presidency, the prophet who holds the keys, the only man upon the earth who holds the keys and the powers to commune with God for the good and for the advancement of his people here upon the earth. Those keys were conferred upon him when he met there to dedicate that temple. There were not alone these men, living here in the flesh, but I have felt, deep down in my soul, that that great man, our prophet and president, Joseph F. Smith, the great leader Brigham Young, and the Prophet Joseph Smith were present in spirit. Why? Because they are not alone interested in the work of the living here upon the earth, but they know the conditions on the other side, they know that there are thousands who are waiting for the ordinances that will be performed in that sacred temple. The doors will be unlocked and they will be made free through its ordinances. It must have been a grand and glorious vision and sight to see.

In speaking of the services to which President Roberts has referred, this morning, at the Hill Cumorah, I thought when our president said that the prayer offered on that occasion was not recorded, that we are making history today for the unborn generations, and a servant of the Lord, under the inspiration of God, uttered a prayer inspired of Almighty God, and oh, what a joy it would be for generations to come to be able to read that divine instrument. I know, although I did not see the Angel Moroni when he appeared to the Prophet Joseph, that beyond all question of doubt, he did deliver those sacred records to the boy prophet, Joseph Smith. I received a testimony of this before I was born. My mother received the gospel in her native land, and when she passed through the shadows of death to bring me into this world she sealed upon me a testimony of the divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I rejoice with you, my brethren and sisters, in this great work. If the president will just permit me to do so, I would like to read something. In my meditation after the first session of the conference, these words came to me:

O, stop and tell me, Red Man,
Who are you, why you roam,
And how you get your living;
Have you no God, no home?

With stature straight and portly,
And decked in native pride,
With feathers, paints and brooches,
He willingly replied:

"I once was pleasant Ephraim,
When Jacob for me prayed;
But oh, how blessings vanish,
When man from God has strayed!

O, my brethren and sisters, those words resound in my soul! O, how unhappy, how unfortunate is man when he is left unto himself and the Spirit of God is withdrawn from him!

"Before your nation knew us,
Some thousand moons ago,
Our fathers fell in darkness,
And wandered to and fro.

"And long they lived by hunting
Instead of works and arts,
And so our race has dwindled
To idle Indian hearts.

"Yet hope within us lingers,
As if the Spirit spoke,
He'll come for your redemption,
And break your Gentile yoke.

"And all your captive brothers
From every clime shall come,
And quit their savage customs,
To live with God at home.

"Then joy will fill your bosoms,
And blessings crown our days,
To live in pure religion,
And sing our Maker's praise."

I want to say a word, my brethren and sisters, about the Swiss and German mission. I believe that it is one of the greatest missions in all the world. I believe that the blood of Israel is found in rich abundance in those lands. There are ninety millions of people in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Poland, and the borders of Russia. It has been my pleasure to travel over that land and I want to say that God has touched the hearts of those people; he has prepared them; they have gone through the burning siege of persecution; they have suffered; and I want to say that the poor people in Germany today are suffering, they are going through an ordeal that few people in the world have gone through. The rich are growing richer; but the poor, honest people, many of them, I fear, will be hungering before another year passes by. I am in touch with President Tadge, of the Swiss and German mission, a good, faithful servant of the Lord. In that mission we have thirteen conferences, and he is visiting them. He has been in very poor health for a short time, but today his health is restored and he is traveling among those conferences and increasing the numbers, and the great thing that he needs today is help. The people are ready, they are waiting for the gospel. Oh, if we could just go through that land—the borders of Russia and all through that country! Those people are impregnated with the blood of Israel. They are waiting for the message, and we are living in the last dispensation, the dispensation of the fulness of times, when God has spoken, and he has called us, and our mission is to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, to warn the world and establish his kingdom here upon the earth. Oh, my brethren, let us help these people! They are hungering and thirsting, they are traveling from sea to sea and hunting for the word of God.

I want to say just a few words about our missionaries. Those boys over there are working with all the might and strength and power they have. God qualifies and fits them for their mission. The Lord transforms them when they come into the mission field as humble elders, faithful and true to their covenants. I want to endorse the remarks of President Roberts. I know through experience, beyond the question of doubt, that the best way to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ is the way that our Maker, the lowly Master, without a place to lay his head, proclaimed his mission among his children. I am convinced that if your sons will go into the mission field, depending upon God and not upon their pocket-books, I promise you that the Lord will come to them, he will come to their rescue; he will bless them and provide them with food and with every necessity of life.

The other day I met a person here in the city and he said: "Well, it is a mighty nice thing to go out on a mission and draw a big salary and have a good time, like you have."

I want to testify to you that this is not a Church with a hired ministry. I have been in the mission-field in 1890, 1904 and 1920. I have spent twelve years of my life in the mission field, and I never have received one penny of salary, not one penny. The Lord has blessed me. He has raised up friends to minister to my wants, and I want it understood, absolutely, so far as I know, so far as I am concerned, there is no paid ministry in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. But, on the contrary, when a man goes into the mission field depending upon the Lord, he will bless him and raise up friends and give him money and clothing, all that he needs. I know it, I demonstrated it in this last mission. We had many elders there who went from month to month, depending upon the Lord to take care of them. I hope Brother Stoff is here in this house—one of our missionaries who depended upon the Lord. At one time he was called to go several hundred miles. He hadn't a penny in his pocket, and he said: How can I go and attend that conference? He did not ask me, but he went direct to the Lord, and the Lord knew his condition, and he prayed to him: "O Father, I am called to fill a mission; open the way for me." Two days passed by and no answer came to his prayer. The third day he started out. He said: I am going if I have to walk. He met a man, as he left the building, who said: "Where are you going?"

"I am going to a conference."

He put his hand in his pocket and gave him, I think, two hundred marks. It was not very much, but it was more than enough to pay his way. How did that happen? Was that a chance? Was that luck? No, there is no such thing as chance and luck. The Lord sent that man in answer to his prayer and he administered to his wants and made it possible for him to go and attend that conference. Give the Lord a chance and he will bless his servants. This is his work, and he has set his hand to accomplish it here in the earth. God bless you. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

(Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the California Mission)

I rejoice very much, my brethren and sisters, in the opportunity afforded me of being present in this great conference, and I have rejoiced, more than I expect to be able to tell, in the spirit of the conference, and in the remarkable things that have been brought forth from the servants of the Lord by the power and inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord. My heart was made glad, in the opening session, by the manifestation of the power of God, and the spirit of presidency and leadership that were so evident in the counsels and instructions that were imparted by President Heber J. Grant in his opening address. I surely felt in my soul that the Lord our God was present, that he was directing and guiding his work in keeping with the promises that have been made, both by the prophets of this dispensation, and by the prophets of the Lord from the very beginning of time. There has been sounding in my ears the declaration made, again and again, by the Lord of heaven in the revelations that were given to the prophet of this dispensation in the beginning of this work. You who are familiar with the book of Doctrine and Covenants know that many of those revelations commence with language something like this: "Behold, a marvelous and wonderful work is about to come forth among the children of men." I could not help but think, as I looked upon this vast congregation, how wonderfully the promise of the Lord has been fulfilled that was made through the mouth of his prophet, even before there was any Church organization. I take it that nowhere upon the face of the whole earth this Sabbath day is there such a gathering to worship God as we have here in this great tabernacle, to say nothing of the thousands who are gathered in other buildings upon this ground.

It seems astounding to me that men who observe the ever increasing strength of this cause cannot discern the hand of God and his power in this work of the latter times.

Many years ago, when I was laboring in the British mission, I attended upon one occasion a lecture that was delivered by Mr. Charles H. Bradlaugh. His lecture was entitled, "Is Christianity a persecuting religion?" And he told a most terrible story of the things that had been perpetrated in the name of religion. A young man in the congregation wanted to know from him if it was not an evidence of the power of God and the existence of God, that those early Christians in the meridian of time, notwithstanding the fact that the wisdom and strength of the nations were opposed to them, were preserved and made to prosper? I wondered what manner of answer could be made. I thought in my own soul: "Surely the history of those early Christians is an evidence of the protecting hand of God." I was very greatly surprised when that great intellectual giant made answer, for his answer was: "Young man, away out in the Western part of America there is a people whose history is more wonderful than anything that has ever been written of the early Christians. That people have not only been opposed by the nations of the world, but they have had to contend with the religious prejudices of all mankind, and in spite of all this opposition, they have made more wonderful advancement than was ever made by the early Christians. I speak of the 'Mormon' Church of Utah. Do you think their preservation is an evidence of the power of God?"

My brethren and sisters, I don't know what may have been in the minds of that company of men who heard that lecture, but in my own soul there was a very great degree of joy and satisfaction in the thought that when Mr. Bradlaugh, with all his intelligence, sought for a religious organization that would parallel the history of the early Christians, he had to go to my people and to my Church, and I was convinced that he singled out the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the reason that they more completely did parallel the history of the early Christians than any other religious denomination upon the face of the earth.

When I was on my last mission in Great Britain I picked up in one of the great cathedrals, a pamphlet which was headed: "Why I am a Roman Catholic." I think it would not be amiss right here to read a paragraph or two from that pamphlet. It was written by a Catholic priest:

And again, when Luther, Calvin, Henry VIII, and their followers were starting in their mad career, either the true religion was then in the world or it was not. There isn't any room for argument in relation to that declaration. Of necessity the true religion was either in the world or it was not. If it was they committed grievous crimes in making new religions to oppose it. And if the scriptures be true, that statement is just as true as the first declaration, for we can read in the scriptures of divine truth the testimony of the Apostle Paul, that "though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

So declared the ancient man of God as he was lit up by the inspiration and power of God. So that this priest was fully justified in making the statement that I have read, that if the true religion was in the world in the days of those reformers, the reformers committed a grievous sin in seeking to establish other religions in opposition to the truth.

If it was not, they were powerless to create it. It takes a Christ, not a Luther, to create a Christianity. On either supposition, therefore, Protestantism is not the true religion of Jesus Christ.

I believe in that doctrine. It matters not how earnest may have been the desire, or how anxious to do good on the part of the men that we speak of as the reformers, if the true religion had vanished from the earth, they did not have power to create it or restore it. Thank God, in the dispensation in which we live, we do not assume an authority without revelation, like the religions of the day. We are in harmony with the declaration that is made by this Catholic priest: that because of the absence from among men of the truth of God that was revealed for the salvation of the human family, it was necessary that the author of that religion who is the source of power and authority should restore it. The message of "Mormonism" is that in the dispensation in which we live the Lord our God, and his Son, our Redeemer, and holy angels, who formerly exercised authority as mortal men, have come to earth in their resurrected bodies and they have restored that lost authority. When the infidel could see the marvelous character of this work, when the Catholic priest could discern the fact that if the truth of God had been lost from the earth, it could only be restored by the Redeemer of the world, surely we who have received the restored gospel ought to comprehend that fact, and in our souls there should be that joy that passeth understanding.

I am glad to say to you, my brethren and sisters, that this testimony and understanding is in the hearts of the men and women who have been assigned to labor as missionaries in the preaching of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the California mission, and notwithstanding the fact that they are young men and young women, that they have had but little experience, by the mysterious power of God there has come into their souls an absolute conviction that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, and according to their strength and power and ability, they are delivering that message to the people in the California mission. God, in some mysterious way, touches the hearts of men and women, no matter how weak the instrument that delivers his word, and brings conviction to the souls of men, and they come out from the darkness that is in the world and from the religious nonsense that many are teaching, and receive gladly the truth of God that has been revealed. It has been revealed, men and women, the heavens have been opened, the Lord our God has made his appearance, divine authority has been conferred upon men. I would to God that we had the power to declare it in the ears of all who live, for it is the truth of God. May our Father in heaven so bless us that we may be true to the faith and work out our salvation, and so let our light shine before men that they will be led from darkness to the light that has thus been made manifest, and plant their feet in the path that has been revealed—for, as God Almighty lives, the truth has been revealed that will take men back into the presence of the Lord our God. May we all travel in that path faithfully all the days of our lives, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

(Patriarch of the Church.)

I am very grateful indeed, my brethren and sisters, for the opportunity to add my testimony to the glorious truths, and principles that have been treated in this conference.

It was my privilege to attend the dedicatory services of the Alberta Temple, and I am very grateful for that sacred privilege.

I have enjoyed the testimonies of my brethren concerning their visit at the Hill Cumorah. Ever since my early childhood, the story of Joseph the Prophet concerning his wonderful experiences has been a very touching story in my life, and I can scarcely read it or hear it related without tears coming to my eyes. It was a most astounding declaration, for a boy seventeen years of age to make to his friends or his loved ones in a little family gathering, that his name had been named by heavenly messengers, and the statement made that his name should be had for good and ill in all the world, among all kindreds, tongues and peoples. Hundreds of us living bear the testimony from experience in the world, among all civilized nations, that this is a fact, for the name of Joseph Smith has been heard and is spoken of today for good and ill in all the world among civilized nations thereof.

Another very startling declaration made to that boy was that he was to be the instrument in the hands of the Lord in receiving that glorious message which had been foretold hundreds of years before, that in the last days the Lord would restore the keys and powers of the holy Priesthood at the hands of Elijah the Prophet. Some one was to be prepared to receive the keys. This youth declared to his father and his mother, his brothers and his friends that this message had been delivered unto him during the night of September 21, 1823. About twelve years later this glorious truth was fulfilled, for the Prophet and his associates declared that the Prophet Elijah came and delivered to them in the Kirtland temple these most glorious keys of power, and many have borne witness that these keys have been turned for the blessing of both the living and dead.

I bear my testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I know from my brief experience in the Church, that these keys of power are in the Church today, and that not only those in the Church but hundreds out of the Church have been influenced by this glorious mission of Elijah, for their hearts are being turned toward their fathers, both living and dead. Genealogical organizations all over the world have been and are being organized. Great efforts have been put forth, and family circles, both in the Church and out of the Church, have been organized, records have been established and hundreds of people know not why they are making this great effort; but little by little, as time goes on, more of the representatives of the families hear the sound of the everlasting gospel and come out of the world, if they are not already out of it, and are privileged through the inspiration of the call of the Lord to go into these holy houses prepared for him, and dedicated to his name, for his purposes, that in the day of the Lord the great curse which was referred to by the Prophet Elijah should not come upon the earth, but that the families may be united in the bonds of a family circle forever and forever. I know, my brethren and sisters, that the keys of this great work are in the hands of the authorities of the Church today upon the earth, and I am very grateful, indeed, that I have been permitted to officiate for both living and dead in these sacred houses.

My heart is full of the warmth of the truth concerning these blessings, and I pray that God will continue to bless us, that we may do our part when called to labor, whether at home or abroad, that his glorious blessings may come to all, that the families of the world, the great posterity of Adam and Eve may, in the due time of the Lord be enabled to find their own names and places in the fold of Christ. I pray, my brethren and sisters, that we may all find our places, that we may be able to stand in them and be found in them when the Lord's call comes to us. Whether the service required of us be small or great, may the Lord find us in our places and prepared to serve and labor to bring about his glorious purposes.

May the Lord bless us in all our endeavors to do good in all the world, to know the truth, to defend it, and to live it, in our homes and in our labors wherever called to labor, that his blessings may be upon this great work and all who are engaged in it, from the President to the least and last one called, whether at home or abroad, is my prayer and blessing for us all in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

The inspired hymn that Elder Ballif read was also one of the hymns sung at the conference at the Hill Cumorah. The author of it is William W. Phelps.

David O. McKay is absent from us, as you all know, he is performing an excellent work, presiding over the European mission and also over the British mission, and is accomplishing a splendid labor. We hear from him frequently. He is thoroughly enjoying his work.

The choir sang an anthem, "God is our refuge and strength."

Prayer was offered by Elder E. Frank Birch, president of the Tintic stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the Conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 a.m., Sunday morning, October 7, 1923.

Elder David A. Smith, of the Presiding Bishopric, presided.

Music and singing were furnished by the Holliday ward choir, Cottonwood stake, under the direction of Charles R. Pike, with Tracy Y. Cannon, organist.

The choir and congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel."

Prayer was offered by Elder Don C. Walker, Rigby, Idaho.

The choir sang, "Come, dearest Lord, descend and dwell."

ELDER REY L. PRATT

(President of the Mexican Mission.)

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

"Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

During this most splendid conference, my brethren and sisters, frequent reference has been made to the fact that we commemorate in this conference the one hundredth anniversary of the coming of that angel to earth with a dispensation of the everlasting gospel to preach unto the children of men everywhere. Truly it is remarkable to review the past one hundred years of achievement by this people, and it is marvelous when we contemplate that from that humble beginning there has grown the mighty Church of which we now form a part. And truly we cannot contemplate without believing, it seems to me, that this Church is the answer to those prophetic words, when we contemplate that this gospel has been and is being preached in all the world as a witness unto all people everywhere, and the honest in heart from out the nations of the earth are being gathered together in bodies and in organizations, and are being taught more fully in the gospel plan.

We note, from the scripture that I have read, that this gospel is eternal. It is everlasting; it is unchangeable; it is today what it was yesterday, and will always continue to be the same. There are many churches upon the face of the earth; there are many systems that are called the gospel of Jesus Christ, but I should like to analyze this morning, for a few brief moments, this word. I shall refer you to the definition of the gospel as given by Paul in his epistle to the Roman Saints. He says, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." So that we see in this gospel as established very distinctly two things: it is eternal, and it is the power of God unto the salvation of all men who will believe it. And the Savior said, "He that believes on me, the work that I do he will do also." So that true belief implies, not a lip confession, but works that will harmonize our lives with the principles, the ordinances, the teachings of the gospel, and the commandments of our Father in heaven. An article of our faith states, "We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel."

We have in the world a great many faiths and a great many gospels. But let us apply the test for a moment to them. We find recorded in scripture, words to this effect, that no unclean thing can enter into the kingdom of our Father in heaven. The man who is a thief, who is a liar, who is an adulterer, who is unclean in any sense of the word, cannot enter the kingdom of our Father in heaven. But the gospel is given as a power of salvation from those very things. Now, I ask you to reflect for a moment and answer the question to yourselves: In all the history of the great Catholic church, has it been able to save the world from sin? I do missionary work in a Catholic country, and I recognize the fact, my brethren and sisters, that there are many, many sincere people who live the best they can, considering the light that they have, but I want to tell you that sin exists today perhaps to a greater degree than it has ever existed before in that Catholic country, and the "power of God unto salvation" of the Catholic people is not being manifest through their church nor through the gospel that they preach.

Now, I ask you, my brethren and sisters, in the three or four hundred years' existence of the Protestant churches in the world, have the Protestant gospel been able to rid the world of sin? It seems to me, as we read in the current press that we are constrained to believe that perhaps as much today as in any age of the world's history, there is crime, there is vice, and there is disloyalty among the children of men, people professing to have the gospel of Jesus Christ. I ask you, if it is what Paul says the gospel is, why then is it not operative in the lives of these people? Can they, consistent with the scripture teaching, be saved in our Father's kingdom before some power is applied in their lives to cleanse them from sin and save them from it? Why, no. In the Book of Revelation, the Apostle John says, "Come out of her [speaking of Babylon], my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not her plagues."

Has the gospel, as revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith, and as restored by the angel that flew through the midst of heaven one hundred years ago been a power unto salvation, unto the children of our Father in heaven who have received it? You know yourselves that it has been; in some instances, of course, more and in some instances less. But because it has not operated in the full cleansing from sin of all those who have received it, judge not that the whole system is wrong, for those who have obeyed it have been able to overcome the tendencies in their nature that were contrary to the precepts of our Father in heaven; they have been able to harmonize their lives to his will.

Attention has been called during this conference to the Word of Wisdom. Our beloved President calls that document a letter sent from our Father in heaven to his children here for their guidance. Now, those who have lived it have found even a temporal salvation. They have found their bodies made healthier, stronger; their resistance greater, their minds keener; and their intellects brighter; and they have wisdom, yea even hidden treasures of wisdom, and the hand of the destroyer has passed those people by as it has not passed any other people on the face of the earth; for statistics prove the wonderful fact that the death-rate per thousand among the "Mormon" people is lower than perhaps among any other people in all the world. If it can do this, then it is, in its operation in our lives, the very power of God unto salvation.

On the first Sunday of last month I was in San Antonio, Texas, in a fast meeting, and we had our Saints bear their testimonies upon that day, as they do at home, testifying of the goodness of our heavenly Father to them; and one little woman, in fear and trembling, stood up in the back of the hall. She had only been a member of the Church for five months, but she testified that she knew the gospel to be true, and she gave as one of her reasons the following: "From my infancy, in the home of my parents, I was given coffee to drink. I grew up with the idea that I could not live without it. When I became a wife, in my home, we continued to use it. But for the last five or six years I have been practically a nervous wreck. I did not know what was the matter with me. All I wanted was my coffee. I did not care for food. I was becoming so weakened that it looked as if I would have to take to my bed. And the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ came to me with the message of the gospel, and among other things they taught me the Word of Wisdom, and the Lord has said that coffee, among other things, is not good for man." She testified that she could not sleep, she could not rest, she was nervous and near to break down, but when she received the waters of baptism, she discarded along with her other bad habits, the habit of coffee drinking. And she says, "Here I stand, a witness before God today, that I have been benefited; my health has returned to me; my appetite has returned; my ability to rest and sleep has returned."

Can we say, then, that the gospel, as we have received it, is not the power of God unto salvation? It is even in that sense in the life of that little woman? And so it will be in every other instance wherein we apply it.

All the ills of this world can be corrected by living the principles of this restored gospel. There need be no more war, there need be no more bloodshed, there need be no more strife, there need be no more dishonesty between and among the children of men, if men will only live the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. No man needs to knock at the door of heaven with his garments soiled with the sins of the world and of the generations in which he lives, if he will apply the blessed principles of repentance, if he will receive repentantly and in faith the ordinance of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; for although his sins may be as scarlet, in the blessed blood of our Redeemer, through compliance with these ordinances, he will be washed white as snow, and he shall enter, a new-born creature, into the kingdom of God, even as a little child, even in the similitude of that comparison made by the Redeemer himself, when his disciples asked, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" and he called a little child and placed him in their midst, and said, "Whosoever therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

Now, brethren and sisters, I know that the gospel is true. I know, and bear you my witness here today, that verily the angel did fly and he did come and he did converse with the boy prophet Joseph Smith, and he did deliver in due time into his hands the records that were for the first time shown him a hundred years ago, and the boy, through the inspiration and revelations direct from our Father in heaven, translated that most wonderful book, the Book of Mormon. It contains a history of the fulness of the everlasting gospel. It is being preached in all the world, and it will continue to be preached until every creature shall have heard the warning message.

It is being preached, my brethren and sisters, with a double purpose, first to save those who will accept, who will believe and who will obey the sacred teaching of the gospel; and second, it is being preached as a witness against those who will not do so. I tell our missionaries, in the mission when they are discouraged sometimes with the fact that more are not receiving the gospel, that if they are conscientiously and humbly and earnestly declaring their message in the world, they are ridding themselves of all responsibility. The responsibility of carrying this message, of a truth, rests upon the membership of this Church, but when we carry it forth, as I have said, and declare it to the people, then we roll the responsibility from off our shoulders onto the shoulders of the people of the world and they are left without an excuse.

We have not done it all, by any means, owing to the magnitude of the work in the missionary field. We at home, I sometimes think, little realize it. I wonder, sometimes, if we at home are inculcating into our family spirit the missionary spirit of this Church. We cannot, my brethren and sisters, side-step the issue, it is before us. The signs of the time point to the fact that the end is near. One of the brethren said yesterday, "how near we are not willing even to recognize." And still I recall that this gospel, this everlasting gospel, this gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation, must yet be preached even more extensively than it ever has been preached; for the Savior said that as the culminating incident that should precede his second coming, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Until we have done our full duty that responsibility weighs heavily upon us.

I pray for the blessings of the Lord to attend this Church. I further testify that not only do I know, my brethren and sisters, that the man chosen of God to initiate this great movement in the world was a prophet of God, but likewise that each of his successors, even to the man who stands in our midst today, Heber J. Grant, is a prophet of God. He speaks with divine appointment and by divine power, and it is for us to listen to the word of the Lord as it comes through him. We should cast out from us evil, and just so far as the gospel has not been able to perfect us, it illustrates the fact that it is not applied in our lives to the full extent that it might be applied. If I drink liquor, if I smoke tobacco, if I lie, if I gamble, if I steal, it is not an evidence that the gospel is not true; it is merely an evidence that I might have all the wires and globes, but the current of light is not turned on in my life. The Holy Ghost, that was given me as a spiritual birth in the kingdom of God, is not permitted to operate, because I choose to love darkness rather than light.

So let us clean up our own houses. Let us take the word of the Lord that came to us in the opening address of this conference, and as parents live and breathe in our family circle such a spirit that we can correct the evil tendencies of the age in our own children. I am a parent, and I realize what that means. No one knows better than I, perhaps, what a great responsibility it is to keep boys and girls going just right. My boys and girls have to live out in the world; they are not surrounded with all the environments here, and if it were not for a home influence, they would be just like the world, I am sure; so we have to strive to keep that alive.

I do not wish to occupy more of your time. May the Lord bless you and help us to live more in harmony with his teachings, and to clean up our own homes and our own lives, that we may live so that the gospel of Jesus Christ can be in our lives in very deed the power of God unto salvation, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH QUINNEY

(President of the Canadian Mission.)

My dear brethren and sisters If there ever was a time when I stood in the presence of a congregation of people and needed the Spirit of God, it is the present time. I appreciate fully the great responsibility that rests upon an elder who is called upon to occupy a place of this kind in delivering the message of life and salvation to the children of men, therefore I do humbly pray with all the power that I have that I shall be directed in my remarks this morning by the Spirit and influence of our Father in heaven.

If there is any one thing that has impressed itself upon me more than another during the sessions of this conference, it is the positiveness with which the message has been delivered to the Saints residing in the stakes of Zion, and I am convinced, as I have listened to these messages of truth, that God has never permitted anything to come into the world pertaining to life and salvation but what that message has carried with it a positiveness that has not been misunderstood. And I have wondered, as I have listened to these inspired discourses, as they have come from the lips of the Prophet and the apostles of the Lord, how it is possible for us to doubt the divinity of this great and mighty work as it has been established in this dispensation of the fulness of times.

I have wondered if there could have been any other way of presenting and introducing the gospel of Jesus Christ, other than the way in which it was introduced into the world. God has a message to deliver. Who but he could have delivered that message with more positive understanding? When I reflect upon that vision that came to Joseph Smith the Prophet, I realize and appreciate its power and importance. I must come to the conclusion that God has established his work here upon the earth, because of the fact that it was so important that he came and introduced his Son Jesus Christ, who is the author of our salvation, to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and commanded him to listen to the Redeemer of the world. This, to my mind, is the greatest event in the history of the human race and bears witness of the fact that whenever God has a message to deliver to the children of men pertaining to their eternal salvation he speaks to them in no uncertain terms and impresses upon their souls the necessity of coming in contact with the divine, in order that they may become qualified to assume the great responsibilities that are resting upon them from time to time. Subsequently, when it became necessary to fulfil the prophecy that we have heard read to us this morning, that same positiveness, that same assurance accompanied the message that was delivered to the Prophet Joseph Smith, as was delivered to him when God, in his majesty and glory, together with his Son Jesus Christ appeared to him.

I would like to read again a passage because of the strength and the power that it conveys. It refers to a time when God's judgments were to be poured out upon the inhabitants of the earth as a witness that he had spoken through the instrumentality of his holy angels, and subsequently through his Prophet Joseph Smith here upon the earth:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

"Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

Now, in connection with the delivery of this message, I want to call attention to one or two important things; first of all, this message of the gospel should come in the day of God's judgment, and it should come in a time when we were to call upon him and worship him who made heaven and earth and the sea and the fountains of waters. And this is a day of God's judgments. So important and so mighty was this gospel message that was committed to this angel that it was necessary for him to come not only once in that night when he delivered himself with the power and glory of God, but it was necessary for him to repeat that message—not just once or twice or thrice, with the identical words, accompanied with the power of the Priesthood that he held, but it became necessary upon the following day for him to appear with the same glory and majesty and power, so that there would be no mistake made in the delivering of that gospel message.

And these are things, my brethren and sisters, that make this work stand out as the great gospel plan of God, as he has revealed it to the children of men through his divine and inspired prophet in this day and time. And I want to say to you that as we carry this message to the hearts of the children of men, we are convinced as we give our testimony that God speaks, and speaks with that power that causes strength to be added to the testimonies that we have in the mission field, and we are able, through this divine power of God to develop that love within our souls for the hearts and the souls of the children of men, so that they may understand and appreciate what God has said in this day and time. It is a mighty message, a message, my brethren and sisters, that our sons and our daughters are carrying with them in humility; and understanding the power there is in humility, they pray as they never prayed in all their lives before, so that they can come in direct contact with that union that connects them with God the eternal Father.

I bear my testimony that I know, as I know that I live, that God speaks to his prophets here upon the earth, because I am a living witness in seeing the fulfilment of prophecy in the convincing of the honest in heart of the divinity of this great work, I have heard them testify that they have been lit up to that extent that they have had the courage of their convictions to come and apply for baptism and testify of God's great and mighty power. I know that he lives, and I know that this is his Church. I am a living manifestation of his power. I have been raised, as it were, from the dead, to life eternal, and I bear witness of God's power as it has been made manifest through his holy priesthood.

God grant that we will appreciate, as the days come and go, the power there is in this Church, the divine instruments that we have in proclaiming and living this great religion that has come to us. O, may we be humble and prayerful and bring into our very souls a love for one another and appreciate the injunction that Christ himself gave when he made that declaration in answer to the question, Which of all the commandments is the greatest? "Love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind," and then, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

God grant that we will take advantage of this privilege granted unto us of cultivating that divine love, that there will be strength added to the testimonies that we already have, that we may have the courage of our convictions and convey this truth in power and in strength, to the convincing of the thousands who are ready to understand it and accept it. God bless these remarks to our good and us to the service of God is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A tenor solo was sung by Elder John Bowers, entitled, "Hosanna."

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

(President of the Northern States Mission.)

I will read a few of the words of Moroni to the people:

"Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, if it be wisdom in God that ye should read them, that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men, from the creation of Adam, even down until the time that ye shall receive these things, and ponder it in your hearts."

It seems to me that this verse is a preparation to the people who may read this holy book, that they shall have in their hearts a desire to know the truth, and to have brought to their remembrance the fact that God has been good to his children upon the earth; and that, irrespective of the many things that they have done which have been evil in his sight, God has been willing to forgive them, make himself manifest to them, and bear record of the truthfulness of his word. When we realize how good God has been to us, then desire and hope come into our hearts, and make us humble before God, and we rather feel that God will also be merciful unto us, his children, and bring testimony into our hearts. I dare say that whoever reads this holy book, and reads this first verse, will have a desire that God shall be merciful to him, as he has been merciful unto his people before:

"And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost."

What we can know and find out for ourselves is the truthfulness of God's word to us as found in the Holy Scriptures and in the Book of Mormon. If we shall have real intent in our hearts to know, then God will manifest the truth of these things by the power of the Holy Ghost. Some, even among our own people, will think from reading these words that they can commence at the beginning of the Book of Mormon and read it through and a divine testimony will come of the truthfulness of the book. We are forgetting that we must have a desire in our hearts to know and have real intent and sincerity back of us; and then shall the testimony of God the eternal Father come to us as to the truthfulness of this holy book.

God always has left testimony and has borne the same to all of his people that they may know of the truthfulness of his work. It is the testimony given to us through the power of the Holy Spirit of God that makes us know of its truthfulness. I am not leaving out the fact that we must study, that we shall seek God, that God is intelligence; I am not forgetting all of these things, but by the power and the gift of the Holy Ghost comes testimony in our hearts.

God, speaking unto his people at the baptism of the Savior, bore record to the people and to the world, "This is my beloved Son." When he appeared to the Nephites, God bore testimony again, "This is my beloved Son." In this day, unto Joseph Smith, God again bore testimony, "This is my Son." And who can read in the Book of Mormon or the Doctrine and Covenants, or the Bible, the simple testimony of God, "This is my beloved Son," and with a prayer in his heart, without feeling that God is speaking to us, and that we know for a surety that God lives and that Jesus Christ is the Son?

You remember when the sons of Helaman went out to war for their liberty against their own people that they said in speaking to the people, "We do not doubt our mothers knew it." The testimony of God had been given to the two thousand by the testimony of their mothers at home. It was that simple, beautiful statement, that came from the lips of the mother that made the boys seek after God the eternal Father, and they did not doubt, because, by the power of the Holy Ghost came testimony into their hearts.

As a boy, I used to go to fast meeting and wonder why father and mother would insist that I go to a meeting of that kind, where men and women were standing up one after another and saying, "I know that the gospel of Jesus Christ is true, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God." How well they knew that, as I sat Sunday after Sunday in the meeting hearing what to me are now beautiful testimonies, that testimony was coming into my heart and helping me to understand that God indeed does live and that Jesus Christ is his Son.

You mothers and fathers, bear testimony in our fast meetings, and our other meetings, as to the truthfulness of God's work, that the people may hear your testimony, but I sometimes wonder how often we take our boys and our girls on one side, or how often we gather them before the family fire, and when all is peaceful and quiet, bear testimony as fathers and mothers to the girl and the boy and let them know from our lips that God lives and that he has spoken again in these latter days. That testimony shall stay with the boys and with the girls and go with them into many lands and fields, and some day, because of the simple testimony from the father and the mother, that boy and that girl shall bear testimony unto the world of the truthfulness of God's gospel, because you made it possible and softened their hearts that they wanted to know for themselves as to the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I am grateful for this gospel. I am glad that it is a gospel where you have to fight your own fight; for, not forgetting the beloved mercies of God the eternal Father and his Son—not forgetting all of these wonderful things—after all, it is an individual fight with the help of God to win your life through and make it worth while. Jesus Christ presented his plan, and the son of the morning presented his plan. We accepted the plan of Christ, and now Satan, it seems to me, would lull us into the sleep of forgetfulness that we have accepted the plan of Jesus Christ, which meant free agency, and brought us to the fighting ranks, into the front of the line; and he sought to substitute his plan which lost out once, and must ever lose because it is not a just plan. If we win out, it is through the mercies of God and the lives that we live. I would rather lose the fight and pay the penalty, and belong to the Church of Jesus Christ, than to belong to something that would make me feel that I could disobey the laws of God and still go back into the presence of my Maker.

May God bless us and help us. May the sweet testimony of his Spirit come into our hearts and into the hearts of our boys and girls, that this Church may continue to grow and increase in spiritual power and, because of the lives of the people and the testimonies that God has given to us, stand out as a living testimony to the world that this indeed is the Church of Jesus Christ, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

(President of the Western States Mission.)

My soul has been stirred, as never before, during the sessions of this conference.

I desire that I may have the same sweet spirit that has influenced the remarks of my brethren. I would like to emphasize one thought that has impressed me.

Frequent reference has been made to the holy scriptures, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Pearl of Great Price as the inspired word of God. As I listened to the opening address of President Grant, and others of the brethren who have spoken, I have felt in my heart their testimony and words of instruction, were just as binding upon the Latter-day Saints as any part of the written word.

"Holy men of old wrote and spoke as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost."

Prophets of God live today, and when moved upon by that same power, their message is of equal force upon the world and particularly the Latter-day Saints as the word of God spoken or written centuries ago.

All who listened to the testimony and instructions of President Grant must have felt, in their souls, that he spoke as one having authority, commissioned of God to declare his message to the Saints of latter days. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes, and obeys its teachings. A testimony of its truth is not reserved for the presiding brethren of the Church. It is within the power of every baptized believer to have assurance and testimony that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that Joseph Smith not only was, but is a prophet of the living God, also that those who are at the head of the Church today have the same authority and power possessed by Joseph Smith. We will reserve that witness of the Spirit in direct proportion to our obedience to law. If we are implicit and absolute in our obedience to the commandments of God we shall know the truth. Jesus said to the Jews who believed in him,

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

I read from the Doctrine and Covenants, section one:

"For I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance;"

"Nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven;"

"And he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for any spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts."

"And again verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh,"

"For I am no respecter of persons, and will that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion."

We must keep ourselves clean and unspotted from the sins of the world.

I have here, a clipping that was forcibly brought to my mind this morning. Reference was made by one of the speakers to the fact that a minister of one of the great Protestant churches in a convention recently held, declared that the churches had no message for the world. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, has a message for the world, which is definite and positive. That message was delivered to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the early part of the nineteenth century, by messengers sent from the presence of God. It is the message of the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fulness and power. The clipping I have is from a Minneapolis paper and reports the Rev. C. E. Ames of the Congregational church as saying:

"In a spiritual sense there is a crying need today for pioneers to lead us into new lands away from the worship of idols. We need not so much scribes and priests as we need prophets. Prophets are spiritual pioneers, pilgrims, pathfinders. The spiritual pathfinder needs faith to venture, courage to endure, a vision of freedom to strive for. He cannot be satisfied with the life about him. He loses smug content in a desire for better things. Inspired by the living Christ, the prophet for our day must lead by voice and life. He cannot permit the message God has given him to be throttled by any force economic, social or military. He may not be praised; far more probable his lot will be persecution, but he will lead the world to new lands of spiritual growth and happiness."

Truly the world is in need of prophets, spiritual pathfinders. We have them! Joseph Smith was the pioneer in the dispensation in which we live. He directed the attention of the world away from the worship of idols, taught the personality of God and of his son Jesus Christ and revolutionized the popular idea of an incomprehensible Deity. He taught men the fundamental doctrine of salvation. Faith in God, faith in the atoning sacrifice of Jesus of Nazareth, the necessity of personal purity, and repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost and every other principle and doctrine taught by Christ and his apostles.

It has not been necessary to call a convention of the elders of the Church to consider fundamentals in order to enrich the articles of our faith. They will be the same in all dispensations of time; and will lead the people of the world to spiritual growth and happiness. Joseph Smith did not permit the message God had given him to be throttled by any power, social, economic, or military; though his lot was persecution, hounded, driven and plundered by his enemies, he bore solemn testimony until death that he had seen the Father and the Son in glorious vision, that holy men as ministering angels had visited him and conferred the authority of the holy Priesthood upon him with all the keys and powers of former gospel dispensations, and that under their direction the Church of Christ had been established never more to be thrown down. We Latter-day Saints are his witnesses that these things are true.

In the days when Christ was upon the earth he called the attention of the Scribes and Pharisees to the fact that many of them said in their hearts, had we lived in the days of the prophets, we would have done differently than our fathers. But he said unto them:

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye build the tombs of the Prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous, and say, if we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets. Wherefore, ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets. Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can you escape the damnation of hell?"

Joseph Smith undaunted and unafraid went to a martyr's doom in 1844. Future generations, no doubt, will adore the name of the prophet of this dispensation whom their sires put to death.

Missionaries of the Church are calling the attention of the world to these great truths and warning them of the judgments that are about to come upon the earth. This year is the centennial anniversary of the visit of the Angel Moroni to the Prophet Joseph Smith, preparatory to the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon. In our mission, the Western states, we have stressed the coming forth of this volume of scripture, this new witness for God, and kept it prominently before the people. Some of our friends have been wrought up in their souls and have endeavored to stay our progress. One such was kind enough to distribute a little pamphlet through the eastern part of South Dakota. I desire to read a portion of what appeared in the article. It was unsigned:

"In spite of their awful doctrines, they get followers. There are multitudes of poor, deluded folk that want something different. They are easy prey to the schemes of men and devils. The 'Mormons' are skilled deceivers. They use the Bible to teach repentance, faith and baptism, but hold back their awful doctrines. They teach that God once was as we are now, and that we may become what God is now. They teach that we have a heavenly Father and a heavenly Mother."

That is an awful doctrine isn't it? I have not time to read all of this pamphlet. I call your attention to the closing paragraph.

"They say that Joseph Smith can make scripture as good as the Bible, that God has many revelations, as the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants and other publications of their Church. Records are kept of thousands of living persons who are baptized in their temples for the redemption of the dead. Their writings can be produced to show that they teach these things. The above is enough to condemn the whole system; for they set up their writings equal to the Bible and leave place for added revelation. Gods word is a finished revelation, and woe to him that adds to or takes away!"

My time has expired. It is not necessary to make any comment in the presence of a congregation of Latter-day Saints. It shows, however, the attitude of the world towards a prophet of God. The crying need of the hour is for inspired men. We have them in the Church of Jesus Christ, and they are leading Israel by the power of God. May the Lord add his blessings, that we may appreciate to the full our responsibilities. Let us turn our faces towards the rising sun, set our hearts like flint against the evils of the world, and endeavor to reduce to practice in our lives the counsels and instructions that have been given and will yet be given at the sessions of this conference, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH*(Of the Presiding Bishopric.)*

I rejoice, this morning, that I find my soul in harmony with the remarks of this conference. I thank God for this, and pray that while I shall stand before you, he will assist me in the remarks I may make. Enough has been said already during this conference to assure us our salvation, if we believe and put into practice the good advice and admonition.

In looking over the congregation today, judging from the expressions on your faces, I am satisfied that those who have attended feel that they can go to their homes fully determined to carry out the instructions received. It will not be long before many of us are again plunged into the affairs of business and some will perhaps forget this wholesome, elevating influence.

It was my good fortune to accompany President Grant and others to Canada for the purpose of attending the dedicatory services at the temple, and for four days most of the General Authorities were in meetings almost continuously from twelve to fifteen hours each day. Every moment of the time was a joy to me, and I thought while there, how easy it would be to keep the commandments of God, if I could constantly be surrounded with such an influence. This cannot be, it seems, for we must labor to provide food and comforts for ourselves and families, and our labors take us into channels where that spirit is not always present. Some of us, I am afraid, feel it is sufficient to keep the commandments of God as they pertain to our spiritual welfare. We attend sacrament meetings, our priesthood meetings and other meetings that are held for our benefit and edification. Our lives are clean in thought and action, yet many times we overlook the fact that it is also necessary that we so live that our every action may be influenced by the Spirit of God. In the world today, it seems, people think mainly of their selfish interests, hoping constantly to get about them those things which will bring luxury and comfort, and in their anxiety to gather about them luxuries, they forget God and the teachings of the Lord and Savior, and sometimes those who are active in their Church work give way to selfishness and greed, when it comes to business activities.

On our way home from Canada, President Grant received a telegram from the Commercial Club, at Great Falls, asking that while there, President Grant and party be guests of the Chamber of Commerce. President Grant answered he had had a hard week and would prefer to spend the evening quietly. But another telegram came, requesting that President Grant and party be guests of the Chamber of Commerce at Great Falls. Upon arriving we were met at the train by a committee who took the party by automobile to the Rainbow hotel, where arrangements had been made to hold a reception. Remarks were made by leading citizens. In their statements of welcome they expressed a desire to be friendly with the members of the Church, and encouraged them to come to that country to settle. They stated, not those words, but in thought, that they were not concerned with the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but were very much interested with the effect of those teachings upon the members of the Church who had gone there to settle. A leading banker made this statement: "We have discovered that where we have 'Mormon' families in our community, they are a hard-working class of people; they farm intelligently, and confer with one another as to the best method of farming and if need be, they co-operate with one another to get the best results in their farming. Only a few days ago my attention was called to a condition where one of them had been taken sick. His crops were ready to be harvested; he did not have the means to harvest them himself. His associates, seeing his condition, fixed a time, went in a body and harvested the crops and saved them for him. This is the class of people we want to come amongst us. If we have more of them we will have fewer I. W. W's. and Bolsheviks." I do not know whether this man made the statement purely through selfishness or not but I do know he had discovered in those few farmers who had gone there a condition that should always be manifested in the actions of those who believe in the teachings of Jesus Christ.

While this condition is seen by those who hope to make capital out of it, many of us who should see it and feel the importance of cultivating this spirit of fellowship, have very little time to do so. It is through our thoughts and actions that we succeed. If our thoughts are unclean, our actions will become unclean. If our thoughts are selfish, then we will become selfish. We may attend our meetings, pay our tithes and offerings, but at the same time hold ourselves aloof from the Saints, and thus fail to partake of the spirit of fellowship and personal contact, which is so helpful and comes only through mingling with each other in the spirit of friendship as taught by the gospel of Jesus Christ. Whether we are engaged in operating a store, laboring in a professional capacity, or in any other of the activities of life, we should not permit the spirit of selfishness to enter into our hearts. We should look upon our brother in need as one to whom we should stretch a helping hand.

The other day, I heard a man from Los Angeles make the statement: "We must look to Utah for subsistence. Our farming ground is being rapidly built up. Utah must supply our meat, our poultry, our eggs, our butter and our cheese." Many times, when farseeing men in the stakes of Zion have made an attempt to have the people in their district see the importance of co-operation and recognize that they may be more helpful to one another in producing to the best advantage and for the purpose of putting their produce upon the market to the best advantage, there have been some who, in each case, in the spirit of rebellion, refused to lend aid to this movement.

feeling that the leaders had a selfish motive in advising the people in this manner. There are a few in our midst who have this spirit and they mistrust every man who tries to do good, and, perhaps, because of that mistrust, on the part of a few, the large majority, rather than force their ideas upon others, sit back content with looking after their own affairs, and because of this we fail to accomplish all that we might accomplish.

I want to say to you, my brehtren especially, that it is just as important for us at times to discuss in our priesthood meetings our local affairs as they pertain to our business, the crops we should raise and the best method of producing or marketing, as it is that we discuss things which pertain alone to our spiritual welfare. In all, we should be guided through prayer, faith and works, remembering the commandments of the Lord to Nephi, as found in III Nephi 18:15-25:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye must watch and pray always, lest ye be tempted by the devil, and ye be led away captive by him.

"And as I have prayed among you even so shall ye pray in my church, among my people who do repent and are baptized in my name.' Behold I am the light; I have set an example for you.

"And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words unto his disciples, he turned again unto the multitude and said unto them:

"Behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, ye must watch and pray always lest ye enter into temptation; for Satan desireth to have you, that he may sift you as wheat.

"Therefore ye must always pray unto the Father in my name;

"And whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, which is right, believing that ye shall receive, behold it shall be given unto you.

"Pray in your families unto the Father, always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed.

"And behold, ye shall meet together oft; and ye shall not forbid any man from coming unto you when ye shall meet together, but suffer them that they may come unto you and forbid them not;

"But ye shall pray for them, and shall not cast them out; and if it so be that they come unto you oft ye shall pray for them unto the Father, in my name.

"Therefore, hold up your light that it may shine unto the world. Behold I am the light which ye shall hold up—that which ye have seen me do. Behold ye see that I have prayed unto the Father, and ye all have witnessed.

"And ye see that I have commanded that none of you should go away, but rather have commanded that ye should come unto me, that ye might feel and see; even so shall ye do unto the world; and whosoever breaketh this commandment suffereth himself to be led into temptation." * * *

The Lord in his wisdom has given us a commandment which is a guide: (III Nephi 18:28-30.)

"And now behold, this is the commandment which I give unto you, that ye shall not suffer any one knowingly to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily, when ye shall minister it;

"For whoso eateth and drinketh my flesh and blood unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to his soul; therefore if ye know that a man is unworthy to eat and drink of my flesh and blood ye shall forbid him.

"Nevertheless, ye shall not cast him out from among you, but ye shall minister unto him and shall pray for him unto the Father, in my name; and if it so be that he repenteth and is baptized in my name, then shall ye receive him, and shall minister unto him of my flesh and blood."

Yesterday, in this building, one of our bishops told us what was being accomplished in his ward by way of teaching the young men, holding the Lesser Priesthood, how to become active in Church work. Young men holding the Lesser Priesthood are generally of an age when they learn mainly through observation. Think of the effect upon these young men just beginning their ministry in the Church, knowing that men should not partake of the Sacrament unless they are clean in their lives and in their actions, when we disobey this instruction: let us partake of the Sacrament often and witness anew that we are willing to take upon us the name of the Lord and keep his commandments.

I see that my time is up. I pray that when we go to our homes we will not feel that it is sufficient for us to labor in a spiritual capacity alone, but that it is also necessary to keep with us such spiritual guidance in our every-day walks of life, and apply to all we undertake to do, the Golden Rule. In the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints we are one big family, and to receive the blessings promised should keep in mind that fact, remembering the words of the Savior: "Pray always, lest ye be led into temptations," for no man can pray as God would have him pray, with a spirit of envy, malice or selfishness in his soul.

God grant that through our efforts to serve him we will prove our worthiness to receive his blessings, which I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang, "Let the mountain shout for joy."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder William L. Rich, of the Bear Lake stake of Zion.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING

The second overflow meeting was held in the Assembly Hall at 2 o'clock, October 7, 1923.

Elder John Wells, of the Presiding Bishopric, presided.

As in the morning session the Holliday ward choir furnished the singing under the direction of Charles R. Pike, with Tracy Y. Cannon as organist.

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Don C. Walker, Rigby, Idaho.

The choir sang, "This is the day which the Lord hath made."

ELDER NEPHI JENSEN

(Former President of the Canadian Mission.)

I am truly thankful for the privilege of coming into this holy place on this beautiful day to worship the God of our fathers. I am thankful that I have in my heart a desire to bow my head and lift my heart in praise to the Maker of all.

I returned home from a mission to Canada last April, rather worse for wear. I was a little better than a corpse and not quite as good as an invalid. But through the mercy and goodness of our heavenly Father, I have been greatly strengthened in my body during the last six months. I am thankful with all my heart for the testimony that I have that God does hear his children who come unto him with broken hearts and contrite spirits, in the times of their need and their distress. I pray that the spirit of our heavenly Father shall attend me in my utterances this afternoon. During my term of missionary service in the Dominion of Canada I learned that there is very little that any of us can do, in and of ourselves, to bring to pass the righteousness of God in the world. I have learned to know that there is only one power anywhere that can really purify and ennoble the human heart, and that is the power of God's Holy Spirit.

During the last year or two I have had occasion to read three noteworthy books. All three of these books are addressed to the great theme of "salvaging the wrecked civilization of the world." One of these books was written by a great teacher of psychology, Dr. G. Stanley Hall. The second was written by a distinguished man of letters, H. G. Wells. The last was written by an English philosopher, G. Bernard Shaw. All three of these distinguished men attempt to answer the big question, "How can we save the wrecked civilization of the world?"

G. Stanley Hall gave to his book the name, Morale. In it he attempts to show that the spiritual and intellectual wellbeing of the world depends upon physical wholesomeness. He arrives at the conclusion that all that we need to save the world from ruin is more abundant physical health. The professor did not seem to remember that, if the heart is evilly-disposed, the more of vitality and strength there is back of it the more there is of fuel to feed the flames of passion. Morale, in the sense in which Dr. G. Stanley Hall uses that word, will not save the world.

H. G. Wells took for the title of his book, Salvaging Civilization. Mr. Wells is an intellectualist. He is a profound believer in the supremacy of mind over matter. He believes in education. In his book he goes on to say, in effect, that what the world needs is more education, more enlightenment. Mr. Wells seems to have forgotten that the brighter the mind, if it is attached to an evilly-disposed heart, the greater its power for evil in the world. The recent history of the world written in the blood of millions killed upon the battlefield, and the tears of weeping widows and orphans, confirms the truth, that brightness of mind without rightness of heart leads to frightfulness, and the wreckage of the world.

The last of these writers, the philosopher, G. Bernard Shaw, took for the title of his book, Back to Methuselah. You know Mr. Shaw is an evolutionist. He tells us in his book that there is in operation in the world a universal principle of evolution, social evolution, political evolution, and moral evolution; and that the only reason why the human race is not saved is because men and women do not live long enough. He contends that if man could live a thousand years, so that the process of evolution could do its effective work the race of man would be saved from evil and error. But the philosopher seems to have forgotten that the longer a bad man lives the worse he becomes.

Now, the strange thing, to me, about these three great books is the fact that all three of these writers, of international note, claimed to believe in the supremacy of Jesus Christ as the moral and ethical teacher of the world. Mr. Hall, Mr. Wells, and Mr. Shaw all believe that Jesus Christ was the greatest moral and ethical teacher the world has ever seen. Now, just why these three men should not recommend to the human race Christ's panacea for the ills of the world, I am not able to understand. That remedy is found in one simple sentence in the first chapter of Mark's gospel. In this chapter we read:

"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel."

In that simple sentence is found the cure for all the ills of the world. In it is found the only medicine that can save this sin-sick world.

When I think about it, I am reminded that sometime ago Mr. Bok, one of our great American writers, made an offer to the world of a hundred thousand dollars for the best plan for bringing peace to the world. Some time subsequent to the publication of this offer, a Florida newspaper came out with a short editorial, in which the writer said, "We win in two words—Stop fighting." You can turn the world from wrecklessness and sin to righteousness and peace, with just two words, "Stop sinning."

Does this command apply to me? Yes. It includes you and me, and all mankind. When you and I and all our neighbors are peaceable the peace of the world will be secure. And, by-the-by, it is not the usual sins that damn the world. I used to say to my companions in the missionary field, "You need not be concerned about the sin of robbing a bank, because you are not going to rob any bank." It is just the little daily sins of you and me, of wrong-thinking, that damn our souls.

Now, one of these little prevailing sins which I have found since I came home is the sin of pride. You know we have a lot of people who worship their automobiles more than they worship God. There are many who have more pride in their professional skill than they have in the beauty and the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In my profession, I frequently meet young members of the bar. When some of these young men have read two or three law books, and have got about two legal ideas into their heads, they begin to think that they are too wise to take any stock in gospel truth.

Now, you cannot get into heaven in that sort of a spirit. You cannot ride into the presence of God on a high horse. Jesus, the greatest of all teachers, said, "Except ye become as this little child, ye cannot see the kingdom of heaven." What we need is more childishness of heart and less childishness of mind. We need more of old-fashioned humility and devotion in the Church. Humility is nobility.

Just a few weeks ago I was invited to spend a few moments in looking over a splendid Packard sedan, that had cost $5,000. I did not buy it. A friend of mine was the buyer. Now, while we were admiring this beautiful car, a young man spoke up, "It's heaven inside of it." There are some of our people who seem to think that when they get into a sedan they are in the celestial glory. Now, don't misunderstand me; I haven't anything against the automobile. It is a splendid instrument of utility in the commercial and industrial world. It is also a legitimate source of pleasure used in moderation.

Many of us have become engulfed in the mad swirl of worldly pleasure. Our age is coming to be an age of gratification. It should be an age of glorification. In every age of the world when the children of men have given themselves over to pleasure, and selfish gratification, there has been a marked decadence physically, morally and intellectually of the race. And in every age of the world when mankind have remembered in meekness and gratitude the God of heaven, and have worshiped him, they have progressed and advanced, in all of the fine things that make for the ennoblement of the children of men.

My brothers and sisters, let me make this appeal to you. Be not deceived by the glitter of this vain world. There is a deeper joy than the pleasure of gratification. There is the joy of knowing God, of having sacred fellowship with him through the Holy Spirit. That is the deepest and the purest joy in the world. We cannot have this joy unless we live near to God and serve him and keep his commandments.

I am thankful with all my heart for the humble part I have had in telling the world of the great things of God's latter-day glory. I love the truth; I love this work; I love this people; I love to witness their advancement and their progress; and I pray that God will help us to be true to the truth and faithful to the faith, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM S. YOUNG

(President of the Northwestern States Mission.)

My dear brethren and sisters, I feel very grateful for the opportunity I have of standing before you for a few moments and reporting conditions and affairs in the Northwestern States mission. I have come to a realization as never before, of the great value of a human soul. To the degree that I stand at the head of that organization, I have been entrusted with the most precious things that God has in the earth and that we, as parents, possess in our families, your sons and daughters. We are endeavoring, so far as lies in our power and, according to the best judgment we possess, to guide them in those ways that will make of them what God intended they should be.

We realize in the mission field, as in no other place in life, the real meaning of life. And I want to say to you, that your sons and daughters are among the most noble creatures it has ever been my good fortune to affiliate with. They do not hesitate at the performance of any noble duty, no matter how humble or how much it may call for what we term sacrifice. But when I think of that term sacrifice, I am constrained to the conviction that we are entirely mistaken respecting it. We think it is a sacrifice, some of us, to keep our sons and daughters in the mission field. There is no blessing that comes to a father or a mother equal, in my judgment, to maintaining in the mission field for the length of time necessary one of the members of their family, because of the value it is to their family and particularly to the young man or young woman.

There is a great deal of criticism and attack by those who have constituted themselves the judges of this community and this organization and this work. I think the best answer that can be given men who attack this organization, this Church, is the lives and accomplishments of the boys and girls who go into the mission field; because they learn the best, the most vital, the most enduring thing that can be learned in all the world. Your sons and daughters stand up in the communities of Christendom affirming, with all seriousness and in humility, that God has spoken, that they have received a witness of that fact. They have stamped upon their lives the great fact that God is our Father and that their duty to him and his children is the greatest consideration of life. And that duty teaches them the strictest and most beautiful morality. It teaches them honesty; it teaches them service, service to God and his children. Can there be formed or found in all the world a higher idealism than the worship of God and the service of his children? And when people attack this organization and this community, they are attacking the highest idealism known to man, found in the worship of God and doing good to humanity.

We sometimes think that the missionaries are subjected to great sacrifice. I have an instance in mind. There is in the mission a young woman. She comes from Sevier county. Her name is Velma Nebeker. She is educated, beautiful, and possesses all of the requisites not only for a successful missionary but for a woman fitted to occupy the highest social position, a woman who some day will make her mark and write her name large in the history of this community. She is a paragon of excellence as respects appearance and dress. The mission needed a teacher on the Indian reservation at Wolf Point, a most forbidding place. Our Church sits on a little hill, wind-swept. It is desolate. It is on the great arid bottoms of the Missouri river, mostly of mud, stunted cottonwoods, and poor growth of grass. Inhabiting that particular part of the country is a tribe of Indians, and there has been established among them, or was established during the days of Elder Ballard, of the Council of the Twelve, an Indian school. We have an enrollment of nearly thirty pupils, and we teach from the primary up to the sixth grade. This young woman, among her other accomplishments, is a school teacher. The mission needed just her stamp of woman for the performing of the duties, necessary to the instructing of those little Indian children. I called her into the office. I had been praying for a month as to the selection that should be made, because I recognized its importance. And when I called her into the office—Wolf Point is the most abhorrent to all the missionaries, because it is the most difficult and sacrificial place in which to labor—and said to her, "Miss Nebeker, I want you to go to Wolf Point," her face blanched. The tears shot from her eyes, but she set her teeth and said, "I'll go." She went, and I said to her before she departed, "I want to say to you that when you return from your mission you will say—and I know it now as well as I shall know it in the future—that your labors in Wolf Point have been the very crown of your missionary labor." She is a heroine, and you men and women, parents in Israel, have hundreds of young people out in the mission who are just like that. They do not hesitate at any duty. There is no sacrifice they are called upon to perform that they do not go willingly, depending upon the Almighty not only for the knowledge that they disseminate but for their food and their shelter.

We have recently concluded our great summer work, in which the boys (not the young ladies, because we do not entrust to them that duty) have gone into all the surrounding country, through Oregon, Washington, parts of Idaho, all of Montana, and into British Columbia, proclaiming the gospel without purse or scrip. And I want to say to the parents of these young men and women, if you want to give your sons and daughters the very best, or leave for them and fix in their lives the very best that you can, there is nothing that can be bestowed that will be of as much value as missionary experience. They go out in humility, but they acquire information with great rapidity, and some of our boys who come from the remote districts come into the mission field crude, it is true; their grammar is poor; their knowledge of the gospel is almost nil; but in a few weeks you commence to see a fire in their eyes, you commence to see a bearing and a manner in their attitude toward one another and the world, you begin to see an intelligence shooting forth from their whole being that was not there when they came. They improve with remarkable rapidity, and it makes of them the kind of men and women that the world needs for its regenerating, for its saving; because if it is saved, it will be by men and women who possess the qualification and the understanding that these young men and women have who go out into the world as missionaries.

And when they come back to you, they will understand that the highest duty they have to perform is the duty of marriage—parent-hood, good citizenship, as children of God our Father. And it cannot but be that this community will rise to an eminence that has been and will be enjoyed by no other people, because of the younger people of the community and the teachings that they receive in the missionary field which fit them for the great duties of life. They learn that it is themselves who are responsible to themselves and to God for that which they do in life. They learn the value of life. They know what time means. They are preparing for eternity. And I want to say, brethren and sisters, encourage the young people to go on missions.

Do not write discouraging letters to the missionaries as to your circumstances, if it can possibly be avoided; it affects them in their labors; it affects them in the finest duties they have to perform, not only there, but it seriously affects their future. So encourage them, keep them out there, though you may have to struggle to get the money to maintain them. If you do not send them as much as you have been in the habit of sending them, let them live on less; it can be done. There are young men in the mission, and young women, too, who are living on very much less than some others are using. And even though you have to restrict the amount you are sending them, make every effort to keep them in the missionary field.

And to you, brethren and sisters, here at home, I wonder if you are measuring up to the standards of the young men and women you are sending us to the missionary field? Do you have in your thoughts always that God is our Father, that you are amenable to him for every act of your lives? Do you know that we, as we stand, are great radio stations, sending off into the universe just what we are? What we think, what we say, what we do, is written in the great volumes of the future, and you will read it, you will hear again the things that you have said. The things that you have done you will know. The very thoughts of your hearts will be inscribed upon volumes that will live eternally.

Let us remember, brethren and sisters, our duty to God and these children of ours, who are his. They are the greatest heritage that God has conferred upon us. Let us be careful of them. Let us teach them in the right, so that when we as well as they stand in the presence of the great Judge and he shall say, "What is the judgment of this man?" and another shall say, "What is written on his heart?" that written on our hearts and lives may be the great desire to serve God, to labor for his children to help him in the great work which he has established in the earth, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

And I want to bear testimony to you that your sons and daughters are the finest objects in all the world. Those with whom I have the pleasure of laboring, I love almost as if they were my very own. Let us cherish them—not only those who are there but those who are here. Our neighbors' children are our children; because they are the children of God. Let us labor and save them and all mankind and enjoy the missionary spirit; for that is the spirit in which God expects all his children who know his truth to labor.

That we may so labor, that we may so live, that we may so help that we may redeem ourselves, our kindred, and help the Lord in this great work is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A soprano solo, "O Lord remember me," was sung by Beulah Huish.

ELDER ANDREW JENSON

(Assistant Church Historian.)

A few weeks ago I attended the dedication of the temple at Cardston, Alberta, Canada, and in speaking of the dedication of a temple, we Latter-day Saints naturally ask ourselves the question: Why do we build temples? And why did ancient Israel build temples? Did they erect sacred buildings for the same purpose that we build temples, or why was it that they, even when traveling in the wilderness, erected a tabernacle, which was dedicated to God as a temporary structure in which the children of Israel expected that God would be nearer to them than anywhere else on their camp ground?

The prophets of old frequently sought God on the tops of mountains, and sometimes they would seek him in forests, or even in the caves of the earth. Christ himself, on a certain occasion, took three of his disciples with him to the top of a mountain where the glorious transfiguration took place. At other times Christ went to the top of the Mount of Olives, near Jerusalem, and there poured out his heart in prayer and devotion to God, his Father. Yet the people of God have been trained to believe that while the Lord can be found anywhere, and that we cannot hide in any place, be it ever so remote, where the presence of Deity cannot be felt, there is, nevertheless, something very important attached to the matter of erecting a house to the name of the Lord, even in the building and dedicating of a meetinghouse, a tabernacle, and especially in the building and dedicating of a temple which is considered the holiest of all structures that we read of in the history of sacred architecture.

THE TABERNACLE

We find that the children of Israel, after they had crossed the Red Sea and were encamped in the wilderness of Sinai (where they spent 40 years), erected a sacred structure in which they could commune with God. The Prophet Moses had spent 40 days with the Lord on Mount Sinai and God had, with his own finger, inscribed on two tablets of stone the ten commandments which Moses brought down from the mountain; and, in order to have a safe place as a depository for these sacred tablets the "Ark of the Covenant" was made and the Tabernacle erected. The Tabernacle was only a tent, 45 feet long by 15 feet wide, pitched in an enclosure which contained about one quarter of an acre of land, as we measure land in America. Inside of that enclosure stood the Tabernacle, facing east. The Tabernacle itself was divided into two parts, of which one part, called the "Holy Place," was 30 feet long and 15 feet wide, while the other part, called the "Holy of Holies" (or Sanctum Sanctorum), was 15 feet in width, length and height—thus making a complete cube. This Tabernacle became known among the children of Israel as the "Tent of Jehovah;" it was also called the "Sanctuary" and the "Tabernacle of the Congregation." In that part of the Tabernacle called the "Holy of Holies" was placed the sacred box known as the Ark of the Covenant. It was only a small box about 4½ feet in length and about 2½ feet in width and height, but it was covered with gold. In this chest, made of shittim wood, the two tablets of stone were placed and the priests only had access to it.

TEMPLE OF SOLOMON

The Tabernacle was the abode of the Lord, so to speak, while the children of Israel traveled in the wilderness, and also for many years after they reached the promised land. But in due course of time, after the Canaanites had been subdued, and after the reign of the Judges and King Saul, King David, inspired of the Lord, became desirous of building a house unto God's holy name. The Lord at that time said that he had dwelt in a tent so far, but would accept of a house that might be erected to him, in which his presence might dwell. But David was not permitted to build the house, because of his transgression, and because he had been a man of blood and war. The Lord, however, directed that his son Solomon should build the house which in due course of time was done, and thus came into existence the Temple of Solomon.

Solomon's temple was only a small building measuring about 90 feet in length and 30 feet in width and height. Hence, it was not larger than many of our meetinghouses. But the children of Israel were proud of their temple because of the very costly ornaments with which it was embellished. The temple was practically covered with gold—not simply with gold leaf, but with gold plate—as we understand it, and was therefore a very costly building when finished, so much so that the enemies of Israel, such as Egyptians, Assyrians and Babylonians, were frequently tempted to take Jerusalem, that they might plunder the temple of its gold and silver, its precious stones and the precious golden vessels used for sacred ordinances in the building. In Solomon's temple, which stood upon Mount Moriah (one of the four hills upon which Jerusalem is built), the children of Israel worshipped about four-hundred years. Then the captivity came, when Nebuchadnezzar attacked Judah with his armies, took Jerusalem, destroyed the temple and carried away to Babylon the golden vessels and the costly ornaments which had been placed in the temple, some of which had been obtained from Tyre, Abyssinia, Egypt and other places.

TEMPLE OF ZERUBBABEL

But at the end of seventy years the children of Israel returned to their native land, by permission of King Cyrus. He told the children of Israel to go back to their land and there build a temple where they had formerly worshipped. So Israel, led by Zerubbabel and other valiant leaders, returned to the land of Israel and there built a new temple, which became known as the temple of Zerubbabel. But some of the older people who had seen the temple of Solomon, and now watched the erection of the new temple, wept because it was not so costly a building as the first temple was. It was a larger structure and contained more walls and more cubic feet by one-third than the temple of Solomon, but the people of Israel did not have the gold and silver and the precious stones to ornament it with. That is why the people wept, and not because the second temple was a smaller building than the first one.

TEMPLE OF HEROD

The people of Israel, after the return from captivity, enjoyed that second temple, known as the temple of Zerubbabel, for something like five hundred years. In the meantime the children of Israel had been deprived of their national independence, had been conquered by the Greeks and afterwards by the Romans, and finally the Romans appointed a certain man to be king of the Jews. He was a wicked man, very wicked, indeed, according to history, but he conceived of the idea, in order to become popular with the Jews, that he would rebuild the Jewish temple. He, therefore, pulled down some of the old walls, and erected them anew, better than before, and then finished them with lavish ornaments. We sometimes speak of this building as the third temple of the Israelites. In one sense it was only one temple, because the three successive buildings were erected upon the same site. Herod simply rebuilt, or re-constructed the former temple. It was this so-called Temple of Herod in which the Savior worshipped, and that is also the temple of which the Savior said that it would be destroyed, because of the wickedness of the people, and that not one stone should be left upon another of the building. Any visitor to Jerusalem today will find that the Savior's prediction has been fulfilled to the very letter. There is not one stone left upon another of the temple of Herod, nor of the temple of Zerubbabel, but there are remnants left of Solomon's work, certain portions pertaining to the original foundations still being in existence, and in the cavities under the foundation of the temple are the so-called Solomon's stables, where the great king is supposed to have kept his horses. Thus we find in Jerusalem today workmanship dating back to about 3000 years, while the temple of Herod, as you know, was destroyed by the Romans seventy years after the birth of the Savior.

NEPHITE TEMPLES

Next permit me to draw your attention to the Nephites who occupied the land of America. A certain statement made by Nephi and recorded in the Book of Mormon, has caused some criticism or discussion. The Nephites had been in America only a short time, and we estimate that there could not have been more than 300 souls of them altogether at the time that Nephi wrote the following:

"And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things; for they were not to be found upon the land; wherefore it could not be built like unto Solomon's temple. But the manner of the construction was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceeding fine."

Many of you brethren who are comfortably fixed financially, could, single handed, build a temple like Solomon's temple with your own means. You might be obliged to follow the example of Nephi in not furnishing the building with so much silver and gold or so many precious things as did Solomon, but I venture to say that it was quite possible for a small number of Nephites to erect a temple as large as that erected by Solomon, omitting the costly ornamentations.

It is also recorded in the Book of Mormon that the Savior, after his resurrection, appeared to the Nephites in "the temple in the Land Bountiful." We do not know how many more temples were erected by them. On my recent visit to South America, I saw a number of temple ruins, and I could not help thinking that perhaps I stood face to face with some of the walls and temple ruins which had been erected by the God-fearing Nephites over 2,000 years ago. Of course, I have no way of proving that these temples were erected by the Nephites, but such was my first thought when I saw the remnants of the temple of the sun in Cuzco, Peru, and other temple ruins elsewhere.

TEMPLES ERECTED BY LATTER-DAY SAINTS

The Latter-day Saints have erected eight temples since the organization of the Church, all of which have been dedicated and used for holy ordinances. Besides these completed temples, three other temple sites have been dedicated, upon one of which a temple is in course of erection, at Mesa, Arizona.

TEMPLE SITE AT INDEPENDENCE

The Church was not much more than a year old when the subject of temple building became popular among its members, as the Lord had commanded his people to erect such buildings. Almost immediately after the arrival of the first colony of Latter-day Saints in Missouri, a temple site was dedicated at Independence, Jackson county, August 3, 1831, but nothing further has hitherto been done toward the erection of that temple, as the Saints were expelled from Jackson county by mobs, in 1833. The temple site is now in the hands of the so-called Hedrickites, but the Saints expect in the future to erect a magnificent house of the Lord in Independence.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE

On the 1st of June, 1833, the Lord directed the Saints to build a temple at Kirtland, Ohio, and on July 23, 1833, the corner stones were laid. In less than three years after that the temple was completed and on March 27, 1836, it was dedicated by Joseph Smith the Prophet. One week later, April 3, 1836, the Savior and other holy personages appeared in the temple and committed sacred keys of the Priesthood to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. Among others, Elijah, the Prophet, appeared and delivered to the elders named, certain keys whereby the Saints since have been enabled to perform sacred ordinances for themselves and their friends and relatives beyond the veil. The Kirtland temple passed out of the hands of the Saints through persecutions of apostates and mob element. It is a rock building 80 feet long and 60 feet wide; the walls are 50 feet high and the top of the tower is 110 feet above the ground. This temple is situated on an elevation overlooking the surrounding country, about two and one-half miles from Willoughby and 18 miles from the center of Cleveland, Ohio.

TEMPLE SITE IN FAR WEST, MISSOURI

Ground was broken for a temple in Far West, Missouri, July 3, 1837, and the corner stones were laid July 4, 1838. Nothing further was done until April 26, 1839, when the twelve apostles, in fulfilment of a revelation, held a secret meeting or conference on the temple site and re-commenced the building of the temple by rolling a large stone up to one of the corners. This temple, which would have been 110 feet long and 80 feet wide, according to plan, was never built, because the Saints were driven from Missouri, in 1839. The site, however, is now owned by the Church.

NAUVOO TEMPLE

Soon after the Saints had settled in Illinois, preparations were made for the erection of a temple and the corner stones of such a building were laid in Nauvoo, Hancock county, Illinois, April 6, 1841. At the time of the Prophet's martyrdom the walls were up to the windows of the first story, but under the direction of President Brigham Young, the temple was so far completed that the attic story could be dedicated Nov. 30, 1845, and endowments were given in that part of the building during the winter of 1845-46. The whole building was privately dedicated by Joseph Young, April 30, 1846, and publicly dedicated by Orson Hyde, May 1, 1846. No endowment had been given in the Kirtland temple, but the ordinance of washing of feet was attended to in that building. Joseph the Prophet gave sacred endowments to certain leaders of the Church as early as May, 1842, or about four years prior to the completion of the Nauvoo temple.

There was no baptismal font in the Kirtland temple, but such a font was built in the basement of the Nauvoo temple and baptism for the dead performed in it as early as November, 1841. The Nauvoo temple, which was 128 feet long from east to west and 88 feet wide, with a spire 165 feet high, was burned by an incendiary October 9, 1848, and the walls were blown down by a hurricane, May 27, 1850. There is now not one stone left upon another of that magnificent edifice which cost the Church nearly a million dollars.

ST. GEORGE TEMPLE

Although a temple had been in course of erection in Salt Lake City since 1853, it was decided by the authorities of the Church to erect a temple in southern Utah, and the site for such a building was dedicated in St. George, Utah, Nov. 9, 1871, by George A. Smith, and the ground broken the same day. The mason work was commenced March 10, 1873, the lower part of the building was dedicated Jan. 1, 1877, and the whole building was dedicated April 6, 1877, by Daniel H. Wells. This temple is 141 feet long and 93 feet wide. The walls, built of red sandstone, measure 84 feet from the ground to the top of the parapets, and the tower is 135 feet high. Its erection represents an outlay of at least $500,000.

LOGAN TEMPLE

The temple site of Logan, Cache county, Utah, was dedicated May 18, 1877, and the corner stones were laid Sept. 17, 1877. Seven years were spent in its erection and the building was dedicated May 17, 1884. The Logan temple, which occupies an elevation in the upper part of the city of Logan, is 171 feet long and 95 feet wide. The walls are 82 feet high and there are two towers, the one on the east end being 170 feet and the one on the west end 165 feet high. The cost of construction is estimated at about $800,000.

MANTI TEMPLE

The temple site at Manti, Sanpete county, Utah, was dedicated by President Brigham Young April 25, 1877, and the ground was broken five days later, April 30, 1877. The corner stones were laid April 14, 1879, but prior to that date much work had been done and considerable means expended in preparing the ground, as the temple is built on the top of a hill, known since 1849, as Temple Hill, in the outskirts of the City of Manti. This temple, which is visible from nearly all parts of Sanpete Valley is, like the Logan temple, 171 feet long and 95 feet wide. The walls are about 85 feet high. The east tower is 179 feet and the west tower 169 feet high. The building, which was dedicated May 21, 1888, including the preparations of the ground, cost about $1,000,000.

SALT LAKE CITY TEMPLE

The temple site in Salt Lake City was selected by President Brigham Young, July 28, 1847, four days after the arrival of President Brigham Young in the Great Salt Lake Valley, and dedicated Feb. 14, 1853. The corner stones were laid April 6, 1853, the capstone placed in position April 6, 1892, and the building dedicated by President Wilford Woodruff, April 6, 1893. Hence, the erection of the Salt Lake temple took 40 years and the estimated cost is $4,000,000. The Salt Lake City temple is built of beautiful granite, quarried in the mouth of Little Cottonwood canyon, about 20 miles from Salt Lake City. It stands on the east half of the Temple Block and occupies a central position in Salt Lake City. This temple is 186½ feet long and 99 feet wide. It has three towers on the east and also three on the west end. The main tower, which is the central tower on the east end, is 225 feet high and is surmounted by a statue of the Angel Moroni. The Salt Lake temple is by far the largest and most costly temple building erected by the Latter-day Saints.

HAWAIIAN TEMPLE

On the occasion of a visit to the Hawaiian Islands of President Joseph F. Smith, Elder Reed Smoot, of the Council of the Twelve, and Bishop Charles W. Nibley, in the summer of 1915, the erection of a temple at Hawaii was discussed, and on the first of June, 1915, President Joseph F. Smith, in the presence of the two brethren named, selected and dedicated a spot at Laie, on the island of Oahu, for the erection of a temple. The matter was laid before the general conference, held in Salt Lake City, Oct. 3, 1915, and it was then decided by unanimous vote to erect a temple in Hawaii, in the interest of the Polynesian Saints. Work on the building was begun early in 1916 and the temple dedicated by President Heber J. Grant, Nov. 27, 1919. The Hawaiian temple is situated on an eminence commanding an unobstructed view of the ocean. It is built in the shape of a Grecian cross and measures 102 feet from east to west and 78 feet from north to south. The central portion of the edifice, which has no towers, rises to a height of 50 feet and the temple grounds are most beautifully ornamented with all kinds of tropical vegetation.

ALBERTA TEMPLE

A temple site at Cardston, Alberta, Canada, was dedicated July 27, 1913, by President Joseph F. Smith. Later the corner stone was laid, under the direction of Elder David O. McKay, of the Council of Twelve. The temple, which is built in the shape of a Maltese cross, measures 165 feet from north to south and the same distance from east to west. The walls are three feet thick and the height of the building 110 feet. Like the Hawaiian temple it has no towers. The sacred edifice was dedicated Aug. 26, 1923, by President Heber J. Grant, in the presence of many of the general authorities of the Church. This temple, known as the Alberta temple, occupies, like all other temples, of the Latter-day Saints, elevated ground, which overlooks much of the surrounding country, and has cost about $782,000. It is the first temple erected outside of territory belonging to the United States, and it is considered quite appropriate that a temple should be built in a British dominion, as the British Empire has contributed so many thousands of faithful converts to the great latter-day work.

ARIZONA TEMPLE

The site for a temple in Mesa, Arizona, was dedicated December 1, 1921, by President Heber J. Grant and is now in course of construction. The corner stone will probably be laid next month.

Now, just a word or two in conclusion: The Latter-day Saints having erected eight temples in these last days, and knowing now for what purposes temples in our day are erected they should be energetic in attending to the sacred ordinances which have been revealed. It is true that the children of Israel built their temples different to ours, as the ordinance work in them was done by men bearing the Aaronic Priesthood, while the temples built by the Latter-day Saints are officiated in by the Melchizedek Priesthood. Consequently, the internal arrangements of the temple of the Israelites were different to ours. The temple, erected in Kirtland, Ohio, was also different in the inner arrangements to those subsequently built, but commencing with the Nauvoo temple, and ending so far with the Canadian temple, the interior of all the temples are in most particulars the same, and used for holy ordinances.

May God help us to be true and faithful in the discharge of our duties, regarding temple work, so that we indeed may become saviors on Mount Zion and do what the Lord wants us to do in the temples, while we are trying also to be faithful in all things which the Lord has commanded us, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE S. TAYLOR

(Former President of the New Zealand Mission.)

After an absence of nearly three years from the midst of the Saints of Zion it is indeed a pleasure to have the privilege of once more associating with you and of listening to the inspiring talks which have been given by the leaders of this people.

I will report that the work in New Zealand is progressing in a satisfactory manner. In relation to the elders and sisters who are laboring there, Brother Young has relieved me of ten minutes of my time by describing the elders and sisters of that mission. You who have boys or girls there have occasion to be proud of them. Of all the things that have been spoken during this conference, my mind has been most impressed with the remarks of President Grant, made at the opening of this conference, wherein he urged upon the Latter-day Saints the necessity of family and secret prayers. I would call to your attention the fact that it was the prayer offered by the boy Joseph Smith which opened this dispensation of the gospel, which brought again to the world the knowledge which they had lost, a knowledge of God our eternal Father and of his son Jesus Christ, that they are living, immortal beings. And it was the prayers of that same boy, the Prophet Joseph Smith, which gave unto us the revelations which are contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. You will find, my brethren and sisters, in studying these various revelations, that they were invariably given in answer to prayer.

Your boys and girls who are laboring in the missionary fields are receiving knowledge that they know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God; they know that the leaders of this Church are inspired men, called of God to perform the labors of leading this people and teaching them the principles of eternal life.

I have been somewhat surprised, during my experience in that land, to find that quite a number of our boys have never been in the habit of attending meetings; so much have they neglected the opportunities that have been offered them that they have never heard an apostle, or one of the Presidency of the Church, deliver a sermon. Have any of you sons and daughters in this condition? It is doubtless true that many of you are living in remote villages, but question yourselves: have you sons and daughters who have never heard one of the general authorities of the Church raise his voice and address the Latter-day Saints? If so, you are neglecting your opportunities; you are depriving your sons and your daughters of blessings that of right belong to them.

During my labors in that land, I had the extreme pleasure of welcoming to the mission the first of the general authorities of the Church to visit that mission. The work of the Lord has been carried on there for some sixty-two years, and the Saints had prayed times without number that one or more of the general authorities of the Church might be sent, that they might have the pleasure and privilege of hearing their testimony, and we certainly rejoiced in the blessings that were brought to us when Elder David O. McKay of the Council of the Twelve, and President Hugh J. Cannon, paid a visit to that land. During the conference we have heard a number of references to certain inspired meetings that have been held in different parts of the earth. I can testify to you that during the visit of Elder McKay and President Cannon we had one of those inspired meetings. Those who had the privilege of attending that meeting will never forget the spirit which was poured out and the testimonies which were offered at that time.

I have rejoiced in the labor of the ministry. I know that I am engaged in the work of God, that this Church is the Church of Jesus Christ, and that only through obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel, as taught by the Latter-day Saints we can hope for an entrance into and an exaltation in the kingdom of God. I testify of these things, for I know that they are true. I testify that God has heard and answered my prayers and the prayers of the elders laboring in the New Zealand mission, and I testify unto you that if you will seek him in earnestness and in faith, he will answer unto you the desires of your hearts.

May we earnestly seek him in my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CARL E. PETERSON

(Former President of the Danish Mission)

It is now four years and a half since I had the privilege of attending our general conference, and it is over four years since I left for my mission to preside over the Scandinavian mission. Norway and Denmark, four years ago, were called the Scandinavian mission. In 1920, it was decided by the authorities of the Church to make two missions out of the Scandinavian mission, naming one the Norwegian and the other the Danish mission. Copenhagen has always been the headquarters for the Scandinavian mission from the very first time, seventy years ago, when Apostle Erastus Snow came to Copenhagen to open the gospel door to the Scandinavian people. From that time, until the mission was divided, Copenhagen has been the headquarters, and in one sense we may call it yet the headquarters, as far as Norway and Denmark are concerned, because the publications of the Church are still published in the Danish language, and both Norway and Denmark are supplied with the literature of the Church from Copenhagen, with the exception of a semi-monthly paper called Morgenstjernen which was published in Norway since it became an independent mission. However, in the first place, it was decided that the Scandinavian Star should be the periodical for the two missions, but for some reason permission was given to the Norwegian people to publish their own Star, in Christiania. Otherwise, Copenhagen is supplying the mission with all the other books.

We had a wonderful time, a glorious time, a time of rejoicing over in those countries. This is not my first experience in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark; because I have spent over thirteen years as a missionary in those countries, and hence, I am well acquainted with the conditions of the people, and their characteristics. The Scandinavian people are highly educated. They are progressive, independent, and intellectual; they have the best school system that can be found in the world; in fact, Denmark stands right at the top of the ladder as far as education is concerned. And I say to you that you cannot go from one end of Denmark to the other and find a normal boy or girl, eight years old, who cannot read and write. I say this because I know it is a fact.

We have enjoyed freedom and liberty to preach the gospel in Denmark as you have right here in the valleys of the mountains. We are not ridiculed. We are respected wherever we go. If you appear as respectable men and women, you will be respected and honored, and in particular by what is termed the better class of people. The most highly educated people are the most tolerant. With them you can have interesting conversations, even from the king on his throne. He is willing to listen to you if you get the privilege of visiting him. It may be connected with a great deal of difficulty and preliminaries on the part of the American minister before you get the privilege, but if you get it, you will be received by him and he will enter into conversation with you relative to the religious, the social, and economic conditions prevailing here in the valleys of the mountains. He will go into details as to the resources of our glorious state. He seems to be familiar with conditions existing here. And he will carry on an interesting conversation, whether you desire to speak to him in Danish, French, German, or Italian or in the English language. He speaks perfectly the English language. So you do not need to be afraid if you go over there, some of you, perhaps thinking that you are scholars—you need not be afraid to employ the most complicated sentences and phrases that you may desire to employ in your conversation, indicating to him that you are highly educated and capable, because he will understand every phrase and word that you can utter to him in the English language and will reply to you in just as beautiful and perfect English as if he had resided in the United States all his life. And we find the same characteristic all through the whole country of Denmark. The people are highly educated, they are tolerant, they are willing to listen to you if you have anything to give them. They care not whether you represent the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints or any other church; they will listen to you just as well because you are a "Mormon," as we are called, as if you were a member of any other church; it makes no difference.

The question with the Danish people is this: Has this person who introduces himself as a special representative of a church or of a nation anything in particular to impart to us that we are not familiar with? If he has something new, something interesting, something educational, something poetical, something elevating the Danish people will listen to it with the greatest attention, and you will never be disturbed in any town or village, but you will be protected. In fact, the highest authorities asked me the question whether we ever had any trouble. I said, "No, never." "But," said they, "if trouble ever should occur, let us know and we will send you all the necessary protection you desire; because you have just as much right and privilege to proclaim the doctrines that you believe to be correct as any other church or denomination."

O, there is so much to say regarding the Danish people! And I speak this because I am not Danish. If I were, you would say that I was egotistic, but because I am not, I speak without restraint; because I have found the Danish people, from the king on the throne to the most humble, to be endowed with these beautiful, admirable characteristics. And I say it to you who have ambitions to go to Denmark as representatives of the Church, and ask you to prepare yourselves, because you will go to a people who are highly educated and expect something from you when you come to them; and if you desire pleasure and satisfaction and joy in the ministry in Denmark, you must prepare yourself; for the time has come when the Danish people will never listen any more to illiteracy or ignorance. I say this to you from practical observation and experience. Whenever we have capable elders, people flock in great numbers to listen to them, and on the other hand when we are not favored with such representatives, the meetings are very small, and very few come, and they come only as a matter of duty. Hence, I say to you, "Let us prepare ourselves for the great work that lies before us, because the world is growing along intellectual lines and there are better people living today, yes, more intellectual people living in the world today, than ever before. There are more choice spirits coming to the world today than ever in the past, and there will be still more as the millennial dawn draws near at hand, because they will come here to enjoy the privileges of taking upon themselves bodies to be prepared for the great blessings in store for those who are permitted to enter into the glorious millennial reign of Jesus Christ when he shall come.

Well, I must close. God bless you. I thank you for your attention. I rejoice in having this privilege of attending this most enthusiastic and interesting conference. God's Spirit has been poured out upon all the congregations that I have attended during this conference. I pray God's blessing upon President Grant, upon all the authorities of the Church, and the Latter-day Saints, at home and abroad, that the day may speedily come when righteousness shall prevail upon the earth and truth shall be acknowledged from one end of the earth to the other, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

(Of the Presiding Bishopric.)

The afternoon has been well spent. We have heard from the previous speakers much that has been very profitable and it is not my intention to keep this congregation more than a few minutes. Were I to give way to my feelings, I would rather not speak, but as President Grant has sent over six of us to address you this afternoon, I feel that I should not be doing my duty unless I spoke to you.

This conference has been one that will be long remembered. We have been fed with the bread of life. We have received the word of God from those who hold the Priesthood, after the order of his Son, and they have given us instructions concerning our spiritual upbuilding and comfort, and concerning our temporal affairs. The scriptures have been opened to us; the experiences in the lives of our brethren have been given to us with profit and benefit, and I hope when we go home we shall do so determined to put into practice these instructions and take to our families the spirit of this great conference. Let me suggest that around our home fires in the evening, we tell our sons and daughters and others, our impressions of the conference, reciting the instructions and advice that we have received. It is very necessary that this be done, as not more than one out of every forty Latter-day Saints have heard the speakers during this conference.

"Mormonism" is to me a modern marvel; and how did it come? It came from that overwhelming idea of the boy prophet, Joseph, to go into the woods and ask his Father, in faith believing, which church should he join, and in that simple prayer of a boy, and the visit of the Father and the Son who came in answer to that prayer, has brought about this wonderful work of which we are a part. The Lord chose to take an unlettered boy unlearned and unsophisticated in the things of the world, but with a simple child-like faith to start his great work, and on that boy's prayer began the whole structure of "Mormonism."

There is something unique about this great work. It was not split off from any sect or party like nearly all the sects of the day have been, but it came direct from our Father in heaven when the set time had come to establish his great work in the latter days, and the message of the gospel appealed to the honest in heart; to those who were sweet in their lives and habits. Wherever the gospel went, they picked up these rugged, frugal, honest, God-fearing people, and under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord they accepted the gospel and upon them came the spirit of gathering. This gathering came to them as a part of the power and gift of this great work, and will come upon all those who accept the gospel in foreign lands.

Another part of this great miracle of "Mormonism" is to be seen right here in the valleys of the mountains, where men and women who previously held all shades of theories and ideas concerning religious matters, and many of them rooted deeply in the traditions of the world, on hearing the sound of the gospel, their minds were clarified; they understood its principles; they come here and mingle with one another until there has been welded here a solid body of people with the highest ideas of spirituality and religion that the world has yet seen.

We should be thankful that we have been permitted to come on the earth in this dispensation, when this wonderful gospel, with all its gifts and powers and blessings, has been restored, and we have been permitted to partake of these blessings. Mighty men and prophets of old, men who have headed dispensations and whose works are partly recorded in the Scriptures, have longed for this time; and some have desired to live in this dispensation, when the Lord intended to gather together the works of all dispensations and establish his Church, never more to be thrown down nor given to another people.

Let me ask you, as a bishop, to go home with determination to observe the Sabbath day and keep it holy before the Lord; to pay your tithes and offerings in the time and the season thereof; to sit down alone with your conscience once a month and see what the Lord has given you, and tithe it there and then. Remember your sacrament meetings, and renew your determination to be at the table of the Lord to partake of the emblems of his body and blood in remembrance of his sufferings, and renew your covenants with him. Nothing should interfere with this duty and privilege, for it is a privilege of every Latter-day Saint to be present at the Lord's table to partake of the sacrament and remember of his death and sufferings.

Let us continue that friendly, neighborly, helpful cooperation among the communities of the Latter-day Saints. Let us build up business on cooperative principles of mutual helpfulness and ownership. Let us get rid of some of our envy and pride and let us also get rid of the habit of spending in excess of our earnings. Let us avoid speculation, and if we have spare means to invest, let it be done in well established and well developed businesses and institutions. Let us free ourselves from the bondage of debt. The Lord never intended his people to be in bondage to any community or to any person. We can only keep out of bondage by keeping out of debt.

In the very nature of things we may expect panics. We may expect hard times. The chastening hand of the Lord will be felt throughout the world, but the man who is out of debt, who owns his home, who owns the land he cultivates, who is not borrowing, will not be seriously affected by panics.

Above all, let us train our young people, around the family table, in the principles of the gospel and the obligation we owe to the Lord and to one another as Latter-day Saints, remembering our secret prayers, as well as our family prayers night and morning, for, after all, it rests upon the fathers and mothers of the children of Zion to train them in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

Sometimes I think the world is ripening for destruction, but I do hope and pray the Lord will stay the avenging angels until the honest in heart throughout the world, particularly the House of Israel, have heard the gospel and have had the opportunity of gathering to Zion.

May the Lord bless us. May his spirit be with us. May this conference be one long to be remembered, for its deep spirituality and the influences that have come through associations with one another, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

An anthem, "Christ our Passover," solo by Miss Ellis Timpson, was sung by the choir. Benediction was pronounced by Willard C. Burton, of the Granite stake of Zion.

CLOSING SESSION

The final session of the Conference was held in the Tabernacle on Sunday afternoon, October 7, 1923, at 2 o'clock. President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir sang the anthem, "Prayer and Praise."

Invocation by Elder Nephi L. Morris, of the Salt Lake stake of Zion.

The choir sang, "The Pilgrim's Chorus."

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

My Brethren and sisters: I feel my dependence upon the Lord, as I stand before this vast congregation of Latter-day Saints. I have thought, since the beginning of the conference, that if answer were needed to the world, the people of the world who do not understand, justifying the faith and works of the Latter-day Saints, these great assemblies of people, which have come together on this occasion would be sufficient.

"IF THIS BE THE WORK OF MEN,"

Soon after the death and resurrection of the Redeemer of the world, when he had commissioned his disciples to preach the gospel to all creatures, and their ministry had fairly commenced, they were taken on one occasion and cast into prison. Then people came to the Jewish high priests and said to them: These men whom we cast into prison are preaching among the people, they are healing the sick and causing the blind of see, and working great miracles. So the disciples were cited to appear before their accusers and they took counsel that they might kill them. Then we are told here in Acts that,

"There stood up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space;

"And said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men.

"For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves; who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered and brought to naught.

"After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him; he also perished; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

"And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught:

"But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it."

WHY THE SPEAKER THOUGHT OF THIS QUOTATION.

I have thought of that scripture, my brethren and sisters, during the proceedings of this conference, and particularly so because of two clippings which I hold in my hand, taken from recent publications, one of them from a journal which is published by one of our most important religious denominations; the other, from a daily newspaper. From the first of these clippings I read as follows:

OPPOSING THE CHURCH

"Only those who have had occasion to live for a time in a part of the country entirely dominated by 'Mormons' are able to estimate, with any degree of accuracy, the strength and danger of 'Mormon' influence in our Western states. Never have I heard Christ preached, or the necessity of a personal Savior. Never do I hear of missionaries going out to convert people to Christ. They talk only of converting them to 'Mormonism.' In Sunday schools and Church schools emphasis is placed upon the Book of Mormon rather than upon the Bible, and in one text they are explicitly told that the Book of Mormon is higher authority than the Bible."

WHY MAKE RESPONSE?

In the clipping from the daily paper, if it is correct—and I have no doubt that it is—a man professing to be a teacher of righteousness, in a public address recently delivered, referring particularly to the proceedings at the memorial services recently held at the Hill Cumorah, declared that the "Mormon" Church was the most ignorant church in the world, and that the proceedings, upon this occasion, when the one-hundredth anniversary of the appearance of the Angel Moroni to Joseph Smith was commemorated, were all rot, rot, rot. When I read it I thought of this scripture which I have read from the Acts of the Apostles. To this congregation of Latter-day Saints I suppose it would appear unnecessary—in fact I have heard the word ridiculous used—that attention be paid to such statements as these which I have just quoted, and in fact that is true, but it nevertheless does at times become necessary for the Church to make response to statements of this kind, for there are people, many of them good people, people who love the truth and desire it, who are misled and strongly prejudiced because of statements such as this that I have quoted being made by men in whom they have confidence. If those charges were true, if it were true that the Church taught doctrines which led men and women away from Christ, rather than to him, if it were true that the Church encouraged or in any degree endeavored to keep its members in a condition of ignorance, in this age of enlightenment and intelligence in which we live, these criticisms would be justified.

DOCTRINES BEST EVIDENCE

But if on the other hand, they are not true, if they are not founded upon facts, persons making them assume very grave responsibility, for they either discuss questions upon which they are not informed, and in regard to which they are ignorant and thus convey improper impressions, or else they wilfully misrepresent the truth in order that they may prejudice their hearers. The doctrines of the Church are the best evidence of what the Church teaches. The Book of Mormon itself is the best evidence of what it is. The opinions of men may differ in regard to it, but when we take the book itself, when we carefully study it, when we understand its contents, we there find the evidence of its worth, or otherwise. I know that abstract statements, either mine in favor of the Book of Mormon, or yours in opposition to it, would not be sufficient to convince thoughtful minds, people who desire to know the truth of its contents, hence, we go to the Book of Mormon itself. I wonder, and I have often asked myself the question, why people professing to be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, people whose mission is to bring others to faith in the divinity of his mission, to convert the world to the great truth that he is its Redeemer, I have wondered why men who place so much stress upon this should object when other testimony comes, when other corroborating evidence is produced which justifies their attitude and confirms the very thing that they are teaching; and yet that condition has always existed.

Elder Roberts declared to us this morning, better than I can say it, the importance of this scriptural record, particularly to the people of these United States. It is important also, to the people of the world, for it is given to the world. It is of special importance to the scattered remnants of the house of Israel. It is of special importance to the Jew, for it comes as a message to him as well; and the whole burden of the message which it brings is that great truth that Jesus of Nazareth, born of the virgin Mary, crucified upon Calvary, and risen from the dead, is the Redeemer of the world. The title page of the book itself, if you will turn to it, my brethren and sisters, establishes this fact. This title page, by the way, was not written by Joseph Smith, it was inscribed upon the plates and translated by him as he found it, and it gives evidence to the world of the purpose in its preservation. "It is an abridgment of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites.—Written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile.

. . . An Abridgment taken from the Book of Ether also, which is a record of the people of Jared, who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven." The special purpose in the preservation of the plates, and the bringing forth of the record in this dispensation is declared to be: "To the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations." That is the purpose of it.

TESTIMONY FROM BOOK OF MORMON

At a time long ago, when the truth was brought into question, the Prophet Isaiah said: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." In the mouths of two or three witnesses shall the truth be established. So I am just going to turn and read here, first from the Book of Mosiah, the testimony which is borne in that book upon this important question:

"For behold, the time cometh, and is not far distant, that with power, the Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was, and is from all eternity, to all eternity, shall come down from heaven among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay, and shall go forth amongst men, working mighty miracles, such as healing the sick, raising the dead, causing the lame to walk, the blind to receive their sight. * * *

"And also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned. * * *

"And moreover, I say unto you, that there shall be no other name given nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent."

And yet intelligent men, through the publications which they send out to the world, declare that they have never heard Christ taught as a personal Redeemer by the "Mormon" people.

ANOTHER WITNESS

These words of Mosiah were uttered one hundred twenty-five years before Christ, before his birth into the world. Again another witness: A great concourse of people were gathered together upon this continent, discussing the words of the prophets who had declared that Christ, after his crucifixion at Jerusalem, should appear here, when they heard a voice as though it came from heaven declare the Only Begotten of the Father. Casting their eyes up towards heaven, they tell us that they saw a man descending and that he was clothed in a white robe. He came down, stood in their midst, stretched forth his hand, and said:

"Behold, I am Jesus Christ whom the prophets testified shall come into the world. Behold, I am the light and the life of the world, and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world."

Evidence again of the divinity of the mission of the Redeemer and his teachings in this book.

Now turn over again, long after his death, four-hundred years had elapsed, when Mormon, writing here in the book which bears his name, gives this witness: "And these things doth the Spirit manifest unto me; therefore I write them unto you all,"—addressed to us, the people who live here in the time when this record was to come forth:

"And for this cause I write unto you, that ye may know that ye must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ, yea, every soul who belongs to the whole human family of Adam; and ye must stand to be judged of your works, whether they be good or evil;

"And also that ye may believe the gospel of Jesus Christ, which ye shall have among you; and also that the Jews, the covenant people of the Lord, shall have other witness besides him whom they saw and heard, that Jesus, whom they slew, was the very Christ and the very God.

"And I would that I could persuade all ye ends of the earth to repent and prepare to stand before the judgment seat of Christ."

"The Lord hath commanded me, yea, even Jesus Christ."

My brethren and sisters, I might open this book at almost any chapter, almost any page, and read to you there the testimony of one prophet after another, from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem, six hundred years before Christ, until four hundred years after his coming, in which the whole burden of the appeal which they made to their people and the burden of the testimony that they bore, was that in the meridian of time the Redeemer should come, and that through him the bonds of death would be broken, and the people of the world redeemed from the transgression of Adam. It is a wonderful thing that in the face of all of this, men can, in some way, associate as they do the Book of Mormon as a publication tending to lead people away from Christ and from Christianity, despite its contents.

THIS IS CHRIST'S CHURCH.

The Presiding Bishop called our attention, yesterday, to the fact that this is Christ's Church; it bears his name. He opened, under the direction of the Father, this gospel dispensation. This Church was organized for the purpose that the world might know the Redeemer as he is, and be brought to repentance, redemption and everlasting life, through obedience to his gospel. It seems to me that this should set at rest the foolish statements made in this publication to which I have referred. I want the young men and women, if they are here, who are not familiar with the book, and I want the members of the Church who are not familiar with its contents, to know that there is no necessity for alarm because of the unjustifiable things that people say about the Church, for as I said before, the Church must be judged by what it is, not by what people say of it. Those words of Isaiah, uttered more than two thousand six hundred years ago, are just as applicable to us today as they were applicable to the people to whom he spoke: "If they speak not according to the law and the testimony, it is because there is no light in them."

AS TO IGNORANCE

Now, my brethren and sisters, just a word in regard to the statement made by this pretended teacher of righteousness, that the "Mormon" Church is the most ignorant church in the world. I want to ask the people of the world this one question: Can they point to an instance in the history of the past where ignorance and achievement and accomplishment have gone hand in hand? I am sure the answer would be, No. People do not advance in ignorance. People do not develop in ignorance. So far as I am aware, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the first religious body to declare that "the glory of God is intelligence," not ignorance; the first to declare that "men cannot be saved in ignorance." I do not mean to apply that to secular education, but it is only through the proper development of the intelligence of man, assisted by the gift of God, our Father, that men can come to understand his great purposes, the plan of human redemption which has existed from the beginning of time, and its application to us, who live in the dispensation of the fulness of times. I have thought of it as I have looked at these great congregations of people. Looking backward for one hundred years, does the accomplishment of the Church indicate the work of an ignorant people? It is not yet one hundred years since the Church came into existence. Its members at the time of its organization, were very few. It was in poverty, but thank the Lord, not in ignorance. From that small beginning, ask yourself the question: what has been its accomplishments? The people of the great congregation are here, and they are but a small representation of the whole, coming into these mountain valleys, to a place regarded as undesirable by all other people, not going to the Pacific Coast because of the gold that was there to lure people on, not to the great plains and fields of Oregon where it was evident that a country existed which was susceptible of a high degree of agricultural development, but stopping here in these valleys of the mountains, the Church gathered in its poverty. It gathered in from various nations, people in poverty, and from this spot reached out to the north and south, and the east and west, until towns and villages and hamlets sprang up. In every productive valley of the intermountain country, has intellectual development kept pace with the secular development which has occurred. We only need refer, and we do so with pride, to the educational status of the State of Utah today. There may be states which are slightly in advance, there may be states which have accomplished slightly more, but no other people under similar circumstances have developed a system of education equal to that which has been developed by the people of these intermountain valleys, by the Latter-day Saints who came here in their poverty. I say it without fear of successful contradiction.

AS TO PATRIOTISM AND DEVOTION

What does the record of their past history show, their record as devoted and patriotic citizens of the country in which they live? The great Mexican war—we would not regard it as a great war now, although in a sense it was at the time—came just when the Latter-day Saints were moving in their poverty with their families to seek a home here in the west. When the call came for men they gave them in the service of their country, a thing with which we are familiar, but which the world knows very little of. Those five hundred members of the Mormon Battalion accomplished a march which we are told is without precedent in the history of the world, the circumstances under which it was accomplished considered.

The war of the Rebellion came, and the Latter-day Saints remained steadfast to the government, offered and gave their services. The war with the Philippines came, the "Mormon" people did their full share in bearing the burdens of that war.

Then came the great World War. The government asked Utah for seven hundred forty-six men for the United States Army. She furnished two thousand, two hundred forty-four men. The government asked for one hundred twenty-six men to go into the marine service and the State furnished three hundred forty-six. Independent of this, Utah furnished one battery of artillery composed of one thousand five hundred men. The total number of men asked for was eight hundred seventy-two in all branches of the service, and the State furnished four thousand eight hundred thirty-one men. The Red Cross asked us for three hundred fifty thousand dollars, and we gave them five hundred twenty thousand dollars. The first Liberty Loan apportioned us six million, five hundred thousand dollars, and we took nine million, four hundred thousand dollars of that issue. The second Liberty Loan asked us to take ten million dollars and we took sixteen million, two hundred thousand dollars. The Young Men's Christian Association and other similar organizations asked us for one hundred thousand dollars, and we gave them one hundred five thousand dollars. The request was made that we furnish seventeen million one hundred thousand dollars, and we gave twenty-six million two hundred ninety-one thousand dollars. The third Liberty Loan came after this in which an equal proportion was given. This does not include the liberal contributions made by the auxiliary associations of the Church. It does not include the large amount of wheat which had been accumulated by the Relief Societies of the Church, the only incident of such a character that occurred in the war, or could occur in the world, for there was no other body that had so gathered together a large quantity of wheat that could be turned over in bulk in case of emergency as was done at that time.

NOT THE WORKS OF IGNORANCE

I quote these figures, my brethren and sisters, as a part of the evidence. The evidence, the law and the testimony are here to show that the works of the Latter-day Saints have not been the works of ignorant people. I myself have gone into a country where, for three hundred years there had existed what was called a high degree of civilization. I did not see a plow that was not made of wood and being pulled by oxen, with the yoke lashed to their horns. I did not see a modern wagon, but the old-fashioned carts and the old-fashioned plows, with which people plowed and bore their burdens in the valley of the Nile, thousands of years ago. Twenty years after the time that eight small "Mormon" colonies were established in the north of Mexico, they had accomplished more, looking to the advancement and development of that people in the introduction of modern methods of agriculture, modern agricultural machinery, improved varieties of fruits and grains, than had been accomplished before since the day of the conquest; evidence sufficient of the intelligence, the integrity, and the industry of the Latter-day Saints. "By their fruits ye shall know them." That has always appealed to me as a definite and certain law. Ignorant people do not accomplish the work of intellectuals, and vice versa.

So I wonder what can be the mental process by which a man reaches the conclusion that the Latter-day Saints are the most ignorant people in the world. It is not a new thing; it has been going on since the beginning of time, since the organization of the Church, and I expect will continue to go on just the same; and that is another thing that the Book of Mormon here tells us will occur, and another one of the evidences of the truth of this book; for it seems to provide for just about every criticism that can be made. Moroni, the last man to write in it, says:

"The Lord hath commanded men, yea, even Jesus Christ.

"And I said unto him: Lord, the Gentiles will mock at these things, because of our weakness in writing; for, Lord, thou hast made us mighty in word by faith, but thou hast not made us mighty in writing; for thou hast made all this people that they could speak much, because of the Holy Ghost which thou hast given them:

"And thou hast made us that we could write but little, because of the awkwardness of our hands. * * *

"And when I had said this, the Lord spake unto me, saying: Fools mock, but they shall mourn; and my grace is sufficient for the meek, that they shall take no advantage of your weakness."

This has been exemplified many times in the history of the Church.

This book, as has been testified before, is the very embodiment of the spirit of Americanism. We hear a lot about that in these days. In its simplicity it lays down those fundamental principles of democracy upon which every republican form of government must be based and founded. It teaches us that there should be no king to dictate upon this land. It teaches us that the will of the people, the voice of the people shall govern, and that minorities should submit to majorities. It teaches us also that the time may come when majorities will go wrong, "and when that time cometh," saith the Lord, "then my judgments shall hang over this people."

FEET UPON SAFE GROUND

Now my brethren and sisters, where differences of opinion exist, whether it be in regard to our temporal affairs or whether it be in regard to spiritual affairs, or faith in God, by which we hope to attain to eternal life in his presence, there must be some basic law to which we can refer and from which there can be no further appeal, which is the end of controversy; otherwise I may assert and you may deny, and controversy would never cease. As it applies to our civil affairs, the temporalities and their control, that tribunal is the civil law, the law which we ourselves have made. As it applies to God and his purposes, the law is his written and spoken word. From it there can be no just appeal. So in civil affairs we honor and respect and uphold the civil law, and in things which pertain to the word of the Lord we adhere to his written word, as it is contained here in the Bible and in the Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon has been before the world now for nearly one hundred years. No one has ever pointed out an error in principle that is in it. Men may ridicule, they may scoff, but that does not constitute argument, nor evidence. They are the last arguments to which the vanquished always resort—ridicule, abuse, misrepresentation; and I suppose they will be applied to us.

So I feel that our feet are upon perfectly safe ground, that all that has been said in testimony of the divinity of the mission of Joseph Smith, and the bringing forth of the Book of Mormon, is true. I know it to be true, the opinions of men to the contrary notwithstanding. The time will come when men will know it to be true—just as the last words in the book tell us that it will. Let me read this last communication to conclude my remarks. These are the words of Moroni:

A CALL TO COME TO CHRIST.

"I exhort you to remember these things: for the time speedily cometh that ye shall know that I lie not, for ye shall see me at the bar of God; and the Lord will say unto you: Did I not declare my words unto you, which were written by this man, like as one crying from the dead, yea, even as one speaking out of the dust?

"I declare these things unto the fulfilling of the prophecies. And behold, they shall proceed forth out of the mouth of the everlasting God; and his word shall hiss forth from generation to generation.

"And God shall show unto you, that that which I have written is true.

"And again I would exhort you that ye would come unto Christ, and lay hold upon every good gift, and touch not the evil gift, nor the unclean thing.* *

"Yea, come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness; and if ye shall deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfect in Christ; and if by the grace of God ye are perfect in Christ, ye can in nowise deny the power of God.

"And again, if ye by the grace of God are perfect in Christ, and deny not his power, then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ, which is in the covenant of the Father unto the remission of your sins, that ye become holy, without spot.

"And now I bid unto all, farewell. I soon go to rest in the paradise of God, until my spirit and body shall again reunite, and I am brought forth triumphant through the air, to meet you before the pleasing bar of the great Jehovah, the Eternal judge of both quick and dead. Amen."

Solo by Louise Watson, "The words of our God endureth forever."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

There are five members of the First Council of Seventy that have not had the opportunity of speaking to us, and I had the names of some of our honored returned missionaries who have presided in some of the foreign missions, on my list. Time will not permit of our brethren speaking to us, as I am sure they would like to do, but we are going to stay here—those of us who are not so hungry that we are anxious to get away—until we hear from these brethren of the First Council of Seventy.

I have been impressed with the testimonies that have been given during the sessions of this conference. I believe firmly not only in the gospel of Jesus Christ but in the destiny of the Government of the United States. I am impressed more and more with the truth that the advent of the Government of the United States in 1789 was the great fore-runner of the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I remember reading of the sinking of a German submarine by an American boat, in 1918; and the sailors and soldiers of the German government were finding a watery grave. The American boat put to and ran up on one of the masts a signal with the words: "Wait, we are coming to save you." And, sure enough, the American sailors, in life-boats, put towards the spot where the German submarine had been hit, and, in a few moments, the German sailors were placed in the life-boats and brought safely to an American boat, given food, and were assured that their lives would be spared. In commenting on this incident, the President of the United States declared that the policy of the American army and the American navy should be to spare German lives wherever they could.

I have often thought of that event in our history, because I believe it is a symbol of Americanism. I know it to be the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the spirit of true Americanism.

In reading recently the Constitution of the United States, I thought of the eloquent words of James Russell Lowell when he was at the court of France. Guizot, the French statesman, said to him: "How long will the Government of the United States endure?" And the reply of James Russell Lowell was: "Just so long as the ideals of the founders of this government endure." This incident has been told in the remarkable letters of the great statesman Guizot, and it is something for us to remember.

I believe that the English speaking race, represented by Great Britain and the United States, will be the race that will bring peace to the world. The United States will work hand in hand with Great Britain, the nation that has stood for freedom and liberty—from the days of the Witenagemot, or the assembly of the wise men, of Alfred the Great, when that great king declared that the laws of England should be based upon the Ten Commandments. The Magna Charta, the Petition of Rights, the Bill of Rights, the Constitution of the United States and its forerunner, the Declaration of Independence, all are the expressions of a liberty-loving race, which is intuitive. It is stamped in the very soul of the English speaking race. From time of old to the present, the English people—the British and the Americans—have stood for the highest ideals of liberty and freedom and are standing for them today.

Chief Justice Marshall on one occasion declared that the reason the Americans understand liberty and freedom is because their laws must be the expression of the economical, social and intellectual ideals of the people. When the Latter-day Saints came to these valleys the very first law was an economic one. It created roads and bridges. And another law established the first university west of the Missouri river. It was a law that was an expression of the intellectual life of the people, and I believe with all my soul that the words of Chief Justice Marshall have been exemplified in the history of the "Mormon" people. Their laws have always been just; they have been expressions of the lives of the people who have tried to live right, who have aimed to live justly and up to the very highest ideals that a God-given religion could place in their hearts. I believe that the "Mormon" people, in a sense, were the forerunners of that great ideal which today our nation stands upon. The Constitution of the United States was not a league of friendship, but it was a document that bound the states together in one great union; and though it took many years to work this idea out, and finally a great civil war to maintain it, it was the ideal of Washington, and of Hamilton, and Chief Justice Marshall and Abraham Lincoln.

Following down that early period when the Church was organized and which grew in the wilderness, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, Orson Pratt, and the host of other Americans who had come from New England stood for that expression of liberty. The Constitution of the United States is the embodiment of the organic law of the land, which is the highest expression of our civic and political liberties, whereby we live under government and whereby we come to know equality and justice.

The Latter-day Saints stand for Americanism in the true sense of the term. A great French economist declares that the five institutions of civilization are the home, industry, the state, the school, and religion as expressed in the church.

I bear you my testimony this day that our history proves, that we as Latter-day Saints have not only taken a stand firmly for the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence but have given meaning to those great documents. The pioneer history of this state declares that we stand for the five institutions of civilization, because by them and through them we may go back to our God, for one of these institutions is religion, and our religion, as we understand it, and as we hold it sacredly in our souls, comes in its purity, in its dignity, in its power from God whom we worship. And so, we are Americans, and the words of Lowell will be true so long as America is Christian; so long as we live to the ideals of our fathers America will live and it will be preserved forever and ever. The Abby Genty, the great French lecturer and scholar of the time of the French revolution, when he was noticing the beauty and grandeur of the new American government, in contrast to the government of France, declared that the new nation across the Atlantic would not only be the nation that will usher in the new political and civic liberty of all the world, but it will be the nation to re-establish the gospel of peace and the laws of Jesus Christ. Amen.

We have been instructed, admonished, and at times thrilled, by the exceptionally good talks we have heard, even from the beginning of this conference. Our thoughts have naturally turned, at this centennial season, to the circumstances connected with the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Those not of us have tried to account for the phenomena of "Mormonism" upon some theory other than the true one, just as they attempted to explain away the Savior and his works. The argument against the Savior has been briefly stated and answered thus:

"Upon the theory that Christ was a mythical person, the result of the fancy and fairy stories of his disciples after his death, then we must conclude that the leader of the greatest movement for the converting, purifying, inspiring and uplifting of the race which the world has ever known is the product of myth, fancy, overwrought imagination, and pious disposition. If this be true, then it is also true that error is better than truth, and the race moves upward under the beneficent influence of falsehood. But this absurd and untrue theory which forces such conclusions must be rejected."

The same argument may be applied to the rise and growth of so-called "Mormonism," said by Professor George Trumbull Ladd, of Yale University, to be one of the most remarkable phenomena of the Nineteenth century. It has been peculiar in the way it has announced foundation principles, contrary to the belief held by the world. Let me illustrate: Judge Samuel Chase, a United States Circuit Judge, in passing the death sentence upon one John Fries, convicted for treason, at the beginning of the last century, used this admonition, which fairly expresses the Christian doctrine as held at that time, as to repentance after death. Said Judge Chase to the prisoner:

"I suppose you are a Christian, and as such I address you. Be assured, my guilty and unhappy fellow citizen, that without serious repentance of all your sins, you cannot expect happiness in the world to come; and to your repentance you must add faith and hope in the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ. These are the only terms on which pardon and forgiveness are promised to those who profess the Christian religion. Let me, therefore, again entreat you to apply every moment you have left in contrition, sorrow and repentance. Your day of life is almost spent and the night of death fast approaches. Look up to the Father of mercies and God of comfort. You have a great and immense work to perform and but little time in which you must finish it. There is no repentance in the grave, for after death comes judgment, and as you die so must you be judged. By repentance and faith you are the object of God's mercy; but, if you will not repent and have faith and dependence upon the merits of the death of Christ, but die a hardened and impenitent sinner, you will be the object of God's justice and vengeance. If you will sincerely repent and believe God has pronounced his forgiveness, there is no crime too great for his mercy and pardon."

This expresses the supposed Christian doctrine that "as the tree falls, so must it lie." Judge Chase afterwards became a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Enemies sought his downfall, and he was impeached and tried before the United States Senate. At least two counts in the indictment against him grew out of the trial of the Fries case; but there was not one word of criticism as to this sectarian doctrine just quoted. I thought last evening, as we listened to the beautiful compilation of our scriptures by Brother Widtsoe and presented in the oratorio, what a striking contrast between the old dogma of no repentance after death and our present conception of the Spirit of Elijah.

They have sought to explain away so-called "Mormonism" upon various theories. Years ago we had to meet in discussion of the myth of the "Manuscript Found." To-day, we need pay no attention to that. For example, in the late popular history of the United States, issued from Washington, D. C., in eleven volumes by the American Educational League, with Doctors Willey & Rines as the learned editors, no attention is given to this old "Spaulding romance" except to consign it to the rubbish heap. As an illustration of the futility of the efforts of those who fight the Church, it must seem like the irony of fate to such men as Theodore Schroeder—a lawyer of this city of a score of years ago, who spent much time and money in developing the false theory that Sidney Rigdon was the author of the Book of Mormon,—that his writings should be cited as authority for the rejection of the Spaulding myth but his own theory not so much as mentioned by the United States history referred to.

We heard this afternoon from the article read by President Ivins the statement that the Latter-day Saints place reliance in the Book of Mormon. Well, we have learned that it does throw light upon the Hebrew Scriptures. For instance, in the Beatitudes: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The Book of Mormon version is: "Blessed are the poor in spirit who come unto me, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." And again, "Blessed are they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." The Book of Mormon adds, "with the Holy Ghost." And so we might go on with several other examples. During the past month the Literary Digest presented four translations of the Beatitudes in parallel columns. It seemed to me that no additional light or beauty are thrown upon the earlier translations; and yet through the Prophet Joseph we have the significant version I have referred to.

In connection with what President Grant said, in reference to spiritual manifestations at certain European conferences, it is easy for me to understand how that could be. If I may have a moment more, I would like to give a personal testimony of coming into the presence of the late President Joseph F. Smith, on one occasion at a quarterly conference held at Logan. I had just returned from a long itinerary and was as weary as it has ever been my experience to be—both in body and in mind. As a result of the influence of the Holy Spirit which was enjoyed by President Smith and his audience, at the close of that meeting I was as free from all sense of weariness as I had ever been. In a studied effort I could not detect the slightest indication of fatigue either in body or mind. My time is up. May the Lord bless us, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

My brethren and sisters, when I look out upon the faces of this vast congregation, I am deeply impressed with the power and the influence that seems to be felt by all who are present. There must be something peculiar about the Latter-day Saints, for whenever they gather together there is a power and an influence that is felt by all who are present, that is peculiar to us. I have been led to reflect: what is it that is different from the gatherings of those who are not of our faith and the gatherings of a nature other than these religious conferences? And the answer has come to me: It is because the great multitude of people that congregate, that come together upon these occasions are men and women who have faith in God and have repented of sin, who have received a remission of those sins in the waters of baptism and after that they have received the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. It is then the presence of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of God, that animates these general assemblies of the Latter-day Saints and characterizes them as different from all other gatherings of people throughout the entire world; for in no other church are there people who have been thus blessed and favored of the Lord, for they have not received the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Among the different things that were contained in the message of the Angel Moroni to the Prophet Joseph Smith on that notable night of September 21, 1823, was the reference to the holy scriptures, wherein it was set forth that the day was nigh at hand when Elijah the Prophet would come and restore the keys of the turning of the hearts of the children to the fathers and the hearts of the fathers to their children. When we realize how completely this has been fulfilled, it adds to the numerous testimonies which we have received of this great work of the Lord. Surely the Prophet, at that early period of his life, could not have comprehended to any marked extent, the great work that was involved in those words. Temples have been erected and work has been done in those temples for millions of people. We build these places and we call them holy, erected to the name of the Lord and dedicated unto his service.

The people who have been blessed by receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost are called Latter-day Saints. What do we mean by Saint? We mean a sanctified being, or a holy being. Faith in God, repentance from sin, baptism by immersion for the remission of sin and the reception of the Holy Ghost will make them worthy of the name by which the Lord permits them to be called. Do we have that name because we are sanctified beings? Oh, no; but because we have started out right and are in the process of sanctifying ourselves and preparing ourselves to dwell in the presence of God. A sanctified being, a holy being, is one whose sins have been remitted, one who has been made holy by receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Wherever the Lord plants his feet it becomes a sacred and holy place. What was it that the Lord said to Moses at the time of his appearance in the burning bush: "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Only those who are holy are permitted to stand upon holy ground. Strangers who come into our midst wonder why they may not go into the temples that we have erected. They marvel that the doors are closed against them. Many who have been in our temples before their dedication have also wondered why they may not continue to go there. Strangers do not always understand it, but this is the reason: Because they have not been sanctified by having sealed upon them the gift of the Holy Ghost. This permission is given only to those who have received this marvelous gift, and many who have received the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, unless they have retained the remission of their sins by living right, are not permitted to stand upon that holy ground. Who then shall enter into the temple of the Lord? I find an answer to that question in holy writ, where a question is asked somewhat similar in its nature:

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place?

"He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

"He shall receive a blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

Brethren and sisters, it becomes necessary, then, that we not only receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that we retain it by retaining the remission of our sins. Let us then, be prepared and worthy to go into these sacred houses, and carry out our part as suggested in the message that was given to us through the Angel Moroni, when the Prophet Elijah should come and enable us to go into these houses and perform the labors, not only for the dead, but also for the living.

God help us to be worthy, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SEYMOUR B. YOUNG

(Of the First Council of Seventy.)

My brethren and sisters, I have been deeply impressed with the remarks of my brethren during this conference. The impression was made at the beginning of the service in the remarks of President Heber J. Grant, and so on each day, each session has added to my pleasure and happiness in listening to the wonderful testimonies that have been borne. I was reminded this afternoon of the chivalry of the American people, of the American soldiers and the American sailors during the Spanish-American war, at the great naval battle in San Diego harbor, at the conquering of the Spanish navy, and the taking of many prisoners. During the very heat of that terrible naval engagement the Spanish ships, many of them, were set on fire and the sailors were seen clinging to the rigging and to the bows and bulwarks of the vessels, and jumping overboard to save them from being burned. The American sailors began to shout for victory, but Admiral Schley issued the command that they should cease shouting, for could they not see their fellow men clinging to burning vessels and going down into the ocean to their death! So the shouting and the hurraing ceased. After the close of the war, thirteen thousand Spanish prisoners were found in the possession of the American forces, and by order of that Christian gentleman, President William McKinley, those prisoners were taken to a place of safety and there fed during the winter, kept in good comfortable quarters, and in the following spring, placed in American vessels and conveyed home to their own country to the shores of Spain without cost to themselves or to the country from which they came. That was an ideal of President McKinley. I have always felt to honor him as a true Christian gentleman. He made a journey across the plains and through this western country, and had appointments to speak in different places in the West, Salt Lake among the rest, but while in California, his wife was taken severely ill, and he had to hurry home, and therefore his engagements were canceled. I went to Ogden to see him as he passed through that city, and I heard him speak a few words from the rear platform of his car. I was still more impressed with the dignity, with the scholarship and with the tenderness of that great man, the President of the American Republic.

Now as to the gospel:

In fulfilment of the prediction of Malachi, as quoted to the Prophet Joseph Smith by the Angel Moroni, Elijah the Prophet appeared to

Joseph Smith in the Kirtland temple, and committed to him the keys of the restoration of the ordinances for the dead. Today we are witnesses that there are six temples now finished and dedicated in which ordinances for the dead are ministered. On the 26th day of July, two days after the pioneers landed in this country, it is said that President Brigham Young, the great pioneer of the west, placed his cane on the position on this block where the temple now stands and said: "On this spot we will build the temple of the Lord," and although he lived to lay the cornerstone and dedicate it at the beginning of the building, he did not live to see its completion, but he led in the dedication of the first temple that was completed in Utah. That was in 1875, if I remember rightly, the temple of St. George was dedicated, and he presided at the dedicatorial services. Then further on came the dedication of the Logan temple, under President Taylor, then the dedication of the Manti temple, under the President of the Twelve, Wilford Woodruff; then came finally the fulfilment of that wonderful vision of President Woodruff's. He said in relating it, that some years before the Salt Lake temple was finished, he saw himself seated on the front steps of the temple. President Brigham Young came and said to him: "Brother Woodruff, take the keys and unlock the doors of the temple, and bid the people enter." President Woodruff in relating this at the dedicatorial services of the temple, said he was very much surprised that he should be commissioned to dedicate the Salt Lake temple, while President Taylor was still living; but when the temple was finished, in 1893, President Taylor had passed away to his eternal and great reward, and President Woodruff had been elected and ordained President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, under the inspiration of the Lord Almighty. Then he said he could see why he was commissioned to dedicate that holy house, years before its completion. President Woodruff dedicated two temples, one at Manti and the one in Salt Lake City. President Taylor dedicated the Logan temple; and now recently our beloved President Heber J. Grant has led in the building and the finishing and the dedication of two other temples, one on the Hawaiian islands, and one in Canada. I pray with all my heart that he may live to dedicate very many more. When I visit our temple here in Salt Lake, which I take the opportunity of doing occasionally, I rejoice to see the anxiety that seems to possess the people in prosecuting this work for the redemption of their dead kindred. This temple and, I believe, all the other temples are filled to their capacity in this glorious work of redemption for the dead. I am satisfied that this is but another great evidence of the truth of the gospel and of the divine organization of the true Church of Christ under the inspiration of the Prophet Joseph Smith. These great events of building new temples and dedicating them, and the gathering of the people to these sacred buildings to perform their duties and their obligations to the dead, are additional evidences to me of the truth of "Mormonism."

But beyond and far greater is the knowledge that I possess in my own heart, that the Lord has revealed to me in the inmost recesses of my soul, the truth of the everlasting gospel as proclaimed now by the Latter-day Saints. The divine mission of the Savior, the great mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, are facts brought to my mind as vividly and as earnestly and as truly as the thought and the knowledge of my own existence. I know today that God lives, I know that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world; I know that Joseph Smith was divinely inspired as a prophet of God. May the Lord increase this knowledge for us all, I pray, and make our testimonies bright and real and sure, that we may be encouraged to go on with the great work in which we are engaged, until the redeeming power of the gospel of Jesus Christ shall reach the uttermost parts of the earth, and every one of our Father's children shall have the privilege of receiving these great truths, and thus bring to pass their redemption, I pray, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I regret exceedingly to have had to limit the time of any of the brethren in these conferences. I am sure that every speaker, judging by myself, would have been pleased to occupy more time in talking to the Saints. When we stand up to speak and the Lord blesses us with the light and inspiration of his Spirit, it is rather a difficult matter not to want to talk and keep on talking. I confess freely, that it is very seldom when I am addressing the Latter-day Saints, that I do not have very many ideas come into my mind that I would like to express; but I feel the necessity of not continuing my remarks, as a rule, longer than I have done in the past. I therefore regret that it is not possible to give the brethren the opportunity and the chance to more fully express themselves; but I am sure that many of them who have been limited to ten minutes have done themselves proud, under the inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord, in testifying to us during the short time that was allotted them.

Now to the law and testimony as we believe in it.

BELIEF OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

"We believe that all religious societies have a right to deal with their members for disorderly conduct, according to the rules and regulations of such societies; provided that such dealings be for fellowship and good standing; but we do not believe that any religious society has authority to try men, on the right of property or life, to take from them this world's goods, or put them in jeopardy of either life or limb, or to inflict any physical punishment upon them. They can only excommunicate them from their society, and withdraw from them their fellowship."

"We believe that men should appeal to the civil law for redress of all wrongs and grievances, where personal abuse is inflicted or the rights of property or character infringed, where such laws exist as will protect the same; but we believe that all men are justified in defending themselves, their friends and property, and the government, from the unlawful assaults and encroachments of all persons in times of exigency, where immediate appeal cannot be made to the laws, and relief afforded."

I spent considerable time while Brother Ivins was preaching, looking through a lot of old papers for a few words that I wanted to read to this congregation. It fell to my lot to be honored by playing a game of golf with the President of the United States. It also fell to my lot, when a very noted attorney, Judge James A. Emery, came here to make a very important speech as an industrial expert, to be invited to play a game of golf with him. And after playing that game of golf, I had the privilege of hearing him deliver his speech at the Country Club. He expressed pleasure in coming back to Utah and he announced—I do not know that I can give his words—that the people of Utah stood like a great rock in the ocean against the waves of discontent.

A ROCK OF CERTAINTY.

I just wish to read one little tribute from his address:

"In renewing an old acquaintanceship comes a peculiar source of inspiration. I have been impressed with the continuing evidence which the light of Utah has had in the development of the state. Tell me what a man thinks and I will tell you what he does. This community has stood like a rock of certainty and decision in the midst of radicalism and discontent. Utah has stood as one of the cornerstones of reliability in the American political structure."

That is from one of the great lawyers of the United States. After his speech, I had the pleasure of riding to the Country Club in the automobile with him, and afterwards of having a little ride to enjoy some of the scenery. The gentleman owning and driving the automobile, was not a member of our Church, but in complimenting judge Emery upon his magnificent address, he said: "Credit is due to the 'Mormon' people for not defending those things that are contrary to the fundamental laws, and the sustaining of the institutions of our country," or some words to that effect; and the Judge said: "Why, everybody knows that." I might add: except some people here at home.

We hear a great deal about the wonderful influence of the "Mormon" priesthood and the tyranny of it; and this reminds me of a little incident in my own life. When I was a vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce and a certain gentleman was made the secretary, I suggested that we have that gentleman write a pamphlet upon the resources and attractions of Utah, inviting people to come here and make permanent homes—but of course we do not want anybody to come, so we are told!

FALSE AND TRUE PROPAGANDA.

And he wrote that pamphlet, and I suggested that after the cost of setting up the type had been returned and we had had our investment returned, that this man have an increase of salary because of the selling of the pamphlet. A few months later he thanked me for having made that motion, because he said that he was getting $20 or $25 per month from it and it was adding to his meager salary. I said: "It is contemptible for any man to receive thanks from his fellow-man in a favor that he did not extend. I did not nominate you, and suggest that you write that pamphlet because I wanted to increase your salary, although I did announce that it would increase it. I nominated you to write that pamphlet because I knew you would have to tell the truth in your writing, and that the truth printed in that pamphlet would brand the articles that you had written upon this city years ago as a United States official, as plain, simple lies. That is why I nominated you, sir. Among other things, you said that the "Mormon" Priesthood controlled the people in every city, in every home, and all over this Territory, and that they were getting rich by robbing the people, in the articles you wrote for eastern publication. In this pamphlet you say that in no other state or territory of the United States are such splendid opportunities for settlers to be found as in Utah and that the city, community and territorial taxes are lower than in any other state or territory in the Union. What a pity that these robbers could not be exported to rob other people by reducing their taxes!" About that time he looked as if he would like to hit me instead of thanking me. I decided that I was quick enough to dodge if he should attempt to do so.

AUTHORITY OF PRIESTHOOD.

Now, with reference to the authority of the Priesthood of God and how it is to be exercised: The Prophet of the living God was imprisoned in Liberty jail and there was a desire that he should be tried and executed; but all the prison doors in all the world can not prevent the revelations of the mind and the will of God coming to those that are entitled to receive them; and while in Liberty jail the Prophet Joseph Smith received one of the very greatest of all the great revelations from God that are contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. I read from Section 121:

"How long can rolling waters remain impure? What power shall stay the heavens? As well might man stretch forth his puny arm to stop the Missouri river in its decreed course, or to turn it up stream, as to hinder the Almighty from pouring down knowledge from heaven upon the heads of the Latter-day Saints.

"Behold, there are many called but few are chosen. And why are they not chosen?

"Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson—

"That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness.

"That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man.

"Behold, ere he is aware, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks, to persecute the saints, and to fight against God.

"We have learned by sad experience that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, they will immediately begin to exercise unrighteous dominion.

"Hence many are called, but few are chosen."

INSPIRED WORDS.

Now, I want to emphasize the balance of this revelation, given in a jail. With all the power of a State trying to take away the liberty of Joseph Smith, they could not prevent the communication of that prophet with the heavens, and he received the following inspired words that should never be forgotten by any bishop or any president of a stake, or any apostle, or any president of the Church as long as they hold office in this Church:

"No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned;

"By kindness, and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy, and without guile—

"Reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy;

"That he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death.

"Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

"The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion,"

MORE PRICELESS THAN WEALTH.

More priceless than all the wealth of all the world is to have the Holy Ghost as our constant companion.

"and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee for ever and ever."

We are an ignorant people, are we? Why, Dr. Winship announces that we have the best laws on education of any state in the United States, and yet the majority of the legislature come from the ignorant "Mormons."

We are a vile people, are we? Consider this: the governor of Arizona announced that if we had our just dues we would not have been robbed of between twenty-five hundred and three thousand per cent of some of the taxes in Arizona, namely: that we were entitled to twenty-five or thirty inmates in the state penitentiary and only had one. He also announced that we were being robbed because we did not have six or seven, in proportion to our population in the insane asylum.

When it comes to divorces—the crying evil of the age—we are not in it at all!

When it comes to marrying, we can lead them every time.

When it comes to fulfilling the first great commandment of God: to multiply and replenish the earth—we lead. Utah's best crop, and Canada's and Mexico's best crop, in every true, loyal, faithful Latter-day Saint family, is babies.

Our death-rate is lower. Our birth-rate higher.

BY THEIR FRUITS.

"By their fruits ye shall know them," and we are at the defiance of the world in all the vital statistics that go to show that we are a Christian people, that we do acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Savior and Redeemer of the world, and are living up to his teachings. We are at the defiance of any honest man upon the face of the earth to point out that we do not lead in all those things; and the Savior said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Speaking of the accomplishments in our Mexican colonies, that great president and warrior who ruled Mexico with an iron hand for so many years—Porfirio Dias, when he visited, just a short time before he was driven from his country, the fair in Chihuahua, when he came to the exhibits of industry and frugality; when he saw the products of our canning factories, our harness factories, the shoe factories; when he saw the exhibits from our academy there—as fine an academy as is in all Utah, barring only Logan, Ogden, Salt Lake, and Provo, our four principal cities—when he saw all the exhibits there, that warrior, whom nobody would expect to shed a tear, when he saw what this "ignorant" people had done in Mexico, wiped his eyes and said: "What could I not do with my beloved Mexico if I had more citizens like these 'Mormons?'"

In Canada we have made a record second to no people.

GOOD COLLEGE RECORDS.

In every college of the United States where our boys have gone, in every university attended by them, they have made a record that is the equal to the best. We expended of the Church funds and the people's funds, last year, a million dollars because we are a lot of ignoramuses and want to keep the people in ignorance. "The Glory of God is intelligence."

Let me read some more from the Prophet Joseph Smith:

"Whatever principles of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection.

"And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come.

"There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

"And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated."

Latter-day Saints realize, know and comprehend that one of the greatest duties devolving upon them is to gain knowledge, and to study and get information out of good books.

"If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things."

God lives, Jesus is the Christ, Joseph Smith was a prophet of the true and the living God; and this work called "Mormonism" is the Gospel of Jesus Christ our Redeemer, and is the plan of life and salvation; and all the disbelief of the world, all the opposition of all the world cannot stop it, God has established it and it will go on and on until it has fulfilled its destiny! And may God help you and me and every soul that has a knowledge of the divinity of this work, to live the Gospel, that our acts may preach it, is my prayer and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

The Deseret News has been broadcasting all the remarks made here this morning and this afternoon.

I desire to express my gratitude and thanks to all the Saints for the very remarkable and splendid order we have had during all our conference meetings. I believe it has been the very best of any conference I have ever attended.

I am very grateful for the very large attendance. I am thankful for the inspiration of the Lord to all those who have spoken.

I am grateful indeed that President Penrose, who will soon be 92 years of age, has been able to be with us and lift up his voice in testimony of the divinity of this great work.

We will now ask you to arise and President Penrose will offer the benediction.

The choir sang "Inflammatu8." solo by Miss Dolores Seal.

Benediction was pronounced by President Charles W. Penrose.

The conference adjourned for six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing, assisted by Professor B. Cecil Gates. Professor J. J. McClellan played the accompaniments, interludes, etc., on the great organ, assisted by Edward P. Kimball and Tracy Y. Cannon.

Stenographic reports of the discourses were made in the Tabernacle by Franklin W. Otterstrom, assisted by Joseph Anderson; and in the Assembly Hall by Frederick E. Barker.

Edward H. Anderson, Clerk of the Conference.

Prophecies of Joseph Smith and Their Fulfillment

BY NEPHI LOWELL MORRIS

Was Joseph Smith a Prophet? What answers come from the century that has rolled by since he beheld his first vision? Have the Latter-day Saints misplaced faith in him? After the progress of a hundred years, what has Time done with his claims to the title of a Prophet?

In order to make plain the outcome of Time the author has dug up old and forgotten manuscripts and prints which he lays before his readers, with photographic reproductions of the originals. Price, $1.25.

The invocation was offered by Elder Thomas N. Taylor, president of the Utah stake of Zion.

The choir and congregation sang, "Guide us, O thou great Jchovah."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

It certainly is a very inspiring sight to see this house full and people standing at this our first session of the conference.

THE CHURCH IN EXCELLENT CONDITION

I rejoice in the growth of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at home and abroad. I rejoice in feeling that we have every cause to be grateful to the Lord for the blessings that have come to us during the past year. I believe that I am within the bounds of truth when I say that the Church was never in a better condition than at the present time, that there was never greater unity existing among the general authorities of the Church, more anxiety and determination to serve the Lord, than today; that we never had more energetic and faithful men presiding over the stakes of Zion and in the wards and missions of the Church than today; neither have we had more energetic, faithful men and women, than have been presiding and are presiding at the present time, as general, stake and ward officers in our various auxiliary organizations.

GOOD WORK BY THE AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

It fell to my lot, yesterday afternoon, to address the conference of the Relief Society for a few minutes. The Assembly Hall was filled to overflowing, and many people were standing. I am convinced that such a gathering as that of active, wide-awake, energetic women-members could not be witnessed among any other people, who are no more numerous than are the Latter-day Saints. Our Relief Societies are doing a very remarkable and wonderful work in looking after the sick and the afflicted. I remember one very good friend of mine, a non-member of the Church, said to his wife just before he passed away, so she told me, that no other people, in his estimation—and he had traveled nearly all over the world—took as good care of their sick and looked after their poor as well as do the Latter-day Saints. They are really one great family of brothers and sisters, united with a common bond of love and respect. Our young people, and those who look after the children of the Primary Association are also doing a splendid work.

SATISFACTORY REPORTS FROM THE MISSIONS

The reports from our Missions from all over the world are very satisfactory; and the one call, claim, or plea that is made is, "Send us more missionaries." There is only one real exception to this, and that is in Japan. There is no exception in the call for more missionaries in that field, but, after twenty-odd years of labor in that country, we are convinced that not a dozen people have been thoroughly converted to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have seriously considered the question of closing that mission, but have not yet arrived at any conclusion.

ENLIGHTENING STATISTICS

It has been customary, at April conferences, to give some statistics to the people regarding the expenditure of their tithing. Nearly the entire tithing paid during the past year has been returned, in various appropriations, to the different stakes of Zion.

| General —The amount returned to the stakes from the tithes, for stake and ward purposes, during the past year and for maintenance and operation of the same, has been (I shall not read the odd figures) | | $ 993,000 |
| The amount expended for the maintenance and operation of Church schools has been | | 835,000 |
| The amount expended for the construction, maintenance and operation of temples has been | | 449,000 |
| Expended for hospital construction | | 146,000 |
| Since our last General Conference our hospital in Idaho Falls, costing in the neighborhood of $400,000 has been dedicated, and is open for the care of the afflicted. | | |
| For Charity —For the care of the worthy poor and other charitable purposes, including hospital treatment..... | | 171,000 |
| Missions —For the maintenance and operation of all the missions, and for the erection of places of worship and other buildings in the missions | | 586,000 |
| The grand total —Taken from the tithes, and returned by the Trustee-in-Trust to the Saints for the maintenance and operation of the stakes and wards, for the maintenance and operation of Church schools, temples, charities, and for mission activities is | | $3,182,207.22 |
| Other Charities —In addition to charities paid out of the tithes, as before stated, there have also been distributed the fast offerings and Relief Society and other charities, amounting to $471,000 which, added to the $171,000 paid from the tithes, makes a total of Church charities of $643,060.47. | | |
| Following statistics and other reports are compiled from the Church records for the year 1923: | | |
| Church growth —Children blessed and entered upon the records of the Church, in the stakes and missions..... | | 19,199 |
| Children baptized in the stakes and missions..... | | 13,020 |
| Converts baptized and entered on the records of the stakes and missions | | 7,492 |

The organized stakes of Zion now number 90.

Wards and independent branches 972.

There are 24 mission of the Church.

There are branches in the missions, 635.

The birth-rate in the Church is 35 per 1000.

The marriage-rate is 14 per 1000. I think that ought to be increased.

The death-rate is 7.2, which is certainly very satisfactory indeed.

There are 157,990 persons in the Church who are married.

There were 241 persons divorced in the year 1923.

Families owning their own homes, 75%.

Temple Statistics—In 1918 and 1923—A comparison for the past

Stake Presidents—There have been appointed since last October the following Stake Presidents: Wayne H. Redd, San Juan stake. Henry M. Mickelsen, Lost River stake. M. Howard Randall, Morgan stake. James Berkley Larsen, Shelley stake. Winslow Farr Smith, Ensign stake. William H. Callahan, Wayne stake.

There have been new wards organized: In the Roosevelt Stake, Mountwel; in the Liberty stake, Yale; in the Los Angeles stake, Belvedere and Glendale.

TEXT FOR AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

I am requested to read this announcement.

"Mendelssohn's oratorio entitled, Elijah, will be given this evening, Friday, in the Tabernacle, commencing at 8:15. In addition to the choir of two hundred and fifty voices selected from the Tabernacle Choir, ten talented soloists, and an orchestra of forty men, will take part. The committee announce popular prices of 25c and 50c. Tickets may be obtained at the box office and at the Bureau of Information. The choir and musicians have been preparing this splendid oratorio for many months, and a musical treat is promised to all who attend. Will you kindly emphasize the above, and oblige,

"Sincerely, The Committee."

I have decided to emphasize it by devoting my talk, entirely, or practically so, to that subject. I had not made up my mind until this morning what I would talk about.

On the 21st day of September, 1823, nearly seven years before the organization of the Church, Moroni, an angel, made the following statement to Joseph Smith the Prophet:

"Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

"And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers.

"If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming."

In the revelation known as the Preface to the Doctrine and Covenants we are told:

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.

"What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same.

"For behold, and lo, the Lord is God, and the Spirit beareth record, and the record is true, and the truth abideth forever and ever. Amen."

THE APPEARANCE OF ELIJAH

In 1836, about thirteen years after the angel Moroni declared that Elijah should restore again the Priesthood, Elijah appeared to Oliver Cowdery and the Prophet Joseph Smith, in the Kirtland temple. The record of this appearance is to be found in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section 110. Not only did Elijah appear, upon that occasion, in the Kirtland temple, to the Prophet and to Oliver Cowdery, but the Savior and others appeared, and I will read not only regarding Elijah's appearance, but also that of the Savior. The Savior stated:

"I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father."

OUR SAVIOR, THE LORD JESUS CHRIST LIVES

I know of nothing for which we, as Latter-day Saints, should be more grateful than the absolute knowledge that every Latter-day Saint has, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, the Son of the living God. All over the world today, even among professed Christians, there is a lack of faith in the divinity of the Savior. Even some ministers of the gospel go far enough to declare from their pulpits that they do not believe that Jesus was the Son of God. There is no doubt in the mind of any Latter-day Saint living regarding the fact that Jesus is the Son of God, because when the boy Joseph Smith, not yet fifteen years of age, went into the woods to pray in the Sacred Grove, he saw God the Father and God introduced to him his well-beloved Son, and told this boy to hear Him. Every Latter-day Saint believes absolutely in the revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, that they are true; and in one of these revelations we have this recorded by Sidney Rigdon and the Prophet:

"And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony last of all, which we give of him: That he lives!

"For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father—

"That by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

We have an account of the actual appearance of the Savior in the first temple erected in this dispensation which was at Kirtland.

"I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father.

"Behold, your sins are forgiven you; you are clean before me; therefore, lift up your heads and rejoice.

"Let the hearts of your brethren rejoice, and let the hearts of all my people rejoice, who have, with their might, built this house to my name.

"For behold, I have accepted this house, and my name shall be here; and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house."

Then after the appearance of the Savior we have the following:

KEYS TO GATHERING OF ISRAEL RESTORED

"After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us; and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north."

One of the Articles of Faith of the Latter-day Saints is:

"We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion shall be built upon this [the American] continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth; and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory."

"After this, Elias appeared, and committed the dispensation of the gospel of Abraham, saying that in us and our seed all generations after us should be blessed.

VISITATION OF ELIJAH IN FULFILMENT OF MALACHI'S PREDICTION

"After this vision had closed, another great and glorious vision burst upon us; for Elijah the prophet, who was taken to heaven without tasting death, stood before us, and said:

"Behold the time has fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi—testifying that he [Elijah] should be sent, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come—

"To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse—

"Therefore, the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at the doors."

This visitation of Elijah to the Kirtland temple was on April 3, 1836, the 88th anniversary being yesterday.

THE FAITH OF THE SAINTS VERIFIED BY TEMPLES AND WORKS THEREIN

I rejoice in the fact that the Latter-day Saints believe absolutely beyond the peradventure of a doubt, that Elijah did come, that he did commit the keys to Oliver Cowdery and to Joseph Smith, and the temple erected in Kirtland, the temple erected in Nauvoo, and the temples that have been erected here in this state of Utah, and those in Hawaii and in Canada, and the one that is now being erected in Mesa City, Arizona, bear testimony, to the extent of millions of dollars of money, of the faith of the Latter-day Saints that the keys have been given, whereby we can, in very deed, be saviors upon Mount Zion for those who have died without a knowledge of the gospel.

AN AWAKENING ON THIS SUBJECT IN ALL THE WORLD

And simultaneously, almost, with the declaration way back in 1823 by the Angel Moroni, (Section 2, Doctrine and Covenants that I have read to you,) all over the world there came into the hearts of people, not of our faith, a desire to organize genealogical societies, to compile records of names by the thousands, and tens of thousands. I have met in many lands and in many climes, men who have spent years, and a large amount of treasure, and almost their entire time, in compiling records of their ancestors. I have asked them why they did it. They said they did not know, they were seized with a great desire to compile records of their ancestors; and, as we know, these records are worth their weight in gold to the Latter-day Saints.

INTEREST IN WORK FOR THE DEAD INCREASING

It fell to my lot last night to make a brief address to the representatives of the Genealogical societies and organizations of the Church, on the top floor of the Bishop's Building. The auditorium there was crowded to overflowing. We have had a great many gatherings there at one time and another, but I have never attended a gathering in that building when the room was as well filled as it was last night. It was a meeting of enthusiastic laborers, whose works testify to the coming of Elijah, to the turning of the hearts of the fathers to the children, and of the children to the fathers. This work is being carried on, and as I have read to you in the statistics here this morning, over five-hundred thousand more ordinances were performed in our temples this past year than were performed during a like period five years ago. I rejoice in the splendid work that is being accomplished, and in the wonderful loyalty of those who are working in the temples, and those who are gathering information for genealogical work of different kinds.

I believe that the Committee will be reasonably well satisfied with my emphasis of the great oratorio here tonight, of Elijah. I hope the house will be crowded to overflowing.

WE ARE ENGAGED IN THE MARVELOUS WORK OF THE LORD

I rejoice in the blessings of the Lord, I rejoice in a knowledge that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the true and the living God. We are engaged in the work of the Lord, and I wish to read the words of the Lord given to the grandfather of our late beloved President Joseph F. Smith, the father of the Prophet Joseph and the Patriarch Hyrum Smith. These words were given, remember, before the Church was organized:

"Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.

"Therefore, if ye have desire to serve God, ye are called to the work; "For behold the field is white already to harvest; and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perisheth not, but bringeth salvation to his soul;

"And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

"Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

"Ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Amen.

THE GREAT PURPOSE OF OUR LABORS DECLARED

And before the Church was organized a revelation was given to the father of our beloved President Joseph F. Smith. I will not read it all, but it is Section II, given in May, 1829, nearly a year before the organizing of the Church. Hyrum Smith desired that his brother, the Prophet, should inquire of the Lord as to what labor he should perform. He said:

"Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, keep my commandments," I desire with all the power that God has given me to emphasize that. That applies to every man, woman and child in all the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. "Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.

"Seek not for riches but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, even as you desire of me so it shall be done unto you; and, if you desire, you shall be the means of doing much good in this generation.

"Say nothing but repentance unto this generation."

Remember that, O all ye people: Say nothing but repentance. Teach and live the first principles of the gospel, and let the mysteries of heaven wait until you get to heaven.

"Keep my commandments, and assist to bring forth my work, according to my commandments, and you shall be blessed.

"Behold, thou hast a gift or thou shalt have a gift if thou wilt desire of me in faith, with an honest heart, believing in the power of Jesus Christ or in my power which speaketh unto thee:

"For, behold, it is I that speak; behold, I am the light which shineth in darkness, and by my power I give these words unto thee.

"And now, verily, verily, I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good—yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously; and this is my Spirit * * *

"Build upon my rock, which is my gospel;

"Deny not the spirit of revelation, nor the spirit of prophecy, for wo unto him that denieth these things;

"Therefore, treasure up in your heart until the time which is in my wisdom that you shall go forth.

"Behold, I speak unto all who have good desires, and have thrust in their sickle to reap.

"Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world."

"I am the same, who came unto mine own and mine own received me not;

"But verily, verily, I say unto you, that as many as receive me, to them will I give power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on my name. Amen.

Please remember, Latter-day Saints, that this revelation declares that the Lord speaks unto all of us who have a desire to labor—to seek not for riches, but to bring forth the work of God, and to labor for the accomplishment of that purpose.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS

Now I see the time that I desired to occupy has expired, but I want to speak just a little more and read a few words that I have been studying occasionally, now for forty long years, since it fell to my lot to be one of the apostles:

"And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the Living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

"For this shall be a law"—not an exhortation remember, but a law—"unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized.

"And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands.

"And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."

THE SACRED DUTY OF COMMUNION WITH GOD THROUGH PRAYER

And the way to teach our children to pray is to pray ourselves in secret and in our families. There is too much neglect in having communion with God on the part of many of the Latter-day Saints. I feel a joy and a happiness every day of my life in communicating with my Maker, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, my Redeemer. And those who do not have a radio communication, so to speak, with our Heavenly Father and our Redeemer, are losing the inspiration that comes from the Lord.

"And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

"And the inhabitants of Zion also shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord.

"Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness.

"These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them; wherefore, let my servant Oliver Cowdery carry these sayings unto the land of Zion.

"And a commandment I give unto them—that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people.

"These sayings are true and faithful; wherefore, transgress them not, neither take therefrom.

"Behold, I am Alpha and Omega, and I come quickly. Amen."

TAKE TO HEART THE DUTY OF TEACHING FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST

I pray that the parents who are within the sound of my voice, and those who may read in the conference reports, or in our papers, what I say, may take to heart the duty that devolves upon them under a commandment from the Lord Almighty to teach faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, to their children, that they shall pray and walk uprightly. That the Lord may help us to rear our beloved children in the nurture and admonition of the gospel, and in a love of God and of our Redeemer, and that each and every soul who has a testimony of the divinity of this work may live the gospel in uprightness, in virtue, and in truth, that their lives may preach the truth to those with whom they come in contact, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. PENROSE

This is not the first time in my life that I have been taken by surprise. I felt quite content to sit on the stand here this morning and listen to the words of inspiration that have fallen from the lips of President Heber J. Grant, feeling that he would occupy most, if not all, of the time. I take great pleasure in bearing testimony to the truth of the things that he has uttered. Perhaps there is no need for that. I believe that that testimony is in the hearts of this vast congregation this morning. I enjoyed every word the President has uttered. I know that what he has said and read and testified of is true, and it came to us this morning in the life and power and spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ as revealed to us in these last days. I enjoy meetings of this kind and teachings of this kind. They are more to my heart and soul than learned disquisitions of any kind.

THE PREACHING OF THE GOSPEL TO THE NATIONS

I rejoice in this gospel which the Lord has revealed for the salvation of the human family. I have labored in this Church for a good many years, and feel very thankful in my soul this morning that the Lord has preserved me to the extent that I have been able to labor up to the present time, notwithstanding the weaknesses and frailties of human nature, and the burdens, so to speak, of old age. God be praised for all his goodness to me, and to this people who are gathered here from many lands. What a great thing it is to look upon this congregation this morning and consider what God has already wrought; then to lift up the curtain and look to that which is coming and see something of that which will be in the future. This congregation is representative of the Church which is now occupying many lands.

When the angel that John the Revelator saw in the vision was to come to the earth bearing the everlasting gospel, it was to be preached to "every nation and kindered and tongue and people," and they were to be called with a loud voice to "fear God and keep his commandments, for the hour of his judgment has come," and to "worship him that made heaven and earth and the sea, and the fountains of waters." That is a commandment to us. John heard the voice in the vision, and it has been echoed again in the last days, for the Lord revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith that this was the work of his servants. That which the Lord revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith stands to-day as the duty of this people, gathering from afar in fulfilment of what Isaiah and Micah, the prophets of old, saw in their visions. They saw that the people of this Church would come from all parts of the earth into the tops of the mountains, and that here should be "the mountain of the Lord's house," and the people would say: "Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob. And he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; And the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many nations, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and the time shall come when the sword shall not be lifted up any more; but the people will serve the Lord and walk in his ways, and prepare for the coming of their King; even Jesus the Christ."

THE COMING OF THE PRINCE OF PEACE

What a blessing it is to be privileged to look upon this body of people this morning gathered in from the various nations of the earth who have come up here, not merely to better their temporal condition, but to learn the ways of God and walk in his paths, and to prepare the way for the coming of the great King, Jesus of Nazareth—once of humble birth, but who now will come in glory to the earth. This is our work, my brethren and sisters, to serve the Lord, to learn his ways, to walk in his paths, that the law may go forth from Zion, and that nations afar off may be so influenced that they will cast away their weapons of war, and turn them into weapons of peace, and prepare for the coming of the great King who is the Prince of Peace.

WE ARE HERE TO SERVE THE LORD

I have had the privilege and joy and duty, for several years, of laboring in this cause, at home and abroad, and for this great honor I do thank and praise the Lord this morning. When I think of how the Lord has blessed and sustained me at home and abroad, and lifted up the veil from my eyes, and given me to see the things of his Kingdom, I praise him with all my heart. I rejoice in knowing that there are so many good men and women gathered from afar, and their children coming up after them, who are here for that great purpose; not merely to gather riches, not merely to make the desert blossom like the rose, not merely to subdue the elements and bring them into subjection, but to serve the Lord, to learn what he wants done, and then to do it with all their might and mind and strength. This is what the Lord said he wanted the people to do when they gathered into Jackson county, in Missouri, to endeavor to prepare the way for the coming of the great King and to fulfil the predictions of the Prophets and perform the great work of redemption for the living and the dead, which God had marked out for this great dispensation. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy might, and with all thy strength, and in the name of Jesus Christ, thou shalt serve him." That was the first great commandment to the people gathered, to the spot designed for Zion. The Lord made some great predictions there to the people, and that were contingent upon their doing this. The President has read some things that the Lord revealed at that time, which the people were to do. Go up unto the house of prayer on this my holy day. That was one of the things that we were to do. The rest of the commandments there and the blessings that he said should come upon the people were predicated upon their doing these things; and here is a truth that should be always present and clear to the minds of the Latter-day Saints: that the blessings which are promised them, whether it be in holy ordinances or in the words of the servants of God, or in the revelations direct from the Most High, they are all predicated upon this great thing; that we shall do the things which are commanded.

BLESSINGS PREDICATED UPON SERVING THE LORD

Every blessing that is pronounced upon us, whether in the temples of the Lord or elsewhere, is predicated upon our obedience to the commandments. Even in the Word of Wisdom, we are told there that we shall receive certain blessings if we observe certain rules, if we abstain from certain things that are not good for us. And then it says: And they shall receive these promises, if they also "keep the commandments." These are to be learned and obeyed, and it is our duty to teach them to our children as we have heard this morning. Now, do not forget this: A great many promises have been made concerning things to be done in Zion, but unless we keep the commandments of God and perform the duties God has placed upon our shoulders, we cannot claim the blessings. The Lord says he promises, and people do not obey, and then he revokes, and they receive not the blessings. What? Is it possible that God revokes? Yes; he says so. Commandments are given and revoked—what for? Because the people who were to observe the commandments do not observe them, and are not worthy or prepared to receive the blessings.

In the 34th section of the Doctrine and Covenants we read of some things the Lord commanded to the people at that time, in that place. They have not yet come to pass. He has stated there, these things shall be done in that "generation."

THE LENGTH OF A GENERATION

Speaking of the word generation, I may make a remark or two that perhaps, will be timely because of some notions some of our brethren entertain in regard to this point. What do you mean when you speak of a generation? Do you mean some particular period of time? Not generally, the word does not mean that. You do not find it to mean that, if you search the dictionary. What do you mean by generation? Well, you take the Bible and you can begin by reading: These are the generations of Adam; these are the generations of Seth; and these are the generations of Noah after the flood. Does that refer to some particular period of time—one hundred years, as some of our brethren interpret it? No, it means the posterity, the generations, the families, the children that were to come. The generations of Adam, some of them, lived hundreds of years, not merely one hundred years.

I remember that in the old Doctrine and Covenants, the edition with which I was most familiar, Elder Orson Pratt, of the council of the Twelve Apostles, who separated the book into verses, and made a great many footnotes, had one footnote which said most positively that a generation did not expire in one hundred years. Well, a notion has got into the heads of some of our brethren that it does mean just one hundred years, because, in the Book of Mormon we read of certain events that were to occur within four hundred years, and then, in another place, that they were to be in the fourth generation. Well, Brother Pratt said, it does not expire in a hundred years, and he had studied the matter from a philological standpoint. Now what I am referring to is this: a few of our brethren, some of them men of importance, declare that one hundred years from the date of that revelation, which is in the 84th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, all those things that are there spoken of must be fulfilled. Well now, the Lord in that revelation sometimes says a thing shall be, when he is giving it by way of commandment. Sometimes the word is used in the way of a prediction, but in this very matter that I am referring to, we read in the 124th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants that God gave it by way of commandment—"I gave a commandment to my people that they should build a house unto me," building it in that generation in a certain place, pointed out by the finger of God to the Prophet Joseph who dedicated it. Now in the 124th Section the Lord declares that that was a commandment, the people were to build the house at that place in that generation. If you will read carefully the revelations I speak of now, you will find that the Lord refers particularly to this very requirement in regard to Jackson county, Missouri, and he declares that the people there were commanded to build a house to him at that time, and on that spot. But their enemies came upon them and prevented them from doing that which the Lord commanded them, and therefore the Lord accepted their offering. The Lord lays down there a principle which it is well for us to understand. The Lord says that whenever he gives a commandment, no matter what it is about, to the children of men, and they go to with their might and endeavor to fulfil his commandment, and do that which is required of them, and they are prevented by their enemies, or by any other means, from accomplishing it, he does not require it any more at their hands. He accepts of their offering. That has applied in the past, and will apply in the future, and we should remember it. If God gives a commandment, and we do not obey it, why he revokes it, and he revokes the blessings. If he gives us a commandment to do certain things, and we find ourselves unable to do them, either by restricted laws or any other obstacles in the way of physical force, the Lord requires them no more but accepts our offering, and he will visit his wrath and indignation upon those who prevent his people from accomplishing that which he required at their hands.

NO DATE SET FOR THE COMING OF THE LORD

Now that is worth understanding, so that the idea that is prevailing, or that some have endeavored to establish, that in about six or seven years what they call the "winding up scene" will take place; that everything will take place to finish up the work in that time. That is a mistake; that is all there is to it. And so we need not be deceived at any time by the notions and opinions of men in regard to times and dates of things that are to occur.

There are a quite a number of people, who set the date to the time of the coming of the Savior. Only recently I have heard of such testimonies being borne in some of our fast meetings. That is all wrong; that should not be done. The Lord has not, at any time, so far as I am aware, in all my searchings in the revelations that have come to the earth, set a date for the coming of the Savior to reign on the earth. He said when he was upon the earth that he did not know, and even the angels of heaven did not know. When Joseph the Prophet tried to find out the Lord did not answer his question directly, but told him if he lived to a certain time he should behold the face of his Redeemer. So my brethren and sisters, do not be deceived by any means in regard to this setting of dates for the fulfilment of certain predictions. The Apostle Paul had to say to the Saints in his day that they were not to be deceived by any means as to the day of the coming of the Son of man, "for," said he, "let no man deceive you by word or by speech or by letter as from us; as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first."

Do you see that the people were led away then, as sometimes now, by these ideas and notions that prevailed for a while?

LET US PERFORM OUR DUTY AND THE BLESSINGS ARE SURE

Now what we need to do, my brethren and sisters, is to do the work that we are gathered here for. God has brought us from many lands. There are people in this congregation that I have known in foreign countries, where I have labored, and I rejoice that they are here. I rejoice with all my heart. I rejoice that God is doing this grand work of gathering his Israel from the nations of the earth, bringing them to Zion and clothing them with the power of his Holy Priesthood. It is with us today, that power and influence and spirit of this gospel. It is with our President. It does my heart good to hear the sound of his voice, knowing that it penetrates throughout this congregation, and that it finds an echo in the souls of the Latter-day Saints. I am glad that my brethren laboring in the various missions can come here and hear the sound of his voice and feel the ardor and strength of his presence and carry it away with them to their respective fields of labor. And so with the presidents of stakes, the bishops of wards; it is a splendid thing to come here and have our souls refreshed in this way. The Lord's spirit is here, and his power is here, and the authority and keys of the Holy Priesthood, revealed in former times to Peter James and John, and brought to the earth in latter days to the Prophet Joseph and to Oliver Cowdery; those keys are with us today and that is the point that we should understand; that today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, receive the word today, find out the duties of today through the living oracles, perform these duties, the blessings are sure to come. "Search these things," the Lord said, as the President read them. They are true and faithful and they will be fulfilled. I know that they have been fulfilled hitherto in my own experience. God has been with me wherever I have been sent to labor in his cause, and wherever I have done my duty, and I have tried to do it, for a good many years, with all my might and soul and strength, his power has been upon me, the light of the Lord has shone upon my understanding, and I have seen the things of the kingdom afar off.

A REMINISCENCE AND A TESTIMONY

Years and years ago, laboring and traveling without purse or scrip, in poverty so to speak, in weariness and labor, without a place to lay my head—that I very seldom refer to, because they were times of very great trial—in those days the Lord was with me, and the song of Zion was in my heart; his strength, his salvation, was my daily portion. I have had pointed out to me, during the last few weeks, an article that I wrote for the Millennial Star about sixty-five years ago. It was published in the Millennial Star on Sept. 10, 1859, and in that I was able to portray, as I saw, the things that were coming upon this generation, this wicked and perverse generation of people, and I have looked up the Star and read the article, and it has done me good to be able to see the fulfilment of the things that God made plain to my soul those many years ago; that when I was laboring in the mission field at different periods his spirit and his power have been upon me, and the testimony of Zion has been in my heart, and I rejoice and praise the Lord this morning that I am still able to bear testimony that God, the great Creator, is our Father, the Father of our spirits, and that he has sent us on the earth at the right time, in the right place; and upon many of us he has given authority and the Holy Priesthood to minister for him. I know that is true, I know that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son of the living God, the Son of the Eternal Father. He himself has declared that he was the First-born. How long ago that took place I do not know. I do not think anybody does know. We haven't heard the story, fully, of the early existence, the pre-existence of our Savior, nor of our own. We imagine a great many things concerning what we were and what we agreed to do and what we promised, but they only amount to our thoughts and ideas. One certain thing is this: that we are here, born on the earth in the latter days for the purposes of God; and he has led our footsteps here to these mountain valleys, and he has made our feet fast around about these hills, and the things that he has promised us will all be fulfilled if we will do our duty, if we will learn his word today and keep his commandments now, and teach them to our children, our generations will rise up and call us blessed.

HANG ON AND KEEP FAST HOLD OF THE TRUTH

I am glad to meet with you, my brethren and sisters, today in this great congregation, and I am proud to know that you were my brothers and sisters in the spirit world, and in the gospel kingdom on the earth in the latter days, and that we are bound together by sacred covenants which we should observe always and remember what we are. I meet with a good many of our young boys and girls when they come back from serving as missionaries. I am always glad to meet them, and I advise them to hang on, and keep fast hold of the truth, and advise them to be sure and work today, not to leave what they have done in the past and then go astray, but to continue in the way of righteousness and always be ministers, missionaries, at home and abroad; for they are called by the Almighty to help in this great Latter-day work which will go on to a glorious consummation.

GOD BE WITH YOU

I thank God for this privilege of bearing this humble testimony today, and praise him with all my soul for all his goodness and kindness and protecting care to me, and for all his providences and manifestations of his power to me. I praise him with all my heart, and in the midst of the congregation I say: Blessed be his name, forever. It always will be, no matter what I say or do, and his blessings will be ours, and upon you, my brethren, laboring in the ministry at home, or sent to minister abroad. God will be with you, and therein will be your strength. It will not be in worldly learning nor worldly riches, it will be in the revelations of the Holy Ghost to your souls, the power of your ministry, in the spirit of it. And in that you shall have joy in that you shall have success, and God will open up your way and the increases that we have heard about this morning will continue and go on and be augmented.

THIS WORK ONWARD AND UPWARD FOREVER

This work is onward and upward, and it will be forever and ever. It will not be taken away from the earth again, it is here to stay. It will abide. It will prevail. It will overcome all its foes, all its obstacles, all its difficulties, and the Lord will inspire his servants, as he raises them up for the peculiar and special work in which they are to be engaged, and he will give them success therein as he has done with our brethren who have passed away, and our brother who has spoken to us this morning. He is our President and leader and the man holding the keys of the sealing ordinances in the last days, and he is our President in very deed. He stands at the head, and if God has anything to reveal to the Church, as a Church, it will be revealed to him as long as he remains on the earth. God be with him. I sustain him with all my heart and soul as the President and leader of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are witnesses to the truth of all that he has said to us this morning, and to the divine Spirit which has rested upon him.

Now may God's Spirit abide with you, my brethren holding the Priesthood, that you may be able to perform your duties successfully, that you may go forth from this conference, renewed and refreshed and invigorated, to stir up the people to righteousness, to encourage them to be faithful and true and to perform the work for which they have come on the earth. God bless you with all the blessings that your hearts can righteously desire, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

It is a great privilege to meet, on occasions like this to hear the word of the Lord from his servants, and to be inspired with new resolves and desires. It gives us all an opportunity to examine ourselves, and to measure our standing in the Church, to see whether we are reaching the ideals the Lord designed us to reach. It enables us to go home with renewed determination to keep his commandments and to honor his name. I am satisfied this is the wish and desire of all who are here to-day.

I thank the Lord with all my heart for the gospel, for the testimonies he has given me, for the privilege of gathering among his people and laboring in his ministry. I desire to serve the Lord, keep his commandments and honor his presiding brethren, and abide by their counsel and advice.

The Lord has called us to labor in his ministry for the establishment of his mighty purposes on the earth, to build up his Church; and everything we do that will help to bring this about will redound to our blessing and comfort and give us joy in our ministry.

Reference has been made by Presidents Grant and Penrose to the duty of the Latter-day Saints, of keeping the commandments of the Lord, and they have urged us to do so. Several important commandments have been mentioned, and I may be pardoned if I once more mention another, which comes to my attention in my labors as a counselor to Bishop Nibley, and that is a better and more prompt observance of the law of tithing.

Great blessings will come to a man or woman who will observe this law. It will increase their faith in the gospel, their desire to serve the Lord, and they will be setting a good example. We should teach this law to our young people and see that they have an opportunity to pay tithing. If our children are given funds or acquire means, they should be taught and encouraged to tithe it, so that the habit of tithe-paying will grow with them. There is a statement made by King Solomon, in the book of Proverbs, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." This can be applied to the observance of the law of tithing.

Let us not rest up with the idea that because father has already paid a tithe, the child need not pay tithing. The child, if allowed to pay its tithing, even though it be small, will develop a good habit, and it will stay with him. This is another duty of fathers and mothers, to teach their children the observance of this law.

Then, at tithing settlement, father should see that his boys and girls go with him, particularly the boys who hold the Priesthood. He should not go to settlement with the idea of asking the bishop to credit so much to one child and so much to another, but take the children with him, and let them pay the bishop themselves, and receive the receipt of the bishop.

I am glad to say that there are more tithe-payers to-day, in the Church, than have ever been reported previously. There were special efforts made a few years ago to encourage payment of tithing by all members of the Church. This matter was not particularly stressed, in 1923, but because of the faithfulness and devotion of the leading brethren in the stakes and wards and the teaching of this law to the people, the number of tithe-payers has increased. However, many have not paid tithing, as the records of the Church show, and therefore they are not receiving the blessings that the Lord has promised to those who will observe this law. He is willing and anxious to bless his people whenever they will obey the law upon which that blessing is predicated.

The old habit of paying tithing once a year, at a special settlement with the bishopric of the ward, is slowly going out of use. There is growing in the Church a disposition on the part of the Saints to pay tithing monthly, or at other regular intervals. By this means the payment of tithing is more faithfully observed, and it brings joy and satisfaction to those who tithe their income before they use the balance. If this practice is followed by the officers of the Church in the stakes and wards, it will grow among the Saints themselves and, in my opinion, is the best and proper method of paying tithing. Tithing settlement will be easier and less burdensome to the tithe-payer when all he pays at the end of the year will be his tithing for the month of December only.

I thank the Lord for the inspiration of his servants, for their advice and counsel, for their splendid example; and, no doubt, we shall all go home determined that in our homes, in the wards and in the stakes and missions where we may be laboring, we shall carry the instructions of President Grant, and use all our influence to see they are put into practice. This is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

Brethren and sisters, I cannot help but feel impressed with the sense of my insignificance, as I stand in the presence of our Church leaders and of Israel, assembled in conference; but I do rejoice with all my heart in this wonderful gospel. As I listened to President Heber J. Grant and to President Charles W. Penrose, I said in my heart: "I will go with these men because God is with them," and the words of the Apostle Paul came to me. He said: "For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?"

Is there any uncertainty in the testimonies and the messages that have been delivered to Israel this morning? No. Doubt is swallowed up in knowledge and certainty. In the world there is doubt, there is uncertainty. One class of so-called religionists is teaching that Jesus is not divine, that he was not born of the Virgin Mary, and that the story of his bodily resurrection is a myth. We, the Latter-day Saints, standing on the sure foundation of revelation, and inspired by the testimony of the Holy Ghost, declare to all the world that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the Redeemer of mankind, and in this testimony we are safe, and we shall win eternal life by obeying the commandments of our blessed Lord. Never in the history of the world, when God has sent forth his prophets, has there been uncertainty in their message.

Unto Adam God declared: "If thou wilt turn unto me, and hearken unto my voice, and believe, and repent of all thy transgressions, and be baptized, even in water, in the name of mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth, which is Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven, whereby salvation shall come unto the children of men, ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

* * * For by the water ye keep the commandment, by the Spirit ye are justified, and by the blood ye are sanctified." And thus may all become the sons of God, for this is the plan of salvation unto all men.

In this dispensation, the Lord hath thundered forth the commandment in which these words occur: "Behold, the world is ripening in iniquity; and it must needs be that the children of men are stirred up unto repentance, both the Gentiles and also the house of Israel." The gospel trumpet is sounding clearly and with certainty. The Apostle Paul said that God commandeth all men everywhere to repent. Remission of sins follows sincere repentance, the baptism of water and the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Brethren and sisters, your sons and your daughters in the world are proclaiming the message of life and salvation, and they are proclaiming it in the spirit of the Christ. Recently two elders in the Southern States mission, while delivering their message, were taken from the home in which they were preaching, by a mob of about forty men. Into the woods they were taken, and the mob declared that they had brought them there to punish them. One of the elders said to those hard-hearted and cruel men: "My companion is not well. He is sick. The punishment you are going to give him, give to me. I am willing to bear what you are going to do to him. These noble words and Christ-like spirit softened the fury of the mob to some extent. The elder bore part of his companion's burden. Woe, woe, to those men who persecute the servants of God. They are under the displeasure of him who said: "Vengeance is mine, and I will repay."

I bear my testimony that Joseph Smith is a Prophet of God, that through him the Almighty delivered a message to the world which is soul-saving, and which will exalt people to be sons and daughters of God. Brethren and sisters, in all earnestness and in all humility, I thank my heavenly Father that the leaders of this Church are not proclaiming mysteries to the people, but they are declaring the saving principles of the gospel; and inspired by their teachings we missionaries look at them and say: "There stand the First Presidency; there we stand, too."

God said to the Prophet Joseph Smith: "And thy people shall never be turned against thee by the testimony of traitors." This is a continuing promise. The people of God will never, so long as they listen to the counsels of their leaders, be turned from those men who have been divinely appointed to counsel Israel, to be shepherds of the people, and to point the way to eternal life.

"He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat;
O be swift, my soul, to answer Him! be jubilant, my feet!
Our God is marching on."

I bear testimony that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

(Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church)

I am grateful for section eleven of the Doctrine and Covenants, referred to by President Grant. While this was given to Hyrum Smith, through his brother Joseph, for his personal guidance, the revelation, like all others in the Doctrine and Covenants, contains much information which is of great value to all of us. I was first attracted to this revelation because it was given to my grandfather, in answer to his prayer for further light and guidance. I enjoy reading it, and have received much encouragement from so doing; and, as I read it again and again, I get from it new thoughts and new encouragement. At the time this revelation was given, Joseph Smith was translating the Book of Mormon, his brother Hyrum lending every aid as he followed this work, believing it to be a sacred record. His soul was filled with a desire to spread the new light and knowledge among his fellowmen; he, therefore, asked his brother to inquire of the Lord that he might know the will of the Lord concerning this work, at it pertained to him. Hyrum was not yet prepared for the great change that was to take place in religious thought and doctrines. The Lord in his mercy found it necessary to restrain him until he had been prepared.

It was the common belief that any man desiring to preach could take it upon himself to do so without being especially called and ordained by one having authority. The Lord's answer to this prayer was:

Behold, I command you that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called.

Wait a little longer, until you shall have my word, my rock, my Church, and my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine.

And then, behold, according to your desires, yea, even according to your faith shall it be done unto you.

Keep my commandments; hold your peace; appeal unto my Spirit;

Yea, cleave unto me with all your heart, that you may assist in bringing to light those things of which has been spoken—yea, the translation of my work; be patient until you shall accomplish it.

Behold, this is your work, to keep my commandments, yea, with all your might, mind and strength.

Seek not to declare my word, but first seek to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed; then, if you desire, you shall have my Spirit and my word, yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men.

But now hold your peace; study my word which hath gone forth among the children of men, and also study my word which shall come forth among the children of men, or that which is now translating, yea, until you have obtained it, which I shall grant unto the children of men in this generation, and then shall all things be added thereto.

There was to be a new Church, or, rather, the old one restored. The word of the Lord was again being received through revelation, and the written record for many years hidden away was now restored, thus making the gospel more plain and restoring it in its fulness.

These changed conditions required much thought, study and preparation. Hyrum Smith's work by way of preparation was to first keep the commandments with all his might, mind and strength, to study the word of the Lord: that which had been given and that which was about to be given. He was to seek not for riches but for wisdom, and the promise was that through his faithfulness, "the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich." And, after he had proven his faith by his works, then should his tongue be loosed, then if he desired he could have the Spirit and word and the power of God unto the convincing of men, and all things were to be added thereunto. From this we see the importance the Lord places on the need of humility; the importance of keeping the commandments and being prepared for the work called to do. This has been taught to me all my life and because of the teachings of my parents and the opportunity I have had for gaining knowledge, I have been highly blessed, and should have been better prepared for service in the ministry. I have discovered that faith, a sincere effort to keep the commandments, and a careful study of the gospel are not sufficient but are steps to service, which is the final and greatest qualifying feature in the Church.

Service may be rendered in an indifferent or haphazard manner or as a matter of course, or daily act following fixed habits. When so rendered the greatest good is not accomplished.

At the death of my father, I began to realize more and more how much I had depended upon him; for it was easy to ask advice; to get information on points of doctrine; all of which has been helpful, but not having him to rely upon I have been impressed more forcibly that it is necessary for each individual to stand firmly upon his own foundation. I am beginning to see more and more that the great value in having knowledge is to prepare one to render greater service, which is measured by the faith and diligence with which that service is performed. The Lord has shown the way and provided wisely that each one may have an opportunity of gaining knowledge, and of rendering service in his Church. His plan is perhaps not wholly effective, because of our carelessness and failure to fully do our part as leaders, nevertheless, the opportunity is given, subject to our acceptance.

There are two priesthoods: The Melchizedek and Aaronic or Lesser Priesthood. The Melchizedek Priesthood deals with spiritual things, and the Aaronic, with the preparatory gospel. It has fallen to my lot to labor in the Aaronic Priesthood, with the young men holding the office of priest, teacher and deacon; helping them in their endeavor to lay a firm foundation upon which they may build, that further knowledge and service may be acquired. How wisely has the Lord provided for them. As deacons, the boys are expected to perform labors in keeping with their age and knowledge, thus they gain further knowledge; through service and study, encouraged by their officers and the Saints, in time they are prepared for greater service and so advance to the office of teacher. Here their mission is to "watch over the Church always, and be with and strengthen them:

"And see that the Church meet together often, and also see that all the each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking:

"And see that the Church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty."

This labor is to be among those who believe in the gospel, and who understand that it is their mission to help these young men to gain the experience necessary, in the spirit of love, having a respect for them and a desire to encourage them in their work. This encouragement and labor, comes to them during a trying period in a boy's life, being privileged to watch over the Church, to see that there is no iniquity, lying, back-biting and evil speaking, and to see that the Church meet together often, and that all members do their duty.

I cannot conceive of any greater protection that can come to a young man and no greater opportunity for growth, and the gaining of knowledge, than in rendering this service, under the direction of wise leaders and kind Church members. With a few years of such training, they should be qualified for greater service, and when ordained to the office of priest, they are expected to preach, teach, expound, exhort, baptize, administer the sacrament and to visit the homes of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret. This labor too, is with the members who are or should be sympathetic and anxious to encourage them in their preparation for greater responsibility which comes with the Melchizedek Priesthood. With this training, step by step, the young men grow in knowledge and experience, and in due time they learn to put their trust in the Spirit of the Lord, which leadeth to do good and to do justly, and if they work humbly, the promise is to them also, and they are entitled to the enlightening influence of the Spirit, which shall fill our souls with joy.

I am grateful, my brethren and sisters, for the opportunity I have of laboring in this Church. I am grateful that it has fallen to my lot to labor among the young men, and I pray that the importance of this work will be impressed upon us, that we may encourage those holding the Lesser Priesthood and provide employment for them, even more than we have been doing in the past. During the last year there has been greater activity in the Lesser Priesthood work than in any other year in the history of the Church. There is room for greater development; for greater work and activity, and the boys need it. Upon those holding the Melchizedek Priesthood rests the responsibility of providing this training. May God help us to do so, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

My brethren and sisters, it is a real pleasure to be here on this occasion and bear testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel as taught by the Latter-day Saints. The remarks of our brethren this morning have impressed me with the importance of having a personal, living testimony of the divine mission of Jesus Christ, that he is the very Son of God, the Savior of the world; and also a testimony that Joseph Smith, the latter-day prophet, was raised up by the Lord to usher in a new gospel dispensation.

I know that the gospel we preach is not after man; we have not followed cunningly devised fables, Joseph Smith did not receive it of man, but by the revelations of Jesus Christ. We have received the witness of the Spirit that the gospel taught by the Latter-day prophet is verily the power of God unto salvation. The Savior said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." So, today, as missionaries we lay down the gauntlet and say to all men, that if they will do the will of the Father, obeying the principles of the gospel as we teach them, they shall know of the doctrine, whether it is of God or whether we speak of ourselves. Then will they receive the witness of the Holy Ghost whom God hath promised to all those who obey him. You will remember the occasion when Peter and companions appeared before the council at Jerusalem. The high priest asked them, saying; "Did we not straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name?"—Peter and the other apostles answered and said, "We ought to obey God rather than men. The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins. And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him." Acts 5:28-32. Paul in writing to the Corinthian Saints, said, "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God, calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."

It is important, therefore, as pointed out here today, that parents in Zion shall teach their children the fundamentals of the gospel, that as they grow in years they may grow in a knowledge of the truth; and, having received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, they may have the right to claim this testimony from our heavenly Father for he has said, "I the Lord am bound, when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say ye have no promise." Surely the Lord will impart unto us according to our obedience.

I thank God with all my soul that it is my privilege to bear testimony to the divine mission of Jesus Christ, that he is the very Son of God, the Redeemer of the world; that by and through him, salvation will come to all the children on the earth. There is no other name given under heaven whereby we may be saved. I am grateful for the testimony that has come into my life that Joseph Smith was, and is, a Prophet of the living God. It was not my good fortune to know him in the flesh, but those who knew and associated with him in life, did not know any better than I know that his mission was divine. I appreciate the privilege of giving service today in this great cause, and bear you my testimony that the message we have for the world is the power of God unto salvation. We shall receive the companionship of the Holy Spirit in direct proportion to our obedience to the commandments given unto us. May the Lord give us power to live the gospel, to be exemplary in our lives, and to bear testimony to all with whom we come in contact that Jesus is the Christ, and that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Lars P. Oveson, president of the Emery stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

President Heber J. Grant presided and at 2 o'clock announced the hymn, "High on the mountain top," which was sung by the choir and congregation.

Prayer was offered by Elder John W. Hart, president of the Rigby stake of Zion.

The choir and congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel."

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

My brethren and sisters, I desire an interest in your faith and prayers that I may be led to say something that will be profitable to us this afternoon. We had a very choice meeting this morning. The Spirit of the Lord was with us, and will doubtless continue to be with us to the end of this great conference.

HOW SHALL WE OBTAIN LIFE ETERNAL?

I take it, my brethren and sisters, that the great aim you have in view is to obtain life eternal. What is life eternal? The Apostle Paul tells us: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." If we will analyze this passage of scripture we will see very clearly the reason for his statement. God is the author of eternal life, and this great gift is given unto men through his beloved Son. That being the case, it is very important that we should come to know these divine beings, that we should come close to them and know something of their attributes and of their characters. The question follows naturally, if we come to know them, how, then, shall we obtain life eternal? Undoubtedly, it will come to us through the knowledge of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost expresses the will of God to the human mind, so that those who receive it shall know how to act and walk before him. John the Revelator tells us in chapter 14 of the Gospel of St. John: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you."

THROUGH THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST

It is this great power and gift that puts men into close relationship to God on high and to his beloved Son, so that they may have his mind and will. And it is that very principle of power that draws the people of God together and unites them in the bonds of fellowship and love. If we look out into the world—the so-called Christian world—and take note of the confusion, of the spirit of strife, and contention, and division which prevail there, we are at once driven to the conclusion that they are without this great gift of God, the Holy Ghost, and surely we may well believe that it is so; because they have entirely neglected the ordinance of the Holy Ghost.

This doctrine of the Holy Ghost was strongly emphasized by the Savior himself and by his apostles. Peter said: "Be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

NO BAPTISM COMPLETE WITHOUT THIS GIFT

Now it is very apparent that any baptism that is given without the power and gift of the Holy Ghost is not a complete baptism. It is deficient.

The Lord said upon one occasion: "And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand. And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand." And we may well add as a corollary: That church which is divided against itself cannot stand.

FUNDAMENTALISM AND MODERNISM

There is great division in the churches of the world today. The following word came over wire by the Associated Press sometime ago, from New York City: "Modernists and fundamentalists today pressed their ecclesiastical warfare, with New York the chief battleground. In all, five Christian denominations, Protestant Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptists, Methodist, and Unitarian, have been drawn into doctrinal debate concerning chiefly the virgin birth of Jesus Christ, and physical resurrection." I mention this fact because it is of common knowledge and was published to the world in the daily papers, so I think it is appropriate to speak of it in a public way:

"While debate has progressed furthest in the Protestant Episcopal church, where charges of heresy have been made, it became known that Presbyterian modernists, defeated in the general assembly last May, were planning vigorously to oppose adoption of five tenets held by fundamentalists.

"In a great or less degree, clergymen associated with the Baptist, Methodist and Unitarian sects have taken sides in the question of modernism versus fundamentalism. Next Thursday evening, for example, the Rev. Dr. John Roach Stratton, pastor of the Calvary Baptist church and fundamentalist leader, debates the question with the Rev. Dr. Charles F. Potter, pastor of the West Side Unitarian church.

"But with these rumblings in the other Protestant faiths distinctly audible, the chief engagement in progress today was between the Episcopalian factions."

The question arises naturally: What is fundamentalism and what is meant by modernism? Here is the fundamental position.

The five articles of faith, as outlined in resolutions adopted by the Presbyterian General Assembly at Indianapolis on May 23, last, affirm "That it is the essential doctrine of the church that the holy Spirit inspired the writers of the Bible to keep from error; that Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary; that he offered himself as a sacrifice to atone for the sins of his followers; and that he arose from the dead with the same body in which he suffered; and he showed his divine power by working miracles."

Here is the modernist position:

"God is an intelligence and a personality, but not in human form and is bodyless. He reveals himself in all nature, but is spirit and apart from matter.

"Heaven has no pearly gates, harps or hosannas.

"Hell has no fire. The devil is an invention of the Zoroastrian.

"Prayer will never put a loaf of bread in the starving man's box, unless some human being intervenes.

"Immortality will not be in the flesh. Personal identity will endure, but there will be no resurrection of the body.

"Belief in the Virgin birth is not essential.

"The miracles of the Old Testament are myths. Those of the New Testament were interpolated. Magic is not becoming to the character of Christ.

"The phrase 'ascension into heaven' was written in the creed by a man who thought heaven was upstairs of a flat earth."

And then another minister declares that the Christian era is at an end:

"The end of the Christian Era has come, and mankind has entered the scientific era, in the opinion of Dr. Algernon Sidney Crapsey, who was convicted of heresy by the Episcopal church seventeen years ago.

"He is taking a keen interest in the present controversy between modernists and fundamentalists and the approaching trial of Dr. Lee W. Heaton of Fort Worth, who is accused of denying the Virgin birth of Christ.

"One-third of the Episcopal clergymen do not believe the story of the Virgin birth, the story of the origin of man or that the world was created in six days," he said.

"In my case," he continued, "the court was picked to convict, and did so. That will happen in this case if there is a trial, but I believe such a storm of protest will break upon the bishops that they will not dare have a trial."

"In my trial the church refused to enter into the truth of matters. It set intellectual belief above intellectual truth."

"If Dr. Heaton is tried the trial will condemn a single man and leave one-third of the church believing what the condemned man believed. It will take from the church what little moral power it has left."

"The Christian era is at an end, and the church is in the course of dissolution. We are in the scientific era."

"Thinking men do not believe the story of the Virgin birth. They do not believe the literal story of the resurrection. They do not believe that Balaam's ass turned around and said to him: 'What are you doing there?' Science proves the world was not created in six days. The healings of Christ may be accepted, for they were not miracles."

THE SCRIPTURE PLAIN ON THE POINTS IN CONTROVERSY

Now you see, brethren and sisters, how very far apart the Christian ministers are in the same church, and as between the churches. They are drawing apart, they are disunited, they fail to see the light. This is evidence to me that they have not the gift of the Holy Ghost with them to enlighten their minds and to direct their course.

Now, the scriptures are exceedingly plain on some of these points that are being discussed and which may end in the rending of the Christian churches of today. Take for instance, the birth of Christ. This incident is given in the simplest language. You will find in Luke:

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

"And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favor with God.

"And, behold, thou shalt conceive in the womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name Jesus.

"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David:

"And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

"Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?

"And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

How direct, how beautiful, how forceful, is this language, to tell us of the birth of the Savior of the world. How is it possible, brothers and sisters, to misunderstand such language? You can only account for it by the absence of the Spirit, for the Spirit of God testifies that that is the truth.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE CHRIST

With respect to the resurrection, this great principle is quite as beautifully set forth, as clearly defined, as that concerning which I have read. These words occur in the Gospel of St. Matthew, 28th chapter.

"And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

"He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

"And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead: and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

"And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word.

"And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him."

And in chapter 27: "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose,

"And came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many."

Here is the testimony of the scriptures respecting this great doctrine of the resurrection.

THE UNITED FAITH OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

Now, brethren and sisters, I refer with some pride, but not in a boasting spirit, to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. You will remember the testimony that was borne by President Grant this morning, when he said that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was never in better condition, in that a greater degree of unity has never existed in the Church than at the present time; and this, after one hundred years. The Church is more united. I think without doubt the Latter-day Saints see more clearly, eye to eye, understand more fully and completely the principles of the holy gospel, than ever they did in their lives before. This is easily explained in what I have already said—the gift of the Holy Ghost is given with every baptism into our Church. We emphasize faith; we speak of the importance of repentance; we point to the necessity of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost—the spirit of truth. It is that spirit which draws the Latter-day Saints together and unites and cements them, so to speak, in a solid body. I rejoice in this testimony.

PERSONAL TESTIMONY

After an experience in the ministry of thirty-six years, I testify to you my brethren and sisters, that I do know positively that Jesus is and was the Christ, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world, for you and for me; and it is through that great sacrifice and our own good works that we will be saved, and not otherwise.

And I testify to you of the Virgin birth—that Jesus was the Only Begotten Son of God in the flesh—and I have no doubt that this is the testimony of every Latter-day Saint in this building, that we see eye to eye upon this subject, that we agree perfectly in respect to this great doctrine of the resurrection. We go down into our graves, we expect to come up out of our graves, and take up these bodies purified, and go on to exaltation and glory.

I testify to you that I do know that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of God, and a great prophet of God, a mighty man. He was the man who founded this Church and kingdom under the direction of the Holy Spirit, and by the power of the Holy Priesthood that was given to him. Great was that man. Now, I rejoice in these things beyond measure, and I pray God, the eternal Father, that he will continue to bless this people and strengthen them and unite them together by the power of his Spirit, that we may be able to accomplish the work which is required at our hands. This I testify to you, and this blessing I ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

A soprano solo, "My Redeemer," was sung by Miss Arline Ridges, a granddaughter of Brother Ridges, who was the original builder of the Tabernacle organ.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

I feel very keenly, my brethren and sisters, the responsibility, in addressing this large congregation. I believe that the prayers and faith of good men and women avail much with the Lord, and I therefore ask that you give to me your sympathy and your faith and prayers, that I may be able to bring forth something that will be worthy your consideration.

CONDITIONS MADE KNOWN BY STATISTICS

In the Presiding Bishop's Office of the Church, there are kept and compiled many important statistics, and these statistics give to the authorities of the Church, who choose to consider them, an understanding of conditions which it would be next to impossible to acquire through visiting in the Church, in the various stakes of Zion. We have had some of these statistics presented by our President, in the opening session of this conference, and I desire to call attention to some others, briefly, which indicate conditions which are in need of being improved or corrected; conditions with respect to which perhaps the great majority of the people are not informed. For example:

LARGE NUMBER OF UNMARRIED IN THE CHURCH

From the reports of 1923, we are informed that there are in the Church 27,104 members of the Church over 21 years of age who have never been married. When you think that this large tabernacle will seat about eight thousand people, multiply that number by three and one-half, or nearly so, to equal the number of unmarried people in the Church over twenty-one years of age, it is almost appalling! And then, if we were to add to that number the young women of the Church, between the ages of 18 and 21, who might be said to be of marriagable age, the number would be increased by some thousands.

WHY IS THIS CONDITION?

Why is this condition in the Church we may ask? And if it is in need of being remedied, how can it best be accomplished? We, as a people, believe in marriage. It is with us a religious principle. Indeed, we believe in marriages such as the Lord has revealed; that we should be sealed, for time and eternity, by those having the sealing power. We are informed that such marriages as are performed in our temples are necessary for men and women to obtain a fulness of glory and exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our Father in Heaven; for those who attain to that glory are to have a continuation of the seeds, forever, an eternal increase. Why then should there be so many members of the Church of marriageable age who are not married? I am led to wonder if we are partaking of the spirit of the world in this thing; for if I am correctly informed there are religionists who believe that in the practice of celibacy they can get nearer to the Lord, that they can minister more satisfactorily to him in the unmarried state than in the married relation. I am sure that this is a great mistake, an untrue doctrine.

FORBIDDING TO MARRY, A DOCTRINE OF DEVILS

Indeed, I think I might say that it is a doctrine of devils, and I would quote to you from the Scriptures to sustain my understanding of this doctrine. The Apostle Paul, in his epistle to Timothy (1 Tim. 4:1-3), says:

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron: Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth."

Here the Apostle Paul characterizes this forbidding to marry as a doctrine of devils, as I understand it, along with lies in hypocrisy, and one of the great evils that should characterize the falling away from the truth in the last days. I hope as Latter-day Saints we are not imbibing those worldly ideas; for we have been called out of the world, as we read in Revelations 18:45:

"And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

"For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities."

EXEMPLARS TO THE WORLD

We are expected to be exemplars unto the world of mankind, in all things that are good, right and righteous, and thus be preachers of the truth by example as well as by precept. There is no justification that I can find in the Scriptures for the non-belief in marriage as a principle and ordinance of salvation, but on the contrary we find the Apostle Paul teaching the Hebrews that marriage is honorable in all; and in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, known as the 49th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants, we find the Lord's own words: "Whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man."

And in Genesis 2:18: "And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone."

I would ask who knows better than the Lord what is good for man; and what is good for man is good for woman, and it is not good that woman should be alone.

In Genesis, the 5th chapter, I read this: "Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam."

That is a rather peculiar expression "called their name Adam." The author of the Compendium, commenting on that expression, says that man in his fulness is a two-fold organization, male and female; either being incapable of filling the measure of their creation, alone. It requires a union of the two to complete man in the image of God.

TWO KINDS OF MARRIAGES—AUTHORITY

There are two kinds of marriages particularly taken note of in the statistics of the Church; one we call temple marriage, and the other civil marriage. Temple marriages, however, are civil marriages in that they comply with all the requirements of the civil law; but temple marriages have other important elements in them that the civil marriage, performed outside of the temples, have not. For instance, the individual solemnizing these temple marriages must have authority. He who holds the keys, the President of the Church, delegates this authority to man to seal on earth and it shall be sealed in heaven, for he has received this authority and has the right to delegate it to those who are worthy, as he may elect.

We read in Matthew 18:18 the following: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

This is by the Savior unto his disciples; and they who held that sealing and loosing power visited the Prophet Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, in the spring of 1829, on the banks of the Susquehanna river, and there conferred that authority upon them, and they in turn have conferred it upon others. So these marriages performed in the temples are by those who have been thus authorized to speak for the Lord, and the individuals contracting marriage under these circumstances covenant most solemnly with each other to be husband and wife for time and for all eternity, as contrasted with the civil marriage covenant "until death do them part." The ceremony is of that character making the man and the woman husband and wife for time and for all eternity, so that these civil marriages, after all, are, we might say, but trial marriages; and it would seem so from the fact that there are so many of our Church members who accept of a civil marriage ceremony before coming to the temple, and then later come to the temple to be sealed.

MARRIAGE FOR ETERNITY

I remember on one occasion when I was associated with the presidency of the Tooele stake, a prominent non-member of the Church requested me to perform the marriage ceremony for him. He was about to marry a beautiful woman, but before the ceremony was performed he called me to one side and said: "Now, Mr. Richards, don't make this thing too solid. We don't know whether we will be able to live together happily or not." That represents, I fear, the feeling of too many men and women who enter into these solemn obligations of marriage outside of the Church, as compared with those who marry in the temple, for these marry with the thought of never separating, of making themselves congenial, yielding here and there where it is necessary, and fulfilling the law that they may be one in time and throughout all eternity. The statistics of the Church go to show that those marriages performed in the temple are more enduring. There are more divorcements following civil marriages, more than half as many more, than there are following temple marriages according to the statistics of the Church.

TEMPLE AND CIVIL MARRIAGES IN THE CHURCH CONTRASTED

I might give you in detail the average per year for the last five years, and I will say here that it is a deplorable thing that since 1919 the civil marriages have outnumbered the temple marriages in the Church each year. The average number of temple marriages in the Church per year for the last five years is two thousand nine hundred and forty-six. The average number of civil marriages is three thousand two hundred and thirty-four. The divorcements after temple marriages, eighty-four; and the divorcements after civil marriages, one hundred fifty; or, in other words, one divorce to every twenty-one civil marriages in the Church, and one divorce to every thirty-six temple marriages. It is my belief that those very reasons, which might be assigned for members of the Church not going to the temple for marriage, are the causes of many unhappy marriages and the evil of divorce does not tell the whole story of sorrow which follows. Only those who in sorrow and disappointment have reached the climax and can endure the conditions no longer, receive divorcements. Many others suffer on and endure it for the sake of their children or others who are concerned.

PEOPLE OF ONE RELIGIOUS FAITH SHOULD MARRY

From the great number of men and women in the Church who have not been married, more than twenty-seven thousand, it would seem that those within the Church who do marry ought to be able to find companions without having to go outside of the Church. I want to tell you that while some of those marriages, where they are of different faiths, may result in happiness, the great majority of them, I believe, result in disappointment, and sorrow, if not in divorcements. We would, therefore, advise our Latter-day Saint girls and Latter-day Saint boys to marry those of their own faith, and we would also advise those who are not of us to marry those of their own faith.

WE WANT OUR PEOPLE TO MARRY

Then there is one other thought that I want to leave with you: brethren and sisters, we want our people to marry. It would be a serious thing in my family if I had a son or a daughter that should grow up without marrying. We want the parents to use their influence to have their children marry and let them marry young, when the spirit of courtship and marriage is upon them, and then we want them, of course, to marry in the Church, in the right way; and when they are married they should fulfil the law which God has given, to multiply and replenish the earth. That is the thing which many, I feel, are not doing today, to the full, and it is my firm conviction that the time will come when those who are not doing their full duty will know the loss which they are sustaining, and it will be hell and torment to many of them. Now, we know that some cannot bear children, and some because of weakness are not able to do as much as others. God knows. I believe in the doctrine of the Scripture, that children are an heritage from God, and happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them. And I believe in the saying of the Prophet Joseph that when God offers a man a blessing and he refuses to accept or receive that blessing, that man is damned. I believe that our Father has these children to give to us, and I believe that if we do not accept them we will meet with this disappointment. A little girl, eleven or twelve years of age, said to her mother one day: "Mother, why did you have so many children? When I grow up and get married I will not have so many children." Then the mother said to her: "My daughter, let us see. You are number fourteen. Suppose I had quit having children when I had thirteen, where would you have been, and where would your little brother have been?" Of course the little girl had not thought of it in that way. We value our children above price. A million dollars would not purchase one of them. There will come a time just as sure as we live, brethren and sisters, when we will know what we might have had and what we have not received, where we have rejected the offer from a kind and loving Father, so that we may then say with the poet, "Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these: it might have been."

God bless you, my brethren and sisters. May he help us to see and understand these principles, to have faith and courage to live them, that we may be saved, and be an example in these things to our children, worthy of their emulation, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

It is just three years since I last stood before a congregation in a General Conference of the Church. Perhaps some of you would like to know how I have been spending the time. Bill Nye, the American humorist, was asked by a correspondent about his habits of life and methods of work—how he employed his time, and so forth. He answered: "I do most of my writing in a sitting posture or in an auto-graph album. I belong to an athletic club and a pair of Indian clubs. When I am not engaged in thought, I am employed in recovering from its effects." My case is somewhat similar, or at least that is suggestive of my case. I have been absent three years. Half of that time I was filling a mission in a foreign land. During the other half I have been "recovering from its effects." Not the effects of my mission, either; but the effects of illness, which put an end to my mission and made necessary my return much earlier than I had anticipated.

MISSION TO EUROPE

I left Salt Lake City, bound for Europe, on the 24th of May, 1921, and landed at Liverpool in the early days of June. My wife went with me, also a party of missionaries, including Elder William A. Morton, who was to assist me in the editorial department of the Millennial Star. I had been appointed to succeed Elder George Albert Smith as President of the European Mission, the affairs of which he turned over to me on the first day of July. Early that month, at a special convention of mission and conference presidents called for the purpose, I obtained further knowledge of the affairs of the Church in the British Islands and adjacent countries. I had previously visited, in company with President Smith, a few of the English conferences, and had been introduced by him to quite a number of prominent men, including journalists, police authorities, steamship magnates, a Welsh member of Parliament, the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, and the American and German consuls; so that when he sailed for home I had matters fairly well in hand.

PREACHING ON THE CONTINENT

Soon after his departure I made a tour of some of the Continental mission fields, accompanied by my wife and two of the Elders—Thomas M. Wheeler and Arthur H. Taylor, both choice men, the former the mission secretary. We passed through France, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium and Holland, attending conferences and holding special meetings in many of the principal cities. The Elders and Saints welcomed us joyfully, and large numbers of strangers flocked to hear what we had to say. Our largest gathering was in the Casino Music Hall, Berlin, where we addressed congregations, afternoon and evening, numbering twelve hundred and thirteen hundred people, about two-thirds of them non-members of the Church. They paid strict attention, only one interruption occurring, and that of a perfectly respectful character. While I was speaking and my remarks were being interpreted "line upon line" by one of the German brethren, a young man arose in the body of the hall and politely requested the interpreter to speak less rapidly, as he wished to "get the points." Another auditor was the organist of the Kaiser's Church in Berlin; he attended our afternoon meeting, and volunteered an organ solo for the evening session. Everywhere we were treated with the greatest kindness and courtesy. Quite a change from the days when the Saints in Germany, in order to evade the police, had to meet secretly in small groups in private homes, with the blinds drawn; and when the Elders, if caught preaching anywhere in that country, were imprisoned or banished summarily. We found the work of the Lord prospering in that mission and in the Netherlands, under the efficient labors of Elders Serge F. Ballif and John P. Lillywhite, the presiding brethren, and their faithful helpers.

SCENES OF INTEREST

While in Paris we took an excursion to Rheims, where we viewed the shattered Cathedral, bombarded by German guns during the Great War; and thence, for several miles, traversed the famous "Hindenburg Line," passing through the remains of French villages desolated by the fearful strife. The scenic wonders of Switzerland, "the castled crags" and terraced vineyards of the Rhine, the famous field of Waterloo, and other objects of familiar interest to the tourist, I have not time to dwell upon. At Liege, in Belgium, we lunched at the home of the American consul, George M. Hanson of Ogden, Utah, and inspected, nine miles out, the ruins of Fort Loncin, whose heroic garrison made such a wonderful defense against the overwhelming Teutonic invasion of 1914. At Rotterdam, in Holland, I had the privilege of speaking from the pulpit of the little church where the Pilgrim Fathers held their farewell service, prior to embarking for America in 1620.

AGAIN IN BRITAIN

Having spent six weeks upon the Continent, we returned to England, landing at Harwich, and barely escaping the humiliation of being sent back to Holland to have our passports vised by the British consul, we having failed, through misinformation, to observe that formality. I had contracted a heavy cold in Holland, and for the next few days after my return to Liverpool, was disabled for active service. The fall and winter conferences of the British Mission—fourteen in number, held one week apart—were just beginning, the first one in Ireland, where things were in a turmoil, men being shot down every few minutes or so. I was kind-o'-glad I couldn't go, and Brother Morton was none too happy at being sent. But he went, and had a good time—there's always a good time where Brother Morton goes—and came back rejoicing; the return trip being particularly delightful. (Laughter.) The remainder of the conferences I was able to attend, and later I also visited the war-torn Emerald Isle.

AN ANTI-"MORMON" ATTACK

With the opening of the New Year, a fierce anti-"Mormon" onslaught began in many of the British newspapers; the "stunt press" they call it over there—the equivalent for "yellow journals" in America. Twenty-six of them were barking at us simultaneously all over the land. During the next three months our pens and tongues were kept busy refuting the slanders with which the country was flooded, and presenting the facts in relation to Utah and her people. The principal charge made against the Elders was that of inducing young women to go to Utah for polygamous purposes. The only "evidence" adduced in support of this charge was a quotation from one of our Articles of Faith—an adaptation of the well known words of St. Paul: "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things." "These things," of course, were the British girls. The accusers of the brethren affected to regard this as a confession of guilt. Let me say here that the standing reward of two hundred pounds ($1,000) offered years ago by Mr. V. S. Peet, for one case of a British girl lured to Utah by "Mormon" influence, is still unclaimed.

The intelligent classes were not deceived by the false reports spread abroad, many of which were so ridiculous as to carry with them their own refutation; but they were accepted as true by the ignorant inhabitants of the slums, stirred up in some instances by ministers of the churches. One of our most active assailants was a minister who had been a Texas cowboy, but having inherited an English baronetcy, had returned to his native land, and been made the pastor of a church in London. This reverend gentleman had the audacity and mendacity to say to his Sunday congregation: "I have seen with my own eyes the bloodstained boulder at the back of Smith's house, freshly stained with the blood of rebellious girl converts." Another of his lurid tales was to the effect that the "Mormon" men killed off their old wives by giving them a strong alkali drink which destroyed them gradually, thus making way for younger wives, recruited through the labors of the missionaries. Needless to say, alkali was not the only kind of lie used in his statement. The British Government's chief aliens inspector, by direction of the Home Secretary, applied to me for data regarding "Mormon" missionary and emigrational activities, and the same was promptly furnished. I then asked him: "Is the Home Office agitated over the present outcry against us?" Smilingly he answered: "Not at all; we understand; but we must be prepared, when pressure comes, to present the facts in reply." As for the papers and the "movies," they made money out of the agitation, which of course was their principal object. When requested to publish replies to the sensational canards, most of the editors or managers flatly refused. One of them said: "We are out to crush Mormonism at any cost."

All the Elders in the mission, and many of the Sisters, did splendid service in repelling this foul and unprovoked attack. Among its unpleasant results were the tarring and feathering of three Elders in Scotland, the smashing of the plate-glass windows of the London Conference house, and the temporary cessation of open-air meetings in some parts. But on the whole we were benefited by the assault; it awakened interest in our cause, made friends for us, increased baptisms, and enhanced the attendance at our meetings.

DUTIES OF MISSION PRESIDENT

My time was fully occupied in editing the Star (ably assisted by Brother Morton), in writing and publishing pamphlets setting forth our tenets and views, assigning and instructing missionaries, visiting the conferences, preaching wherever opportunity offered, and doing whatever else devolved upon the Mission President. I presented a handsome copy of the Book of Mormon to the Home Secretary, Mr. Shortt, and sent pamphlets and other literature to every member of Parliament and to all the leading men of Great Britain. I worked early and late, and as hard as my strength would permit—much of the time at a great disadvantage, owing to a physical ailment which had troubled me a long while, and for which, I am now convinced, I should have had an operation before leaving home. President Grant, who knew of it, had given me my choice, whether to go or not until such an operation was performed. I went without it, but after that strenuous year in the mission field, found that I could not safely put it off any longer.

IN THE HOSPITAL

Accordingly, after completing the round of the spring conferences in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, deferring (as I then thought temporarily) a visit to the Scandinavian countries, I went up to London, entered a private hospital or "nursing home," and underwent the operation contemplated. I had first-class surgical attendance, but for some reason the operation was not entirely successful, and had to be repeated; the result being that I was detained in the "Home" for a much longer period than I had counted upon. Thirty days was said to be the usual time, but I lay there for nearly fourteen weeks, physically helpless, yet with mental faculties equal to the task of furnishing editorial articles for the Star, and corresponding with the brethren here at home and with those whom I had left in charge at Liverpool. My faithful wife was with me through it all, lightening by her daily visits and tender ministrations my burden of affliction. Finally, I emerged from the hospital, and after a ten days' rest at the hospitable home of Brother Ralph J. Pugh, who with his amiable wife had been exceedingly kind and attentive, I went back to my post and resumed work—too soon, I found to my cost before many days had passed. I suffered a relapse, and became more helpless than ever.

RELEASE AND RETURN

Some weeks of misery went by and I then decided to come home, President Grant having given me an honorable release, with advice to return as soon as I could safely travel. On the 10th of November I sailed from Liverpool for Montreal, my wife and two Elders—Clyde Romney and Claude W. Hinckley—coming with me and caring for me all along the way. Never was invalid waited upon more faithfully. I could not have done without their help, especially during our unfortunate and unlooked for detention in quarantine on a bleak island in the St. Lawrence River, within a day's distance of Montreal. Two hundred and forty first-class passengers, housed in immigrant barracks on that frozen, wind-swept rock, Gros Island—such was the situation. A case of smallpox on board was the cause, and fourteen days was the regular period of detention in such cases. But this was shortened for us to eight days, through the interest taken by leading brethren in Utah, and the influence exerted by Senator Smoot with the Canadian authorities. We were all vaccinated, and as fast as the vaccinations "took," were allowed to proceed on our way. A few other Elders and Saints, with us on the island, were released at about the same time. Every courtesy was extended by Government and railroad officials, both in Canada and the United States, and although the journey was a very trying one, we reached home in safety, December 7, 1922.

GRADUAL CONVALESCENCE

Since then I have been slowly convalescing back to health. I was told by a medical doctor soon after my return, that it would be eighteen months before I would "feel fit." The eighteen months are up this spring, and my condition is now almost normal. During the winter I have read a great deal, have done some writing, and in the past few weeks have spoken fourteen times in public. A year ago or more, I could neither read nor write, nor even think clearly. There was a weight upon my brain like an iron clamp, while in walking I felt as if I were lifting great chunks of lead. As for public speaking, that was entirely out of the question. Since walking has always been my favorite exercise, and reading, writing and speaking the occupations in which I have taken most delight, you can judge of the amount of privation that my long sickness entailed. I can never be grateful enough to President Grant and other kind friends who have ministered to my needs in various ways during the saddest and loneliest period of my life. I am thankful for the many prayers offered up in my behalf—prayers that have been answered in a manner truly wonderful. I can only say: "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in my eyes."

THE SPEAKER'S TESTIMONY

Brethren and sisters: I testify in all solemnity that I know this to be the work of the Lord. I never knew it so well as I do now.

I have been just near enough to "the other side" to sense it most thoroughly, and my one desire is to live to bear testimony of the Truth. I do not testify that the Gospel is true; that would be superfluous—a mere truism. One might as well say that truth is true, or that white is white, as to say that the Gospel is true. Of course it's true, or it wouldn't be the Gospel, which is Truth itself. But I do testify that what is called "Mormonism" is the Gospel—the Everlasting Gospel; that Jesus Christ is the one and only Savior, and that Joseph Smith was and is his prophet, standing at the head of the last and greatest of the gospel dispensations, the mission of which is to gather together all things in Christ and prepare the way before His glorious second coming. I know that this work will go on conquering and to conquer—not with worldly but with spiritual weapons; that nothing can stand against it to impede its progress; and that it never will be smaller or weaker than it is today. Like the little snowball from the mountain-top, gathering as it goes, it will yet become a mighty avalanche, sweeping all evil before it, and fulfilling what the Prophet Daniel spoke concerning it. For it is "the stone cut out without hands" which is destined to grow into "a great mountain" and "fill the whole earth." God speed it on its way! Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

My brethren and sisters, I am sure that the people here assembled, and throughout the stakes of Zion, are rejoicing in the remarkable recovery that has come to Elder Orson F. Whitney. The hand of the Lord has been made manifest in his restoration to health.

This afternoon I need your faith and prayers to assist me in the remarks that I shall make.

WE STAND AS WITNESSES FOR CHRIST

We are living in perilous times, in a day when the mission of the Church is perhaps more pronounced, and our message to the world more clearly defined, than ever before. As a people we stand as witnesses for Christ in a day when the world has turned from him, when they are teaching the doctrines of men and discarding the fundamental truths of the Christian faith.

I have been reflecting, as I have listened to the remarks that were made this morning and this afternoon, and desire to present some of my thoughts, and some thoughts of others uttered by prophecy in ancient times, which are very important to us and which concern very seriously the world and the conditions therein. My thoughts dwelt upon this passage of scripture which was uttered by Nephi almost six hundred years before the birth of Christ, wherein he was speaking of the latter days:

TESTIMONY OF AN ANCIENT PROPHET

"O that cunning plan of the evil one! O the vainness, and the frailties, and the foolishness of men! When they are learned they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God, for they set it aside, supposing they know of themselves, wherefore, their wisdom is foolishness and it profiteth them not. And they shall perish.

"But to be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God.

"But wo unto the rich, who are rich as to the things of the world. For because they are rich they despise the poor, and they persecute the meek, and their hearts are upon their treasures; wherefore, their treasure is their god. And behold, their treasure shall perish with them also.

"And wo unto the deaf that will not hear; for they shall perish.

"Wo unto the blind that will not see; for they shall perish also."

And then again in one of his discourses in which he spoke by prophecy, he also referred to our day and the conditions that would prevail in the world preceding the coming of Christ.

"For it shall come to pass in that day that the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, when the one shall say unto the other: Behold, I, I am the Lord's; and the others shall say: I, I am the Lord's; and thus shall every one say that hath built up churches, and not unto the Lord—

"And they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another, and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance.

"And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people: Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold there is no God today, for the Lord and the Redemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men."

VIEWS OF THE SO-CALLED MODERNISTS

President Clawson this afternoon read to us some views that are expressed today by certain ministers, religionists who call themselves modernists, and they appear to be in the ascendancy; their doctrines are growing, and are finding place in the hearts of the people, and the true doctrines of Christ, and the testimony that Jesus is the Son of God, is diminishing, is dying out in the world. It may be true, as one divine stated, that the Christian Era is at an end, and the Church is in the course of dissolution, if he had reference to the so-called Christian churches of the day; because their doctrine is spurious, it is not the gospel of Jesus Christ, but a man-made system. But Christianity, pure and undefiled, is not in the course of dissolution; it is not dying out, it is becoming more firmly rooted in the earth, and must do so, and shall continue until it shall fill the earth, for so it has been predicted.

TRUE CHRISTIANITY

However, true Christianity, so far as the latter days are concerned, is very young, less than one hundred years of age, for it has only been since the year 1830 that the Church of Jesus Christ has been organized in the earth, and the gospel restored, containing the gifts and the blessings and the graces that existed in the Church in primitive days, and that Church with its doctrines of the gospel of Christ, shall grow.

We are the people who have made covenant with the Lord to serve him and keep his commandments, and we have received through the testimony of the Holy Spirit, the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, that he is indeed the Only Begotten Son of the Father, and that through his blood, which was shed, all men are redeemed from death, all men shall come forth in the resurrection from the dead and live again. In other words, immortality shall come to every soul, for, as Paul has stated it, "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." "And," said he, "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death," and so long as there is still in the grave one soul who has tabernacled in the flesh, death has not been conquered. Death shall be conquered, Christ shall gain the victory, and immortality shall come to every soul that has lived upon the earth. And the reason for this is that we were not responsible for death; we did not bring death into the world, and so we are redeemed through the blood of Christ, from that condition, and immortality shall come to us, both the unrighteous as well as the righteous, and all men shall stand again in the flesh to be judged according to their works. But in addition to all this, through the blood of Christ, men are also redeemed from their own sins; but on condition of their repentance and their acceptance of the principles of the gospel. They must believe in him, they must accept him as the Son of God, they must set themselves in harmony with the truth which we call the gospel. They must accept these principles and walk in accordance with them in order that they may be redeemed from their own sins, and thus be prepared to receive something greater than immortality, even eternal life. Eternal life is that kind of life which our Father in heaven possesses. For he who has eternal life must have the kind of life that God has, for he is eternal. And so those who will repent, who will receive the gospel, walking righteously before the Father, shall receive this great reward, and shall have the privilege of entering into his presence and dwelling with him and with his Son, Jesus Christ, where they shall receive a fulness, if they are faithful and true in all things, even unto the end.

OUR MESSAGE TO THE WORLD

Now, I say we are witnesses of the truth. It is the mission of every man holding the priesthood in this Church to preach Christ and him crucified. That is our message to the world; and the message is sorely needed in the face of these false doctrines taught by the power of men. When men are turning from the Lord and seeking to find everlasting truth without his aid, our mission becomes all the more urgent in calling men to repentance and to a belief in the redemption brought to pass through the atonement of the Son of God, whose blood was shed for the sins of the world.

WE BELIEVE IN A LITERAL RESURRECTION

We believe in the literal resurrection of the children of men. President Rudger Clawson read to us the statement that was made by Matthew, an eye witness of the resurrection of Christ, and many of the Saints who lived before that day, who came forth from the dead after the resurrection of the Son of God. Matthew stated that "the graves were opened; and many bodies of the Saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graves, after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." This was as literal as Ezekiel said it would be, so far as the resurrection of the bodies from the graves was concerned, there can be no mistake about that. Christ was the first fruits, and afterwards those who believed on him, and eventually all men shall come forth.

It is our message and our mission to the world, to preach this truth, and to establish faith in the hearts of the people, and endeavor to get them to believe in Jesus Christ as their Redeemer and as the Son of God.

I would like to refer to one or two other passages of Scripture bearing upon this point of the resurrection. Ezekiel, one of the prophets of old, was commanded by the Lord in a vision to prophesy. In the vision he was taken out into a valley of dry bones, and they were very dry, and the Lord asked him the question: "Son of man, can these bones live?" And Ezekiel answered, "Thou knowest." So the Lord said to him:

"Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.

"Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

"And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

"So I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone,

"And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above; but there was no breath in them.

"Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live."

Now the world would tell you that this did not mean those who were dead literally, but those who were dead in sins, who, because of transgression, had been cut off from the Lord; but the Lord is very specific for we read further:

"So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

"Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off from our parts.

"Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves."

So the Lord was very definite in regard to this matter. There is no mistake about the definiteness of the language at all.

Isaiah, speaking of the resurrection, had this to say, in reference to Israel especially:

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."

Hosea has also testified as follows:

"I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes."

MODERN TESTIMONY OF THE RESURRECTION

And so have prophesied others of the ancient prophets; and so have testified the witnesses of the New Testament; but in addition to all these we have the witnesses who have lived in our own day. We are not in doubt, the Lord has not left us helpless to grope without the light. We have had in our midst, those who have beheld heavenly beings, messengers who have been sent to reveal the truth, who have passed through the resurrection; who have come forth from the dead, and are alive again. Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, Martin Harris, and others, have testified to the world that they have been in the presence of beings who have come forth from the dead, through the resurrection. These personages lived anciently, and came to the earth again to establish the truth of the everlasting gospel. And the witnesses unto whom they came have testified to all the world that these things are true—that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world, and the first fruits of the resurrection. This testimony is binding on all the world, for these men are reliable witnesses. Men may say they do not believe it; they may say there is no truth in it, but the fact remains that in bearing witness of these truths, the witnesses have complied with the law, and their testimony is now binding on all men. In the mouths of as many witnesses as seemeth good, God has established the truth of all things, and all who reject the testimony of these witnesses do so at the peril of losing their own salvation, for God will not be mocked.

I testify that I know these things are true, and you who are assembled here know they are true. That is our mission and testimony, I repeat, unto all the world, to bear witness and cry repentance, that men may be brought to repentance and receive a remission of their sins through obedience to the principles of the gospel. May the truth spread and righteousness prevail, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "The time is far spent, there is little remaining."

Elder Joseph B. White, President of the Hyrum stake of Zion, offered the closing prayer, and the conference adjourned until 10 o'clock Saturday morning.

SECOND DAY

MORNING SESSION

Promptly at 10 o'clock, Saturday, April 5, 1924, President Heber J. Grant announced that the choir and congregation would sing, "O say what is truth?" as the opening hymn.

After the singing of the hymn, the opening prayer was offered by Elder Thomas D. Rees, President of the Juab stake of Zion.

The choir and congregation sang, "How firm a foundation ye Saints of the Lord."

All the seats were occupied and many people were standing in the aisles, both in the gallery and on the main floor.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Of the General Authorities of the Church, there are absent from our conference Elders Reed Smoot, David O. McKay, John A. Widtsoe, and George Albert Smith, of the Council of the Twelve. As you all know, Brother Smoot's duties prevent his attendance. We had hoped Brother Widtsoe might be here, but the Commission of which he is a member demands his attention, and he has written his sincere regrets for not being present at the conference. We have a cablegram from Pres. David O. McKay, that "the conference presidents of the mission in special assembly send greetings to the First Presidency and other authorities and the Church at home. God bless you." Brother George Albert Smith is absent on account of sickness. We hope he will be with us before the conference is concluded.

ELDER CHARLES W. NIBLEY

Yesterday morning, as we were coming to conference and as the clouds betokened that we might have a storm, we heard on every hand the old saying, "Yes, its going to storm—the regular conference storm." Well, it did not storm, and to-day we have the most beautiful weather that could be found anywhere in the world. I do not know where you would go to equal it. So I feel happy this morning for the good weather with which we are blessed for our conference.

I am grateful to the Lord for being permitted to labor with my brethren in connection with this great work, in which labor I have been engaged for many years. I rejoice in its growth and in its development, and I am glad to add my evidence or testimony to that of President Grant that I believe the Church, spiritually and temporally, is in a stronger, a better and more advanced condition to-day than it ever has been in its history. We are more numerous to-day than we ever have been and therefore we ought to be stronger, and are.

I can speak, I believe, for the work that is under the care of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church, the work of the Lesser Priesthood. I think I can safely say that never in the history of the Church has that work been in such good shape, nor has it been better looked after, nor indeed as well looked after by the bishops and those in charge of the responsibility of looking after the lesser priesthood, as it is to-day. So that also shows growth and development. Notwithstanding all that, we are far from doing and far from being what we should do and what we should be, but we are making progress, thank the Lord.

This Church stands for all that is best in the world. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, we seek after these things: that which is best, that which makes for the success and prosperity and blessing of the people, that which extends and magnifies and upholds the principles of liberty. This Church has the gospel of Jesus Christ and according to St. Paul that system, that gospel is the perfect law of liberty, more perfect than anything else that has ever been devised, and I am thankful for that. I am grateful for this nation, for the privilege of living in this great nation, and that we are a part of it where there is more liberty for, and a better understanding of, human rights, and more of the respectful deference and tolerance for the views of others, religious views, views of different questions, more of tolerance I say, in this nation than in any other nation under the sun.

If you do not believe that, go and live awhile in the South American countries, or go down to Mexico, our neighbor on the south, or anywhere in Europe, Asia or Africa, anywhere outside of this nation, if you think you would be more contented than here, and you will come back and say, "This good old U. S. A., the United States of America, is the very best country, the very best nation, the very best people in all the world," and I am thankful that I am a partaker of it.

This Church in its beneficence, in its helpfulness, goes far in its missionary activities, and the sacrifices that are made in that connection stamp the people with having done and trying to do better, and more in helping others and extending these principles, these blessings of liberty, than any other people in all the world. The missionary activities are not only to our own race, the white race, but we have gone to the islands of the sea. This Church established, many years ago, on the Hawaiian Islands, schools, educational helps, teaching the people also how to work, how to live, how to establish themselves and be independent, and to practice the principles of righteousness and liberty and thrift which the gospel inculcates. The Church has sent tens of thousands of dollars there, helping those poor people, during the many years that have passed; has done it recently and is doing it now, during this administration of President Grant.

Then again, down in New Zealand, the Church has established there an agricultural college to help the Maori people. Of the tithes, the means that you have contributed, money has been sent down there to help those people, to educate them, to teach them the way of life and to help them in many ways, which have been a blessing to them. So also in Samoa. So with the Indians, up here in Washakie. The Church has spent a considerable amount of money to help the Indians there, to teach them and to be a blessing to them—a few of the Papago Indians down in Arizona also; a few down here at Cedar City and a few elsewhere who live around us. The Church has always been and is now helping in all these different directions, and it is a good work, a commendable work. I wanted to make a note of these items so that you may know, my brethren and sisters, how the means that you contribute to the Church are used. You have heard from the President how practically all the means contributed have been sent back to the people for schools, educational purposes, for the building of churches, for the operation and maintenance of church activities. Practically all of the tithes have been sent back to the people in the wards, in the stakes, for temples, for hospitals and in all these activities which are good, which are commendable and which are a blessing to the people. We should try to do a little more than we are doing, if we have, and we do have, the best principles to govern us, laid down by the Lord Almighty; we have a knowledge that he established his work and that he raised up wise men, as he says in one of the revelations, for the very purpose of establishing the Constitution of this land, this law of liberty and tolerance that we are enjoying and being blessed with. Having that, then, there should be further evidence to show that we have the gospel. I ought to be a better citizen in consequence of the religion of Jesus Christ, this perfect law of liberty, than I could be without this gospel. It certainly does not make me a worse citizen, more narrow or bigoted; but it enlarges my soul; it makes me tolerant; it makes me helpful; it makes me kind to my neighbor; it enjoins upon me all the duties of helpfulness and righteousness that pertain to the gospel of Jesus Christ; so that I should be better as a citizen, in a civil sense. My home should look as nice as the home of anybody else, and as good as my circumstances will permit. My fence should be kept up nicely; my surroundings should be clean; my home should be clean. Cleanliness is next to godliness. In fact, I think you will never get any great amount of godliness till you first get cleanliness. So our places, our homes, our gardens, all that we have, should be just a little better in consequence of the gospel. Our taxes should be spent more carefully than any other people spend taxes. We should be able to invite people to settle among us in consequence of low taxes and good orderly government, in comparison with others. So I say improve your homes, brethren and sisters, improve your fields, improve your stock. Clean up, plant trees, beautify Zion, make the desert as a garden, and the wilderness to blossom as the rose. In the old scriptures the Lord said he "will make the wilderness like Eden, and the desert like the garden of the Lord. Joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody." The voice of song and melody should be extended also, and all that is good and all that is great, all that pleases mankind we should try to do, and the knowledge of God will be extended. We have heard repeatedly, and we will always hear it, for it is the mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to make known the story of Jesus and him crucified. Just what he is, just what he stood for—that will always be the great endeavor and the great part of the mission of this Church; after we are all gone, it will still be going on.

But in all of the little things of life we should be just a little better, a little more kind as husband and father, a little more courteous, a little more polite. Do we exemplify that in our lives, in our families? Are husbands—these husbands that I see by the thousands before me—are we just as good to our wives as we could be and should be? You know if you are invited out to a dinner party, it is quite customary, quite the proper thing, and a very genteel thing too, to say: "We have had an excellent dinner. It was very fine. I have enjoyed it immensely." Did you ever say that to your wife—do you, husbands? She has cooked for you many a good dinner. Did you ever say: "Wife, that is a fine dinner. That is just as good as anybody can cook." No; if she said: "Well, John, husband—how did you like your dinner?" "Why, it was all right, wasn't it? I didn't see anything wrong with it." It would be so unusual to get a word of courtesy and compliment from the husband to the wife. I recall a line or two of Burns on this subject:

"Ah! gentle dames, it gars me greet, [it makes me cry]
To think how monie counsels sweet,
How monie lengthen'd, sage advices
The husband frae the wife despises!"

And it is often so. Of course, the counsel, good as it is, can be too lengthened. You sisters ought to remember that, too, not to make your advice and counsel so everlastingly long. Be tolerant and improve in that. "How many lengthened, sage advices the husband from the wife despises." Well now, we can be courteous with our children, and kind; we can teach them politeness—these little civilities, these little things after all distinguish between the savage and the civilized. That is all they are, decent civilities, politeness, courtesy, a little attention. How many husbands help their wives as they should?

I stood at my window, only the other day, and watched a couple going down the street—a big, strong young fellow and his wife, a beautiful woman, tagging behind him. I thought, "They are married, all right." If he had not been, why he would have had hold of her arm, showing her a little attention and courtesy, and I felt like I would like to go out there and kick that fellow. She was good looking, too. That made me dislike him more. But after all, brethren and sisters, these kindnesses, these attentions are what make people better. Why, that man and woman put me in mind of the Indian with his squaw, she walking behind, tagging behind. She was not carrying any load. If they had had a baby, she would probably have been carrying the baby in her arms and he would have carried the door key. That is the kind of courtesy that was shown.

Now, plant trees, take care of your farms, save your means.

We are living in an extravagant age. Don't you know that there are very few people nowadays who know how to save a dollar. We know how to spend it galore; but to save it, to practice self-denial and say, "No, I can get along without that," we cannot do it, seemingly, any more. We just have to spend and spend. Now let me put this into your mind, brethren and sisters, you can always spend your money tomorrow; don't forget that. It will be good tomorrow. Keep it in your pocket today and then wait until tomorrow again. You can always spend your money tomorrow; practice many other good qualities which make for independence and well-being and which will deliver us from so much trouble; that which helps to keep us out of debt. Get out of debt and keep out of debt. Cultivate your farms; stay with your farms; make one acre produce what two are now producing—it can be done as a general rule. Why not do it; why not show to all the world that by our very surroundings, here are "Mormon" settlements, the best in the land. I remember the first time I went up into Canada. We rode through those endless miles of plains and not a tree. Presently we came in sight of some trees growing away up in the country there, and I said: There is civilization; there is a "Mormon" settlement, because it was different. There were settlements straggling here and there all along, but no trees. But when we came to the "Mormon" settlement there were trees, there were evidences of something more, something better than other people had.

So in all of our surroundings and all that we have to do and to do with, we ought to practice those principles which the gospel teaches. And as President Grant emphasized yesterday, walk in obedience to the commandments. That is repeated all the way through, in almost every revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith. In the revelation on the Word of Wisdom we are commanded to abstain from this and abstain from the other; if you do all these things and walk in obedience to the commandments as well, blessings are promised. Now walking in obedience to the commandments of the Lord, we ought to do all these little things, for they are commandments. I am commanded by those who have presided over me to get out of debt, to pay up my debts when I can, and as soon as I can; to keep out of debt, to practice every virtue—be honest, be true, be faithful, be courteous, be tolerant, be all that makes for the best citizenship in all the world. That is what should distinguish us from the world. The Savior said in his time: If you give merely to your sisters and your cousins and your aunts, (he did not use that phrase but that is undoubtedly what it amounted to) do not even the Publicans so? What better are you than they?

We ought to be better, having the best government that there is, I mean Church government, which supplements, adds to and enhances and glorifies the civil government, good as it is, the Church government is still better. For as St. Paul said, "It is the perfect law of liberty." Having that, ought we not to show it in all our surroundings, in all our walks of life, in everything pertaining to us in our civil government with which we have to do—in treatment of our brethren and sisters, settling our difficulties one with another, in all things that make us better and more civilized, more polite, more generous, more big-hearted, more unselfish in all things; to build up the kingdom, to glorify our God and make us different, a little different from most other people. If the gospel does not do that, then it has failed with us. I say that it does accomplish these things. If you do not think there is a difference between the people here of this section and other peoples abroad, you just go and live abroad six months, anywhere outside of the confines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: you will find a difference. There is a power of godliness here that cannot be found anywhere else in the world, and I testify to it. The revelation to the Prophet Joseph, I think it is in the 84th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, says this, that with this Priesthood which he has given to this Church, the power of Godliness is manifest, and further, without this Priesthood and the ordinances of the gospel, the power of godliness is not manifest to men in the flesh, anywhere, at any time. Now having that influence and power, we know, my brethren and sisters, that it will make us better and that we are a little different in so many ways. It was pointed out to us yesterday that there is a brotherhood and a fellowship and an interest, an unselfish interest in people, more than most peoples have.

I see that my time has expired. The Lord bless you, my brethren and sisters, and bless this work. I testify to you, once again, that it is God's work. I believe most thoroughly, completely, and potently in the fact that the Lord Most High and his Son Jesus Christ did appear and teach and instruct Joseph Smith the boy prophet. I believe it as powerfully as if I had seen it with my own eyes; and that the angel Moroni did come and instruct Joseph Smith and reveal the Book of Mormon, and that that book was translated by the gift and power of God. I believe it as potently as if that angel himself had talked to me. I do not see how I could believe it any more if I had the ocular evidence. I know it is true, I feel it in my soul. God bless you, bless this Church, bless these servants of his who labor all the day long for your benefit and for the benefiting of the Church, and for the glorifying of the name of our God in the earth, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The words of Bishop Nibley, concerning thrift and economy, should be hearkened unto by us all. It is our duty to live within our means, and to learn that happiness in life is in the spirit and not in worldly things. Benjamin Franklin said wisely: "It is not only important to earn a living, but to conserve a living." How true it is that the eternal needs the temporal.

The sessions of this conference have reminded me, time and time again, of the words of the prophet Isaiah: "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness." And Robert Browning said once: "I thirst for truth, but shall not drink until I reach the source." This was the thought that the little boy Joseph Smith had, when he went into the woods on a spring morning in 1820, and asked God for light. God answered him, and the boy beheld his God, and at his side, the Redeemer of the world. This is the greatest message of history during the nineteenth century. H. G. Wells has shown in his Outlines of History that the world has had great epochs when mankind has risen to a higher life. Such epochs have been the rise of the Jewish race to religious power; the birth of Christ, the Renaissance and Reformation, and finally the French Revolution and the rise and development of modern science. But the advent of God into the world when he answered the little boy Joseph Smith is an event that the future world will yet have to reckon with. It is one of the great events in history. To Joseph Smith, life was one supreme duty, and it was to be filled with days in which he should seek for truth. He knew that a "highway should be there and that it should be called the way of holiness," and he was not satisfied to drink of truth until he had reached the source. The gospel of Jesus Christ was given to the world at a new period of history. It was when the Government of the United States was in its infancy, yet it had been launched with the greatest political and civic ideals that were ever known to modern times. It was a new period of social and economic life, and during the period or two decades from 1830 to 1850, there was more advancement in industrial history than there had been in all the history of the world up to that time. With the coming forth of the gospel, new life and understanding of the ways of God came into the world, and we who bear the Priesthood understand those ways and we should live them to the best of all that is within our spiritual powers. You recall the gracious prayer of Paul the apostle as he wrote to the Ephesians:

"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God."

Joseph Smith lived when men were doing new things and solving new problems in life. And I wish to say that Joseph Smith was such an important figure in our religious history that attention cannot be directed to him too often. He was the prophet of a formative, idealistic age. "His is a voice from the heights bathed in the sunshine of the spirit." He spoke with his Maker, and the gospel of the Lord has come back to his children. And so, my brethren and sisters, in thinking of the great latter-day prophet, I think of the last lesson of life, "the choral song which rises from all angels and is a voluntary obedience, a necessitated freedom. When man's mind is illuminated, when the heart is kind, he throws himself joyfully into the sublime order and does with knowledge, what the stones do by structure." Joseph Smith thirsted for truth, but did not drink until he had reached the source.

The gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is to-day being carried to all the world. Of all people who are to be taught the divine message, the American Indians will, I think, accept it as quickly as any. The Indians of America are naturally believers in the Great Spirit, and their traditions and myths indicate that they know something of the depths of religious feeling. Soon after the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in 1830, four Indians, we are told, appeared on the streets of St Louis. They were wan and haggard after a journey of many hundred miles from the wilds of the far West. They were of the Nez Perces and Flathead tribes and explained that they had heard of the white man's book from heaven and had come to find it. General George Clark, commander of the military post at St Louis entertained them, and they were shown about the city which to the Indians was the civilization of the "pale faces." Two of the Indians died within a few weeks, and some days later the other two determined to leave with a fur-trading company for their homes beyond the Rocky Mountains. General Clark gave a dinner in their honor to which were invited a number of military officers and citizens. At this dinner Rabbit-Skin-Leggings and No-Horns-On-His-Head, for these were the names of the two Nez Perces, were told about the Bible and the desire of the white men to treat all the native Red Men of America with equity and justice. Then one of the Indians arose and spoke, and according to some accounts, this is what he said:

"I came to you over a trail of many moons from the setting sun. You were the friends of my fathers who have all gone the long way. I came with one eye partly opened, for more light for my people who sit in darkness. I go back with both eyes closed. How can I go back blind to my blind people, I made my way to you with strong arms, through many enemies and strange lands, that I might carry much back to them. I go back with both arms broken and empty. The two fathers who came with me—the braves of many winters and wars—we leave asleep here by your great water. They were tired in many moons and their mocassins worn out. My people sent me to get the white man's Book from Heaven. You took me where you allow your women to dance, as we do not ours, and the Book was not there. You took me where they worship the Great Spirit with candles, as we do not ours. The Book was not there. You showed me images of the Great Spirit and pictures of the good and the Beyond, but the Book was not among them. I am going back the long trail and sad trail to my people of the dark land.

You make my feet heavy with burdens of gifts, and my moccasins will grow old in carrying them, but the Book is not among them. When I tell my poor people, after one more snow, in the Council, that I did not bring the Book, no word will be spoken by our old men, and our young braves. One by one they will rise and go out in silence. My people will die in darkness, and they will go on the long path to other hunting grounds. No white man will go with them and no white man's book to make the way plain. I have no more words."

The two Indians went back to their homes, and soon after the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, of New York, sent Marcus Whitman, Samuel Parker, and Dr. Henry Spaulding to teach and convert the tribes beyond the Rocky Mountains. Both Whitman and Spaulding took their wives, and they were the first women to go to Oregon and to cross the Rocky Mountains. They established missions, and opened schools for the Indians, and Mrs Spaulding printed chapters of the Bible on an old printing press. The work of the missionaries did much to bring the Oregon Territory, later, a part of the United States.

I hope the day will come when the gospel of Jesus Christ will be taken anew to the various tribes of American Indians, and I have confidence that they will understand the true message of the Redeemer. I pray God that all mankind may awaken to him who giveth eternal life.

I have enjoyed with you, my brethren and sisters, the testimonies of the brethren. The Lord has placed great weight upon two sources of testimony. We might call one the divine witness and the other human witnesses. Moroni, in the last chapter of the Book of Mormon, calls our attention to this great witness, the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, who will teach us of those things that we may not perfectly find out from mere human evidence. I am persuaded that the Lord has also placed weight upon mere human evidence, because it was foreordained more than twenty centuries before the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon were actually selected, that there would be three such witnesses; that there should be the one witness to whom the book should be delivered, and there should be three special witnesses, "and in the mouth of as many witnesses as seemeth him good will he establish his word." Read II Nephi 27:12, 13 and 14, and you will get more fully the force of what I am trying to present.

Of course, Joseph will always take first place among human witnesses. His testimony is very satisfactory, examine it from whatever point you may. He lived twenty-five years after the first divine manifestation to him, and his every act and word, and his whole life's purpose, were in accordance with the great message which he had received. His testimony has good carrying power, just as the apostle

Paul had good carrying power in his testimony that he had seen a vision, as he went on his way to Damascus to persecute the saints, and was miraculously converted. Indeed there is a similarity between the carrying force of the testimony of these two witnesses—Paul in his day and Joseph the Prophet in his. Inasmuch as it was an event of importance to have these three witnesses, their testimony has good carrying force, if you get my meaning from that expression. Test it in any way you may care to test mere human evidence, and it is satisfactory.

David Whitmer, in the early 80's, was interviewed by Elder James H. Hart, and was asked concerning his testimony introductory of the Book of Mormon. This interview was placed in verse form, and afterward read to and approved by David Whitmer :

He lifted up his voice, and thus replied:
 "My written statement I have ne'er denied;
 I saw the angel, and I heard his voice
 And wondrous things that made my heart rejoice.

"This interview was sought with earnest prayer,
 The Prophet and three witnesses were there,
 But Martin, conscience-struck, declined to stay,
 And wandered off alone, to watch and pray.

"I do not know the angel's rank, or name,
 Who on this great and glorious mission came.
 I know that he was clothed with power and might,
 And was surrounded with effulgent light.

"No tongue can tell the glory and the power,
 That was revealed to us in that blest hour;
 The plates of brass and gold the angel took,
 And placed before us like an open book.

"We saw the fine engravings on them, too,
 And heard the voice declare the book is true;
 No power on earth could from our minds efface
 The glorious visions of this trysting place.

"We've done, as then commanded we should do,
 And testified the 'Mormon Book' is true;
 And was translated by the power given
 The Prophet Joseph, by the God of Heaven.

"Thousands of people have been here to see,
 The 'copy' Oliver has left with me;
 The characters, moreover, Martin took Professor Anthon—words of sacred book.

"Some visit me who 'Mormonism' hate,
 Some ranking low, and some of high estate;
 I tell them all, as now I say to you,
 The Book of Mormon is of God, and true.

"In yonder room I have preserved with care,
 The printer's copy, and the words so rare;
 The very words from Nephi's sacred book,
 That Martin to Professor Anthon took.

"If this be not the truth, there is no truth,
And I have been mistaken from my youth;
If I'm mistaken, you may know from thence,
That there's no God, no law, no life, no sense.

"I know there is a God—I've heard his voice,
And in his power and truth do still rejoice;
Though fools may ridicule and laugh today,
They yet shall know the truth of what I say.

"I've suffered persecution at the hands
Of hireling preachers and their Christian bands;
I've braved their hatred, and have them withstood,
While thirsting for the youthful Prophet's blood.

"They came, four hundred strong, with visage bold,
And said, 'Deny this story you have told,
And by our sacred honor we'll engage
To save you from the mob's infuriate rage.'

"A mighty power came on me, and I spake
In words that made the guilty mobbers quake;
And trembling seized the surging crowd, and fear,
But left unharmed, I felt that God was near."

And this same witness gave this testimony as his dying statement, as did the other two. Martin, now buried in Clarkston, concerning whose resting place there is a friendly rivalry between sections of the country where he is buried, as to which shall have the honor in their cemeteries of having the ashes of this witness finally to repose—it was the dying statement of Martin as also of Oliver.

David called a physician to certify that he was of sound mind and memory, and not under undue influence of any person, was rational in every way, and then gave his testimony. There is a significance that I would call your attention to in connection with this testimony, being the dying statements of these men; because peculiar significance is attached to testimony that amounts to a dying declaration or a dying statement. One of the early common law jurists—said of such testimony given "when every hope of this world is gone, when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth," that "a situation so solemn and awful is considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that imposed by an oath administered in court."

The law as it prevails in the United States, notwithstanding the sixth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which secures to the accused "the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him," attaches such powerful weight to a dying declaration that under certain circumstances hearsay testimony will be received of a dying declaration. One American jurist expresses the rule as follows:

"When dissolution is approaching and the dying man has lost all hope of life, and the shadows of the grave are gathering in around him and his mind is impressed with the full sense of his condition, the solemnity of the season and hour gives to his statement a sanctity of truth more impressive and potential than the formalities of an oath."

We find that Shakespeare well understood this principle, because in his play of "King John," he makes one of his characters, one Mellon, who is in extremis, and who is testifying under those circumstances, to disclose contemplated treachery on the part of King Louis, When disbelieved by those to whom he tells his story, he exclaims: "Have I not hideous death before my view, retaining but a quantity of life, which bleeds away, even as a form of wax resolveth from the figure against the fire? Why in the world should I deceive, since I must lose the use of all deceit? Why should I then be false, since it is true that I must die here, and live hence by truth."

So we may gather from that, something of the force that we are justified in attaching to the testimony of these three witnesses, who never varied in their statements, notwithstanding this one, a part of whose interview I have read, did not live long enough to come back into the full fellowship of the Saints; yet he was always impressed with the sacredness of this testimony. These men whom it was determined centuries in advance should occupy the important position of special witnesses, should be indeed men of integrity and of fidelity, and of rare courage, so that they might ever stand for the truth of that which they gave. And Joseph, as I said, who would always be the principal human witness to the divinity of the restoration of the Gospel and the restoration of the Priesthood, went consciously to his martyrdom at Carthage, just as anciently the Master went voluntarily and consciously to the great sacrifice of his life at Golgotha.

And so we have had testimoneis reflected here of both these varieties—the testimony of the brethren of that witness which has come to them by the great Testator—the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, spoken of by Moroni as a witness to the truth of the Book, when it should come forth, and we have had these other testimonies of various grades. Indeed we can scarcely pick up a magazine or a book in the world without receiving testimony of some sort to the divinity of so-called "Mormonism."

I thought, while President Grant, yesterday morning, referred to the revelations through the Prophet Joseph Smith of the obligation upon parenthood to take care of their children, of a recent article by Dr. Charles William Eliot, the president emeritus of Harvard, who stands as the grand old man of education, occupying the same relative position towards letters that our grand old man of the Church, President Penrose, occupies with reference to theology and religion in our Church. These men are the very nestors in their respective realms. Dr. Eliot, who just passed his ninetieth birthday—not quite so old, as you will observe, as our beloved President Penrose—is concerned at the way the youth of this land are being trained. He calls attention to three great divisions of life in this country, the Anglo-Catholic, the Protestant denominations, and what he calls the "unchurched." And then he gives us a picture of how these "unchurched," as he calls this great division of our citizens, bring up their children. This article was published in last month's number of the Atlantic Monthly.

"Their children are not baptized nor christened; if dangerous illness invades the family no priest or minister is requested or even allowed to visit the sick one; when a death occurs in a family the funeral is conducted from the undertaker's 'Funeral Parlor' or 'Funeral Home' with such singing and reading as the undertaker cares to provide. Marriage is a civil process only. The great events in human life—birth, puberty, mortal sickness and death—receive no religious notice with them. No such experiment on so vast a scale has ever been tried since time began as this considerable fraction of the American people are now trying—namely, bringing up children without any religious instruction, or any transmission to the rising generation of moral traditions handed down through primitive, barbarous and civilized peoples in succession."

While Dr. Eliot is of a nature inclined naturally to be optimistic and hopeful, one can perceive his concern as to this experiment, the like of which has before never been performed, as he says, on so large a scale as this. One writer gives these lines:

"One ship drives east and another drives west,
While the self-same breezes blow,
'Tis the set of the sail, and not the gale,
That bids them where to go.
"The winds of the sea are like the waves of the fates,
As we journey along through life,—
'Tis the set of the soul that decides the goal,
And not the storms or the strife."

So we are trying to use the organizations of the Priesthood, and all good helps in government, and the literature of the Church, to give the youth the right setting to the soul.

Dr. Eliot comments, you will note, on marriage being a mere civil process. In reference to this question of marriage, Chas. Franklin Thwinge, President of a University of our land, in January, 1924, Current History, confesses: "I for one, as a Protestant and as one ordained to the Protestant ministry, should be glad to see marriage lifted to the rank of a sacrament, with baptism and the communion."

Which means to us, to the rank advocated by our brethren and in accordance with revelations of the Church.

My time has expired. May the Lord bless us in this work, and help us to have the testimony that we are entitled to, the witness of the Holy Ghost, in addition to all the human testimony that supports this great cause, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

I feel that I occupy a very important position, my brethren and sisters, in standing up in your presence to make a few remarks. I appreciate very greatly the opportunity that is afforded me of bearing witness to the truth of the great work of the Lord, as it has been established upon the earth in the dispensation in which we live, and of bringing greetings from the people in the California mission, and from the sons and daughters of the Latter-day Saints, in various sections of the land, who have been appointed to labor as preachers of the gospel in this mission.

• While we are in a country largely given up to pleasure more than to the things of God, we nevertheless come in contact with a good many very choice people, and the labors of the missionaries are rewarded, from time to time, by finding honest-hearted men and women who hearken to the message that has been delivered in this age of the world, and are brought from the darkness that is in the world to the truth that has been revealed. We have a splendid company of young men and women operating as missionaries in the mission. They are very devoted to the work that has been intrusted to their care, and they are laboring to the best of their power to discharge their duty and bring their living testimony to the ears of as many people as possible. It has been a very great joy and satisfaction to me, my brethren and sisters, to be associated with these splendid men and women, one could almost be prompted to say, I think, "boys and girls."

It has been a delight to note the workings of the Spirit of the Lord upon them, and the increase of testimony and knowledge concerning the things of God that has been brought into their souls by the Spirit and power of God. It is a source of very great satisfaction to be able to say that they are giving their time, in the preaching of the gospel, very cheerfully. They are not anxious to return home. It is a very common thing to find the missionaries in tears when announcement is made to them that they are honorably released to return home, and it has not been an uncommon thing to hear missionaries say that it is a greater trial to leave the mission field than it was to leave their homes and come into the mission field. And I am glad that the Lord thus works upon the hearts of those who are called to be his ambassadors in the preaching of the gospel, that is the power of God unto salvation. They come into the mission field in fear and trembling. They oftentimes have some question in their own minds as to whether the gospel that has been taught them by their parents is in very deed the real truth of God, and the power of God unto salvation. But thank God, by giving attention to the responsibilities that have come to them through being called through the channels of the holy Priesthood to be preachers of righteousness, they make a full discovery of the truth that has been revealed, and their hearts are given to the Lord, and they labor zealously to discharge the duty that rests upon them as men holding divine authority. And I am glad to say, my brethren and sisters, that not only do these young men, who have been clothed with the authority of the holy Priesthood, advocate the doctrines of the gospel and prosecute their ministry with very great zeal, but the sisters are just as anxious, they are just as willing, they are just as faithful, they are filled with the same spirit, and they bear witness in the same manner to the great truth that has been made manifest unto them by the power of God.

I have thought some concerning testimonies, while listening to the words that have been spoken here by the brethren. We are sometimes found fault with in relation to the testimonies that we bear; men and women apparently entertain the thought that we ought not to be so sure in relation to the doctrines that we are teaching. They seem to entertain the thought that we are narrow in our views, because when we bear testimony to the things of God, and that we have knowledge concerning those things, it is an indication that other people do not possess that same knowledge. I just desire to read a word or two of scripture, and I thank God with all my soul that if men speak of us as being narrow-minded and if they find fault with us because we bear witness that we have a knowledge concerning the things of God, that we do not bear witness in any stronger language concerning the knowledge that we possess and the necessity of yielding obedience to the doctrines of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, than the ministers of the Redeemer of the world used, when they were teaching the same gospel in the meridian of time.

"This, then," wrote one of the Apostles, "is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not speak the truth; but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sins."

I do not think any "Mormon" missionary makes testimony in any stronger language than that, if we say we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie and do not speak the truth. We teach men, and we feel that we are under obligation to teach men, that they must walk in the light as the Lord Jesus Christ is in the light, and that we can only have fellowship with our Redeemer, and with the truth of God, as we thus walk in the light.

And the same writer, in similar language, teaches the same kind of doctrine: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

And then this writer says with unbounded certainty: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

And the same writer again makes declaration: "And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness."

I do not understand that I have been sent to labor in the California mission with any instruction, in any way, to compromise the word of God and the doctrines of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, but that I have been sent there to teach men that they must walk in the light as the Lord Jesus Christ is in the light, that they must turn from the doctrines of men, and the follies of men, and the theological nonsense that there is in the world today, and yield obedience to the truth that has been revealed by the Lord God of heaven. I would that I might make that clear to the understanding of those who are within our gates today. We have a message to deliver to the inhabitants of the earth, a message that has been revealed by the Lord our God, that has been sent to this world by the coming of the Father and the Son, as has been taught in our conference—divine authority restored to mortal men, by the sending of holy angels who, placing their hands upon the heads of mortal men, conferred upon them the authority of the holy Priesthood, and made them representatives of the Lord Jesus Christ, giving them power and authority to call men to repentance, and to administer legally the saving ordinances of the gospel. And this is in keeping with the revelations of God and the promises of God, made by the very apostles whose words I have read in your hearing—that there was to come a time when another angel should wend his way from heaven, “having the everlasting gospel, to preach to the inhabitants of the earth, to every nation, and to every kindred, and to every tongue and to every people, crying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come.”

It is my responsibility to bear witness that that angel has wended his way from heaven to earth, that divine authority, the power to speak in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, has been given again to men, and by that authority we call men to repentance and to the waters of baptism, that they may be cleansed from their sins, and that they may walk in the light, as he is in the light, and there is no other way, and there is no other authority upon the face of the whole earth that can thus minister the ordinances of the gospel which are essential to the salvation of the human family.

God help us to believe the truth, and stand for the truth, and teach the truth, let men say or think what they may, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

(Of the First Council of Seventy)

I rejoice this day in the testimony of the truth that has been revealed from heaven through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith; in the truth of that gospel which has been restored to the earth, which I bear witness is the power of God unto salvation. The fool hath said in his heart, “there is no God.” There are many who are willing to believe that there is some vague essence existing in the universe which they are pleased to call God, but at any near approach of that divine being, by whose power the earth and the heavens have been created, they begin to deny him. The poet has told us that “distance lends enchantment to the view,” and so I think it is with reference to the faith of many men and women upon the face of the earth.—

The farther away and more remote they can locate their Supreme Being, the better satisfied they are; but when he reveals himself to man in the day and age in which we live, then they begin to deny him. When God manifested himself in the flesh in the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, God was made manifest. He came near unto men and only those who had in their hearts a love of God were willing to accept of him as in very deed the Son of God, the creator of heaven and earth. Mankind are in darkness to a very great extent in their search after God.

I rejoice in the efforts that are made by honest investigators endeavoring to find out something of the secrets of life. I have no desire whatever to criticize all such honest investigation. May the truth dawn upon their minds, and may the inspiration of the Almighty assist them in their honest endeavor to find out the truths of heaven. But if they desire to know the truth, they can only learn it by securing the Spirit of God that comes from his presence and reveals these secrets unto the children of men. But if we possess his holy Spirit, then may we attain to this divine knowledge, and not otherwise.

My heart goes out in love and admiration and in adoration unto my heavenly Father, when I look out upon this beautiful world, and particularly at this season of the year when we see the buds swelling upon the trees, about to burst into a new life, when we see the grass coming out of the ground, vegetation making itself manifest, and when a few days hence all nature will be alive, quickened by the power of God. And my heart goes out in worship and adoration to the giver of this life, the creator of all things. I am inclined to refer to a couple of paragraphs which I committed to memory when I was a boy. They seem to carry the expression of thought that is now in my heart. The paragraphs referred to were written in the German language, and I committed them to memory while I was engaged in the study of that language. I will endeavor to give a free translation of them:

"Things that are useful, benevolent and indispensable; things which pertain to our clothing, to our nourishment and to our shelter, and generally speaking that pertain to the sustaining of living creatures, we find in nature. Water quenches our thirst. All kinds of fruits satisfy our hunger. We find materials for the building of our homes, and for the clothing of our bodies. An Almighty hand distributes among us the things that we need; but also things that are beautiful, grand and glorious hath God created; things which we view with wondering ecstasy, things that arouse our admiration and fill our hearts with joy—the splendor of the starry heavens, the morning and the evening red, the different forms and colors of the clouds, the beautiful green of the meadows, the blossoms and the flowers show us a beauty and a splendor which touch our hearts and lift up our souls in grateful adoration to God that he hath so beautifully and so inimitably adorned his great creation work."

These are the thoughts that come into my heart when I look out upon this wonderful world in which we live, and I feel to worship and adore my heavenly Father as the Creator of all things that are, in this world in which we live today. How I marvel at the infidelity, at the atheism, the agnosticism, that prevail among mankind, when they stand in the midst of these wonderful things that ought to fill their hearts with faith in God, and to turn them to him, to worship him in spirit and in truth.

When I look out upon this vast congregation before me now and realize that here are many thousands of living human beings whose faces are directed towards me, and who hearken to the words which I now speak, my heart is filled with wonder to think what miracle stands before me when so many can be attracted, and possibly interested, in the words that I now speak. Oh, how I feel that God has manifested himself in his very children that dwell upon the face of the earth, living, intelligent beings, having the power to understand and to think and to receive knowledge and understanding or instruction.

Men have endeavored to find out the origin of life. May they succeed in their honest endeavors to do so. Men have tried to prove that human beings have descended from lower orders of life. There has never been any satisfactory discovery to indicate that the human family have ever been anything else than human beings, the children of God, but, on the contrary they have always found that all life proceeds from some similar anterior life. With all due respect to what they have observed in the law of differentiation or of natural selection, they have never been able to satisfactorily show any change of species. Men have been formed and fashioned in the image of their great Creator. But even in the investigations which learned men have made, when they go back to the protoplasm, or the small cells to which they sometimes refer, even then the mystery of life is just as great as it was in the beginning. This world is teeming with this wonderful phenomenon of life. It is everywhere abundant. It manifests itself in the vegetation, in the grass, the trees and the flowers, in the animals that creep upon the earth, in the fowls of heaven, the fishes of the seas, and the beasts of the field as they are found upon the earth, and also in mankind. Mr. H. G. Wells in his "Outline of History" points out that this thing that we call life, this phenomenon, is within certain restricted areas to be found upon the earth, a few hundred feet beneath the surface, a few thousand feet into the air, and out into the streams of water and in the mighty ocean, but beyond these limitations there is no such thing as life, at least so far as the scientific world has any knowledge whatever; but within those limitations the world is teeming with life. Whence came it? We read and understand, and the philosophers and scientists tell us—and truly, too, I think—that there was a time when this earth upon which we live was a molten fiery mass, where the heat was so intense that no living thing could exist upon it. Then whence came all this life now manifest among us? Did it come by spontaneous generation? Did it create itself? Impossible! This same author points out that there are certain characteristics of life, one of them being that things that live have some motion of their own accord. It may be merely the movement of the roots of a blade of grass, but there is some self motion. Another characteristic is that all things that live must be nourished, receive nourishment or they will die, another is that living things will grow. Another characteristic is that having attained their maturity they propagate and reproduce their own kind, not any other kind. And still another characteristic of things that live is that they will die; all things that live must die. These are the characteristics of living things, different from the things that have no life, like the rocks, the metals, the gold, the silver, the copper, the lead, and the tin that have no life. Well, whence came this life that we see in abundance, this whole world teeming with it everywhere? Inasmuch at at one time, it could not have existed upon the earth; and go back as far as they wil scientists do not explain the origin of life, but they freely admit: we do not know the origin of life, then let us go to the good book and there we shall find the only rational explanation of it:

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," and all things that in them are.

And he "created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."

There is the testimony of Moses, the Prophet of God, bearing witness to the fact that God is our Creator.

Again in the days when the Savior came and administered in this world among men, Peter declared to him when he was asked, "Whom say ye that I am?" "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

That was his testimony. He knew that he was the Christ, the Son of the living God. The Savior told him: "Flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." But some people tell us that Jesus never claimed that he was the Son of God, that he never said it, and yet he declares here that Peter had received this knowledge from the revelation of God the Father to him. And again when Lazarus, the brother of Martha and Mary died, Jesus was away, but he came up and he was met by Martha who came out to meet him and said: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, he had not died." And the Savior replied: "He shall live again." Martha said: "Yea, Lord, we know in that last day in the resurrection from the dead." And the Savior made this notable remark: "I am the resurrection and the life, and he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." And then he declared: "He that believeth on me shall never die. Believest thou this?" said he to Martha, and she replied, bearing her splendid testimony: "Yea, Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Joseph Smith received a revelation contained in Section 88 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and after setting forth the fact that the spirit and the body constitute the soul of man, this revelation reads: "And the resurrection of the body is the redemption of the soul." Then the next paragraph explains how the redemption of the soul is brought about, who brings it to pass. "And," declares the Lord to Joseph Smith, in entirely different words, but telling the same story: "And the redemption of the soul," or the resurrection of the body, "is through him who quickeneth all things." He quickeneth the grass and makes it grow. He causes the buds to swell and burst with new life, and causes the animal creation to live upon the earth. He gives unto us the breath of life. He quickeneth all things, the Savior of the world. Hence he is called the Redeemer of mankind. So here we find Moses, the Savior of the world, Peter, Martha, and Joseph Smith the prophet, giving utterance to the same thing, truly in different language, under different circumstances, but all bearing record to the self same truth that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, the Redeemer of the world, the very Son of God. That is the testimony of the Latter-day Saints, and I bear witness to the testimony that now burns in my heart that this is the truth, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Wm. H. Richards, president of the Malad stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

At 2 o'clock p. m., April 5, 1924, President Heber J. Grant presided and announced that the choir and congregation would sing, "O ye mountains high."

Following the hymn, Elder Hugh J. Cannon, president of the Liberty stake of Zion, offered the opening prayer.

A duet entitled, "Love Divine" was sung by Ross Pratt and Melba Connelly.

The tabernacle was crowded to overflowing and an arrangement had been made to accommodate by radio an overflow congregation at the Assembly Hall, which was also largely attended.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

It is certainly very gratifying to see this building filled to overflowing with people, many standing in the aisles and the doorways. We have never before had such an attendance upon a week day at any of our conferences as we had yesterday and as we are having today. Amplifiers have been installed in the Assembly Hall, so that those who do not have seats here, and would like to go over there, can be comfortably seated, and hear whatever is said in this building.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

Once upon a time I had occasion to make purchases for the fitting up of rooms for office work.

NOT CONNECTED UP—A COMPARISON

I went into a large electrical establishment, there to select electroliers, push buttons, switches, bells, and annunciators. I was confronted with a splendid display of these appliances. The salesman, up-to-date in matter and method, drew my attention to the excellence of this or that piece, and showed me how well the push button provided for the wall would go with that particular hanging, or the bell that he recommended. I stepped to the button and pressed it, but, lo, there was silence. I turned a switch to see how the light would glow in the frosted globe, to which my attention had been drawn with many commendatory remarks from the salesman, but there was no light. I knew the reason, but I gave myself the pleasure of having him explain. He said: "You see these things are here for show, they are not connected up." After having made my selections I smiled over the incident as it came to me in mind, and I said: "How like some of the institutions of men—beautiful to look upon, gilded, studded, ornamental, sometimes simple and oftentimes lavish and ornate, but not connected up."

INSTITUTIONS OF MEN

Men may form institutions as they like, provided they have but good purpose in so doing, and may do with those institutions, within the limits of propriety, whatever they choose, and they may even call such institutions churches—for there is no patent on the term—and these being churches that men have made, they may be handled as men choose. So I have no fault to find at all with men or institutions who are suggesting changes in their creeds, or modifications of what have been regarded as their fundamental doctrines. They made those churches, and they can do with them just as they like. They have named them appropriately; most of the names are expressive, honest, frank and truthful; and men may do what they like within the limits of reason and ordinary propriety with things that men have made.

BEWARE OF FORMS WITHOUT POWER

Someone has remarked that there is a difference between the form and the substance. I only need to remind you of the admonition that Paul gave unto his associate in the ministry, Timothy, to be in turn given by the younger missionary to the people: to beware of the form of godliness without the power thereof. Read it for yourselves in II Timothy, third chapter. There is a context there to which I would like to call your attention, for I believe it has application in this day:

"This know also," wrote Paul, "that in the last days perilous times shall come.

"For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful unholy,

"Without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those who are good,

"Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."

Do you not think that Paul was a prophet? Was he not a seer in fact? Was he not able to see this day, these last times? He sums up his admonition in the next verse:

"Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

THE GOSPEL GIVEN BY REVELATION OF JESUS CHRIST

We read that in the wonderful manifestation of the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, to Joseph Smith in this last age, in the spring of 1820, the Lord Jesus Christ made that same comment, or declaration, concerning the many opposing, quarreling, contending sects of the times, whose creeds he pronounced an abomination in his sight; for, said he, "they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof." With marked appropriateness Bishop Nibley this morning drew attention to a passage in the 84th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants. Such part of it as he cited, he quoted exactly. The context, however, is interesting to consider, beginning with the 19th verse, the Lord having spoken of the real meaning and significance of the Priesthood, which is the power to speak and to act in the name of God, declared;

"And this greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God.

"Therefore, in the ordinances thereof, the power of godliness is manifest.

"And without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh."

Now, as I have started on Scripture reading, and I can not give you better doctrine than that we find recorded in the written word, I turn for a moment to the letter that Paul wrote to the saints in Galatia, some of whom had become careless and negligent after his departure, so that he had to remind them of their duties. He said:

"I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel:"

Then he went on to explain:

"Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

"As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received let him be accursed.

"For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."

But I ask you, note particularly the verses following, justifying what may otherwise appear to be severe, if not caustic, words:

"But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man.

"For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

PREACHING FOR DOCTRINE THE COMMANDMENTS OF MEN

We proclaim our adherence to the principle of toleration. "We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may." Some have fancied that there is a little inconsistency between what we have called the liberty of the gospel and such admonitions as that of Paul, which I have read unto you; but there is no inconsistency. Who were to be accursed? Those who preached any other gospel than that which he had preached unto them, for the gospel he had preached unto them was not of men; it had been given by revelation; and he preached it, as he had a right to do, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now he was referring to those who were on the inside, people who were going about amongst the Saints, many of whom, perhaps all of whom, claimed some standing with them, preaching a false doctrine and setting up a false gospel, and upon them he pronounced the anathema of cursing for presenting their own conceptions and their own views as the revealed word of God. Were such not deserving of a curse? Was it not deception of the most serious kind—preaching as the doctrines of Christ what was nothing more than the theories, the precepts and the commandments of men?

THE SIN OF PREACHING WITHOUT AUTHORITY

If you wish to preach these things as the precepts of men, all well and good. Let those who will, listen to them; but to preach such and affirm that they are the doctrines of Jesus Christ, unless they are in harmony with the doctrines of Jesus Christ, is blasphemy. This Church stands for the gospel that Paul preached. It is the gospel of all times, the gospel of Jesus Christ, and it has been preached in the world since the days of Adam, though there have been long periods of darkness, due to repeated apostasies, when the people have turned away, loving Satan more than they loved God, and making it impossible for the gospel to be widely proclaimed. But it has been given to the earth, again and again, through the different dispensations, which have been special conferments and bestowals of authority by the Lord for the carrying out of His purposes.

Do you not remember that the risen Lord, in giving his last instructions to the apostles, told them to go into all the world and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost? Who dares take unto himself authority to officiate in those names, the names of the Holy Trinity, if he has not been duly commissioned? Who would dare undertake to speak in the name of the Governor of this sovereign State if he were not duly commissioned? The prison bars are ready to open to receive such a one. It would be a crime under the law of the State. Who can speak in behalf of an officer of the law, if he has not been properly deputized, if authority has not been delegated unto him? Now, why shall we use one rule of common sense in dealing with the things of earth and a rule that is not in accordance with common sense in dealing with the authorities and powers of heaven?

THE AUTHORITY OF ANCIENT TIMES NOT SUFFICIENT FOR TODAY

When the Lord established his Church amongst the Nephites upon this continent, he told those who were chosen and ordained, unto whom authority was given, just how to administer the ordinance of baptism. They were to say: "Having authority given me of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." That does not give us in this age any such authority. The words that Christ spoke unto his apostles of old would be no authority unto the apostles today, nor unto any of the elders of the Church. I repeat, the words that he, the Lord, spoke unto the disciples who were chosen from among the Nephites would be no authority unto us; but in this day and age he has spoken again, and has given that same power and authority to speak in his name, and to administer the ordinances of the gospel, after the pattern that he has set; and therefore the elders and priests who take candidates, who have professed their faith, and who have repented of their sins, into the waters of baptism today, declare that they have authority given them; and, being commissioned of Jesus Christ, they baptize in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Many have assumed that men may administer these ordinances of their own accord, though such assumption is opposed to all reason. In the early days of this Church, when many were trying to get in, some wanted admission because they had been baptized in other churches; they had received the ordinance called baptism; and the Lord spoke definitely upon the matter. Read the 22nd section of the Doctrine and Covenants, wherein he said unto the people in that day:

"Behold, I say unto you that all old covenants have I caused to be done away in this thing; and this is a new and an everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning.

"Wherefore, although a man should be baptized an hundred times it availeth him nothing, for you cannot enter in at the strait gate by the law of Moses, neither by your dead works.

"For it is because of your dead works that I have caused this last covenant and this church to be built up unto me, even as in days of old."

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST HAS AUTHORITY AND IS CONNECTED UP

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the Church its name declares it to be, and the authority and power of the holy Priesthood is in it, without which there could not be, cannot be, shall never be, a Church of Jesus Christ true to the name. I thank the Lord that we have learned that truth, and that we belong to a Church that is connected up. Amen.

ELDER J. GOLDEN KIMBALL

Every man or woman who is called to a position of this kind has a great desire to be guided and influenced by the Holy Spirit. I have had a great deal of experience during my life in a public way, but never at any time did I feel more uncertain and doubtful as to my success in speaking to the people than I do at the present time. I have all kinds of experiences in talking to people. When I thought I had the Spirit of the Lord, some of the people did not think so. So that you can never tell; and if you say there is such a man living upon the earth, however inspired he may be, or however good a man he may be, who can please and satisfy all people, I question whether that man ever lived. I know mighty well I am not one of them.

Now my brethern and sisters, there is not a man in this vast congregation more happy to be with you than I am today. I am a native of Utah, I was born here, I have lived here, and I have never crossed the waters. I have heard from time to time, since our last conference, some who were non-"Mormons," some who were non-residents of Utah, and some of our own rising generation, speak very lightly about what President Brigham Young said when he entered this valley, "This is the place." Well, I am here to say it is the place, and I just came from California, too.

This vast congregation, as I understand it, consists of representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There may be representatives, and are, from every stake of Zion, and you have come up here to be awakened, to be aroused—not that you are told anything special that you do not already know. I cannot think of a thing that I ever heard that will be new to you; but if you can be awakened and return to your people and arouse them, then this has been a great conference. I had that feeling while I was away. I have not had as much physical force as I desire. I am a little low on vitality. I run out of gasoline every little while.

Now, the brethren of the authorities have been very kind to me; they have been very considerate, and I am very appreciative. I have a letter that I value more than gold and silver, signed by the Presidency of this Church, and they closed their letter to me saying: "You have our love, our confidence and our blessing." I do not know whether I am appreciative, I think I am. The Presidency never will know how much good that did me. Not that I was in doubt, not that I was in uncertainty about the matter, but I love my people, I always say, God save the people, for if it were not for people, we would not need this great Church. I do not know what God would do if he had no people. I have said it before, and I say it again. I was with an apostle on a trip in the south, and we found a bishop without any people. He wept, and came to the apostle to know what to do. "Well you will have to stay here until some people come to you." All the people he had was his wife, and anybody that can preside over his wife, I take my hat off to him. So I feel like that good woman in ancient days who said:

"Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Why, bless your hearts, I haven't a doubt in my mind—I have doubts about myself and about others—about this work. I have found God, God answered my prayers, and God softened the hearts of the people, and they fed me and they gave me a place to lay my head. It seems to me when I read the scriptures, that the apostles of old, whom the Savior chose, were stupid; they did not seem to understand nor comprehend what the Savior was trying to teach, just as some of our people are. They, the people, seem to be stupid, they seem not to understand. Finally these apostles were taken out, after the Savior had completed his labors, and he lifted up his hands and blessed them, and he told them: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." And he spoke to them again,—“Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: * * * and he will show you things to come.”

That is the same Spirit, the same guiding Spirit that our elders have; these young "kid-boys" that you are sending out all over the world. They are blessed and set apart, and that Spirit is with them. I remember when I was presiding over the Southern States mission: for two years of that time I brought home two emigrations a year, and when I went to the President's office to report, that great Prophet, the President of the Church, Wilford Woodruff, who was interested in me, said: "Brother Kimball, sit down a minute." We only had a few minutes—it didn't take five minutes. He told me more than once: "Now, Brother Kimball, I have had visions, I have had revelations, I have seen angels, but the greatest of all is that still small voice." Any elder who has gone out and kept the commandments of God, knows he has heard that word behind him saying: "This is the way, walk ye in it, when you turn to the right and when you turn to the left."

My brethren and sisters, I am not disposed to occupy any more of your time. I love God's people, I am willing to live and die with God's people. Come weal or woe, come life or death. I have a prayer that I offer sometimes when I walk by the wayside, and I say: "I now place myself and all my affairs"—I haven't got any affairs however—"in the kind care and keeping of the Father, with a loving trust, knowing that all things are working for my best good." I am willing to follow God's leading, even though it may sometimes seem hard to do so. I am blessed in all of my labors because the Father gives to me of his Spirit to guide and direct me in every situation. Like you, I have committed many blunders; like thousands of people, tragedy comes to our homes without any fault of ours; but we love our children, and I am now learning to pray: "O God the eternal Father, I thank thee that the children thou gavest me are thy children."

God bless you. I know this work is true, and I know, if I know anything, that all the keys and the powers and the authority that were vested in the Prophet Joseph Smith from God the eternal Father and his messengers, were conferred upon Brigham Young, upon my father and other apostles, upon the present president of the Church and the apostles. So all we need to do, brethren and sisters, is to work for salvation—the greatest gift of God to the children of men, and as my father said: "If you are saved, no one will be more surprised than you are." Now the Lord bless you, in the name and through the power of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH QUINNEY, Jr.

(President of the Canada Mission)

My dear brethren and sisters, if there ever was a time in my life that I desired to be guided and directed by the light and power of God, the Eternal Father, it is the present. This is the largest congregation of people that I have ever stood in the presence of, and I assure you that I feel my weakness. Still, at the same time, with your faith and prayers I desire to leave with you my humble testimony concerning the divinity of this great and mighty work that has come to us in this day and time.

There is a saying of the Prophet Joseph Smith that the things of God are of deep import, and only by careful and ponderous consideration and experience can we find them out. "Thou must commune with God." If ever a truth has come into my life, it has been this truth, during the last year or more since I have been engaged in missionary work in the world. I know that in order to be successful in the delivering of this great and mighty message, one must commune with God. One must come very near to him, must feel his power and his influence in unfolding this message of truth to the hearts of the children of men in the world; and, if I am any judge of conditions as they come under our supervision in the mission field, I am convinced that in order to convert mankind to this great message of truth, one must be endowed with the Spirit of God, which comes through humble and sincere prayer or communion with God.

You know when Christ had had some dealings with the Pharisees and Sadducees, and he had asked his disciples concerning what men thought of him; some of them told him that the people around about thought he was John the Baptist, or Elias, or Jeremias or one of the Prophets. He turned to them and said: "But whom say ye that I am?" And you will recall that Peter answered the question by saying: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Observe how positive and direct this question is. I believe that in the question which Christ put to his disciples, is contained a power that brings home a relationship between us and God, our eternal Father, so much so that if the question were put to us in the same way as it was put to Peter, and the apostles, it would need the same quality of inspiration that Peter had when he told the Savior that he was the Christ, the Son of the living God, in order for us to know also that he is the Savior of mankind.

You will recall that in addition to this question, Christ said to Peter: "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood have not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. Upon this rock will I build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." I desire to call your attention to the power there is in this statement of the Christ. So positive is it, that he told Peter that there was no question as to the origin of Peter's information regarding this definite truth concerning him. I feel, this afternoon, that not only we, who comprise the Church, are built upon this rock of revelation, but in order to know within our own selves the divinity of this work individually, we must be guided and prompted by that spirit of revelation that Peter enjoyed when he gave answer to the question put to him by the Christ. I know by experience that in order to have burning in our hearts a testimony of the Living God, we must build upon this principle of revelation which comes to us through our communion with God.

I bear my testimony to you, this afternoon, that I know, as I know that I breathe the breath of life, that God lives, and that Jesus Christ is the Only Begotten Son of God in the flesh. I know as I know that I live that Joseph Smith is a prophet of the living God, and that through him has come to us this great and mighty work, this great scheme of life and salvation. I have found in the unfolding of this scheme of life to the nations of the earth that when I have been humble and prayerful, and have appreciated what it means to get close to God, the words which I have uttered have sunk into the hearts of men and women until they have become converted to this truth.

I know, my brethren and sisters, that the power of revelation is in this Church. I know that President Grant is a Prophet of God. It has been made known to me, and I do pray God, my eternal Father, that he will bless us with inspiration, that we will unite ourselves together and pray as we have never prayed before, in our lives, that this work will be perpetuated; and when that time comes that we shall be called to meet our God, it will be said of us: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

God bless the testimonies that have been given at this conference for our good and for the glory of God is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

(President of the Northern States Mission)

I presume that the time will never come when all of the people of this country or any other country will always speak good of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Such was the experience of Christ in the early days when he established his Church upon the earth. Such was the experience of his apostles, the experience of Joseph Smith and the experience of his people, as they have tried to live lives of usefulness and righteousness upon the earth. It is, however, gratifying as I travel among the people, to find that there is a spirit of kindness towards the Church, a spirit that is being generated among the men of the country, especially among the business men, of tolerance and of good will towards the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I am always glad when people are willing to listen to our explanation of the gospel, and pleased when they speak well of this great Western community of which we are a part. I delight in hearing the favorable expressions that are made in regard to our people.

I notice on our streets and in our stores, signs which say: "Boost for Utah." We could say the same thing about Idaho, Wyoming, Arizona or Canada. I am glad that we are desirous of boosting for this great western country of ours, because it is a good country and contains a splendid class of men and women.

Our missionaries are out in the world; and I know of no greater boosters. It is true that they are out preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, but while they are doing it, they cannot forget their mountain home, they cannot forget the hills and the plains and the streams of running water; they cannot forget how God has blessed this country of ours, and they are always telling the people of the glories of the same; In no instance do they express "if's" or "but's" about any of the people of this country of ours. They forget some of our so-called "friends" and the things they say about us, and about our leaders, remembering the splendid men and women not of our faith who live in this great country of ours. That is what I like. I delight seeing men and women boost for their people as well as for their lands, their herds, their hills and their wealth. I hope that the "Mormon" people will always speak well of their country and of the people in the places in which they live.

I hope the world will permit us to direct our own Church as other people are permitted to direct their churches. I hope they will let us interpret the doctrines of our faith in the way we want to interpret them, the same privilege being given to others. If they will do this we can unite with them, and they with us, and we will go on and make this country one of the most splendid places to live in on the face of the earth.

These men whom we meet from time to time speak well of the Church because of the manner in which it has built up the country. They point to our meeting houses, they point to our public places, they say: "You believe in your Church because you are going to stay, and you build well. You believe in your country as a great place to live in and you take part in the civic life of your communities." They say, "We like the kindness and the courtesy that is extended to us through the Bureau of Information." This Bureau is one of the most wonderful institutions we have of boosting for the country and the people and the things we have. As we go from place to place we are told of the kind treatment and courtesy shown to the people when they visited here. They admire the way we take care of our young people in their recreational and their spiritual life; they admire the way we bring them together and teach them the word of God, setting them examples which they can follow, thereby becoming not only good members of the Church, but clean, fine, patriotic American citizens, who love their country and are willing to stand by it in every emergency. These young people of ours are a splendid people, and they come out into the world, and by the spirit and power of the gospel of Jesus Christ, they bear testimony to the world; and kindle a desire in people to know something more about this great "Mormon" people living in this Rocky Mountain district. Above all, they impress their hearers with our sincerity. As has been said of Christ, he spoke as one having authority, so say they of the boys and the girls and the men and the women who go out into the world and visit among them—that they speak as men and women having authority to speak for God upon the earth.

May this good spirit stay with us, may we live lives of usefulness and righteousness upon the earth, and then God's work shall grow and we shall become a greater people and a better people. May God help us to do this and to serve him all the days of our lives, I humbly ask, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM S. YOUNG

(President of the Northwestern States Mission)

My dear brethren and sisters, I desire while I speak that I may have a portion of the spirit that has thus far characterized this conference; namely, the spirit of instruction.

I have the honor to preside over the Northwestern States mission and it is indeed an honor and an opportunity. I have the honor to have the association of young men and women who have been sent out into the world to proclaim the truth, and they are proclaiming it. They are learning its value and power. I was very much impressed by a statement in the prayer of Brother John W. Hart. He said in the course of his petition: "Magnify, O God, the missionaries in the eyes of the world." They are being magnified, brethren and sisters, God hears these young men and women. He knows the purity of their lives, and you find it expressed in the teachings of the Gospel as they give them to the various congregations and people with whom they come in contact.

We have, in the Northwestern States mission, a mission among the Indians, established by President Melvin J. Ballard, when he presided over the Northwestern States mission. I have the pleasure and privilege of visiting that little mission every three months. We conduct there an Indian school, and the school superintendent of the reservation told me a few days ago that we had one of the best schools on the reservation. We know that in some of those schools conducted by other churches it is necessary for them to turn the key on their pupils in order that they shall be present when school is called for the following morning. That is not true in our school. The children love their teachers; they are as fond, almost it amounts to adoration, of their teachers as is the feeling between the white people and the teachers of civilization whom they dearly love. There is a great work to be done among the Lamanites, and these good men and women who are teaching the children of the Indians, are laying a foundation for a future work that shall be gigantic in its scope.

This brother, whom I have mentioned, asked that the missionaries might be magnified in the eyes of the world, and my plea to you is that the missionaries on their return to their homes may be magnified in the eyes of the people from whom they come. These boys and girls who have gone into the world and have acquired a knowledge and a testimony of the gospel are full of its spirit, they are desirous of spreading a knowledge of God, and it is as desirable that that knowledge should be spread at home as abroad; and I appeal to the bishops, to presidents of stakes, to the men and women composing our communities, that they will foster, encourage, and help, and that they will see to it that these young men and women have the same opportunity to preach the gospel at home as they have had while they have been abroad. We, the presidents of missions, are endeavoring to teach them to be, as Bishop Nibley said this morning, courteous gentlemen and ladies. We are endeavoring educationally, to give them the best that we possess. They will come back to their communities rich with the glorious influence that they have imbibed on their missions. Let us, brethren and sisters, perpetuate the missionary spirit, that our boys and girls possess when they come home, for I testify to you that they are the dearest, most valued, the most beautiful of associates, and they find a place in the hearts of their mission presidents second only to our own children.

May God help us to be kindly, to magnify our own boys and girls in our own community, as we have prayed that they be magnified in the eyes of the world, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER B. H. ROBERTS

During the sessions of this conference you have heard from many lands, and from many parts of our own country. I am wondering what message I can bring to you from the East. Incidentally I may say to those of you who are, by the ties of kindred, interested in the young men and women who comprise the Eastern States mission, that it is a general time of health in our mission, and that there prevails a very fine spirit among them, but that, of course, is not the message I had in mind when I was wondering what message I might bring to this conference from the East. At present it seems to me to be a good starting point for a message to repeat a scripture with which you all are very familiar, namely:

"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him.

"But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think he shall receive anything of the Lord."

Some of you, perhaps, will recognize that as the cornerstone of the history of this last and new dispensation of the gospel. It was the scripture which appealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith in great power, conveying to his soul a most solemn message. For, at the time he came to contemplate it, in the spring of 1820, he was very much perplexed because of the confusion existing everywhere concerning religion.

In the city of Palmyra, near the center of it, there are four corners, facing one another. On each stands a church, and these churches existed there one hundred years ago. The ministers of those four churches united in what was called a "Union Service"; and for weeks a very earnest kind of Christian propaganda was carried on, a revival meeting, and great interest was aroused there and throughout the surrounding country in religion. All went well, many people were drawn to contemplate the religious life, and much good seemed to have been accomplished, until the time came when the new converts were to file off to the respective churches of their choice, and then strife, division, and confusion confounded, seemed to prevail. This very greatly distracted the mind of our Prophet. The questions under consideration then were such as these—something about the decrees of God: Would people be saved by the free grace of God, and the free will of men combined, and would they thus be drawn to the feet of the Christ? Or had God pre-determined before the foundation of the earth the exact number of those who should be saved, and had so definitely fixed upon the number that it could not be increased nor diminished by any human effort, by any personal desire, or searching or seeking after righteousness? Those who were to be saved were to be saved by the pre-determined will of God, without any act of their own. On the other hand it was just as explicitly known who would be reprobate, and they could not escape by any means of repentance or other device whatsoever. The question was discussed as to whether this pre-destination of men, to salvation or destruction, affected infants as well as adults. A division existed, some claiming that all infants dying in infancy would be saved, and others claimed that only those whom the decree of God had fixed for salvation would be saved. Would the heathen be saved? That was a question debated. Was baptism essential unto salvation? Would unbaptized infants be saved, or were they among the number that it would be impossible to save, baptized or not? And so the controversy went on. Time will not permit to go into all the details of it, but this perhaps will indicate the nature of some of the discussions. None of those questions were settled by the debates which occurred, but you have been hearing very little about them for a long time. People have not been discussing them. But the point I desire to bring to your attention is this, that notwithstanding the debate on those particular questions have ceased, Christendom is not yet united. The confusion and divisions have broken out in new places.

There is a remarkable prophecy in St. Peter's writings to this effect:

"Prophecy came not in olden time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost."

"But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."

From the early days of Christianity till now there have been those who have denied the Deity of Christ; but it seems to me that these days of ours have been especially reserved for this particular heresy to reach its full development; namely, the "denial of the Lord who bought them," "bought them" by the price of his own suffering, and by his own precious blood; for never in the history of Christianity has there been such a denial of the Lord as there is at the present time,

This recent controversy first arose about two years ago, in England, when the Reverend Hastings Rashdall, the distinguished dean of Carlyle, at the Modern Churchman's Congress, held in Cambridge, declared that "Jesus Christ never claimed divinity for himself, and was in the fullest sense a man, with not merely a human body, but with human soul, intellect and will." "Again," said he, "Jesus may have allowed himself to be called the Messiah, but never in any of his"—mark the language—"critically, well-attested sayings was there anything which suggests that his conscious relation to God was other than that of any man toward God." Then in respect of the fourth gospel, as being outside of the Christ's "critically, well-attested sayings," the dean remarked: "That the speeches attributed to Christ in the Fourth Gospel," St. John's Gospel, "where they go beyond the character of Jesus as portrayed in the synoptic gospels, namely, Matthew, Mark and Luke, cannot be regarded as authentic history." That was the report of his speech at the time, when this agitation first began. Then about a year later, namely, in January, 1923, in our own country, the United States, the Reverend Percy S. Grant, rector of the Church of the Ascension, in New York City, preaching in defense of the declaration he had made the Sunday before, namely, "when Christ was on earth he did not possess the power of God," remarked: "This is certainly the teaching of the first three gospels." So that Dr. Grant, like the Dean of Carlyle, sets aside the testimony of St. John. As a matter of fact, it would not be difficult to sustain the Deity of the Christ from the first three Gospels, usually spoken of as the synoptic Gospels; and you may leave out St. John's Gospel, and in those three gospels this great truth concerning the Christ is emphasized, namely that he is the Son of God, and it follows that being the Son of God, then God—God of God; Light of Light, of the same substance or essence with the Father; of the same attributes. It is only thought necessary to establish the truth of Jesus Christ being the Son of God to make him Deity; of the same essence with the Father, as well as being the "brightness of his glory" and the express image of his person. And that is all clearly set forth in the synoptic gospels.

And now, for a peculiar reason, I want to call your attention to this thought. This controversy goes beyond the testimonies of the witnesses of the New Testament, and brings out a peculiar feature in our own special message to the world. If you will recall the very careful words of these two critics Messrs. Rashdall and Grant, the Deity of the Christ, you will have noted perhaps that they hold that: "No critical, well-attested saying of the Christ tends to establish his Deity." Well, that simply means that the so-called "modern criticism," eliminates and throws to the winds the testimony of Christ's apostles in Judea,—the testimony that Jesus is indeed the Christ, the Son of God, born of a virgin, and God's Only Begotten Son in the flesh.

The note now and then occurs in the comments that are made on this great controversy, that: "You have got yet to consider the authenticity and the credibility of the New Testament documents. That is the thing to which I wish to call your attention. Unto Nephi, the first Nephi, were given some very great visions concerning the life and the mission of the Christ, before he came in the flesh; and among other things he saw that the Gentile races upon this North American continent would have the testimony of the Hebrew prophets among them (the Old Testament); and also the testimony of the "Twelve Apostles of the Lamb" (the New Testament). He saw that these books would be mutilated and corrupted; that the Gentiles would go into great darkness and unbelief because of this mutilation of the word of God. Then he saw, in vision, circulating among the people other records, one of which was to be the word of the Lord to the seed of this man Nephi. That other sacred books were to be circulated in the land, and these second books, meaning the Book of Mormon, the record of the Nephite people, and the revelations of God in this new dispensation, clearly recognized in the Doctrine and Covenants, and also in the Pearl of Great Price,—these records would establish the truth of the record of the Twelve Apostles of the Lamb of God, Hence the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints holds in its hands, and is commissioned to use these other holy scriptures brought forth in this chosen land, speaking from the dust of "Cumorah's lonely hill," for the sleeping nations of the American Continent: and the living word of God in this age, as contained in the revelations found in the Doctrine and Covenants and in the Pearl of Great Price, brought forth by the Prophet Joseph Smith, are here to correct the errors of those who would throw out of the reckoning the word of God as found in the record of the "Twelve Apostles of the Lamb," the New Testament; they are here to affirm, with all the strength that comes from these volumes of witnesses,—this cloud of witnesses—that Jesus is indeed the Christ; that he is the Creator, not only of our own world, but of many worlds. (Heb. 1:1, 2; St. John 1:1-4). Also that He is the upholding and the sustaining power of all things; that, as pointed out so beautifully in Elder Rulon S. Wells' remarks, He is the Vital Force, that "quickeneth all things"; also that he is the Intelligence-inspiring Power of God's universe; also that He is the Love-manifested Power of God's universe; for the one great thing above all others in the mission of the Christ was to give assurance and demonstration of the Love of God for the inhabitants of the earth. As Jesus himself contemplated this his mission among men, he voiced the assurance that—"I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

Brethren and sisters, it is our mission to stem the tide of unbelief that is in the world, to answer the Christ's question on one occasion—when he the Son of man comes, shall He find faith in the earth?" In the name of God, yes! For he has provided the means of maintaining faith in Him as Creator, as Sustaining Power of the universe; as Vital Force, as Intelligence-inspiring Power, as Love-manifested

Power, and he has organized his Church in the earth, no more to be destroyed, to maintain this faith in the earth. And when the Christ shall come in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, attended by the host of Saints from heaven, the host of Saints here on earth, possessed of true faith that Jesus is the Christ, Sovereign, Lord and King, Creator of heaven and earth, and all things that in them are; the Savior of men, the Redeemer of the world, the very Son of God, "the Eternal God," to use the Book of Mormon phrase, "manifesting himself unto all nations"—these, the Saints possessed of this faith in the earth, shall welcome the Christ and the hosts of Saints from heaven, with shouts of great joy and faith.

The thought I wish to leave with you, and my purpose in quoting the text,—“If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him”—was to emphasize the fact that there is still great need, in the light of the present controversy about the Deity of Christ, to make use of this prayer; for the controversies of today, and the confusion resulting from them, are just as perplexing as the confusion of a hundred years ago. God bless the Saints, and all who would know the truth, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, “Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation.”

Elder Oliver H. Budge, president of the Logan stake of Zion, pronounced the benediction.

Conference was adjourned until 10 o'clock Sunday morning.

THIRD DAY

MORNING SESSION

Conference opened Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, April 6, 1924. All the seats in the tabernacle were occupied and every available standing space in the building. Many were unable to gain admission. Through a radio device many who were gathered at the Bureau of Information and at the Barratt Hall, listened through radio instruments to the proceedings. Besides, in the Assembly Hall, there was an overflow meeting at which Elder W. A. Hyde of the Pocatello stake presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah."

Elder Moroni Lazenby, president of the North Sevier stake, offered the opening prayer.

A duet and chorus was rendered by the choir and Mary Lindsay and Cannon Lund, entitled, "An angel from on high."

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

I cannot express to you, my brethren and sisters, the gratitude that I feel to our heavenly Father, and the joy which I experience as I look upon this great congregation of Latter-day Saints who have assembled in general conference to hear the word of the Lord. It is a renewed evidence to me that as the work of the Lord draws nearer its consummation, the invisible forces of the spirit world are operating upon the hearts of the people, drawing them nearer together, uniting them in faith, and preparing them for the great events which are before us, even at our very doors.

THE MULTITUDE COMPARED WITH AN ANCIENT GATHERING

As we stood up for the opening hymn, I thought of these words which are recorded in the Book of Mormon. King Benjamin had sent out an invitation to the Nephite people to gather together at the temple in the land of Zarahemla. When they assembled it was discovered that the temple was not large enough to contain all of the people, so he ordered a tower erected upon the outside, that he might address them from that spot. But still the people could not hear; so many had assembled. So he ordered that the words which he spoke be written and distributed among them, in order that they might all know the things which he was about to declare. This house is filled to overflowing with people. The Assembly Hall is full, and there are still multitudes upon the outside who cannot be accommodated in either of these buildings.

PROCEEDINGS OF A CHARACTER TO STIMULATE FAITH

The entire proceedings of the conference, my brethren and sisters, have been of a character, I am sure, to stimulate faith, to cause our minds to revert to the simple but fundamental doctrines of the gospel by which we are kept in harmony with the Spirit of the Lord.

AUTHORITY CONFERRED UPON THE APOSTLES

I thought yesterday, as the meetings progressed, of these words which are recorded here in the last chapter of St. Matthew :

"Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them."

"And when they saw him, they worshiped him: but some doubted" (for this was after his resurrection from the dead).

"And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost:

"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

It was the last sentence, expressed in these words of the Redeemer, to which my attention was particularly drawn, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded." and if they do this, "Lo, I am with you unto the end of the world."

Two years prior to the time when this commission was given, the Redeemer had called to him the Twelve Disciples whom he had chosen, and instructed them to go to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, and declared to them that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. They were to go, putting their trust in the Lord, with the promise that he would protect them, would provide food and clothing and deliver them from the hands of enemies, who might seek to harm them.

At the time of his appearance to the Nephites, after his resurrection from the dead, the Redeemer called twelve men upon whom he conferred authority to call the people to repentance and faith in him, and to baptize all who believed, for the remission of sins, after which he promised them the Gift of the Holy Ghost.

LIKE AUTHORITY CONFERRED UPON THE TWELVE IN OUR DAY

It is quite natural, then, and in harmony with the well-defined order of the Church, that with the restoration of the work of the Lord in the dispensation in which we live, twelve men should be chosen upon whom the apostleship was conferred, and to whom the command of the Lord was renewed; for he commanded these twelve: to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, who had not received it, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and conferring upon the baptized believer, the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands.

So important are these first principles of the gospel that in the early days of the Church the Lord commanded Martin Harris that he should preach nothing else.

THE ORDINANCE OF BAPTISM

Initiation into the Church is an event of tremendous importance, to one who accepts it. So important was it regarded in the primitive Church that we are told that the ordinance of baptism was administered to none except those who took upon them the name of Christ, with a determination to serve him, and came forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, manifesting to the Church that they had truly repented of all of their sins. To one who has thus prepared himself, the ordinance of baptism washes away his sins, and he is born to newness of life. He stands clean before the Lord, an heir to glory, exaltation and eternal life—not definitely, but conditionally; for in exchange for this priceless gift he enters into covenant that he will take upon him in the name of Christ, and always remember him and keep the commandments which he has given. If we violate this covenant, it were better never to have made it.

To be admitted into the Church, then, is but to have our feet placed in the straight and narrow path which, if we diligently pursue our way, will lead us back to God from whence we came. Having been born to newness of life, Latter-day Saints should lay off the habiliments of the carnal man, and clothe themselves in robes of righteousness, that is to say, our mode of life should correspond, in all respects, with our profession of faith.

TO BE IN POSSESSION OF THE SPIRIT OF GOD WE MUST PRAY

In order that we may retain a remission of our sins, it is necessary that we be constantly in possession of the Spirit of the Lord, and the medium through which we obtain and retain his Spirit is prayer. Prayer is the outward act by which we manifest our faith in the Lord. It is not the multiplicity of words which are uttered, that brings the desired blessings, but the degree of faith with which we approach our Father who is in heaven. It is mockery to pray to a being in whose power to hear and answer we have no faith, as I have often thought that some men do today. The Lord, referring to this subject, warned us that when we pray we are not to be like the hypocrites who love to pray standing in the synagogues and on the corners of the streets that they may be heard of men, nor to use vain repetition, thinking to be heard for our much speaking, neither are public prayers alone sufficient, important though they are in their time and place, but we are admonished that we should pray in secret, and the definite promise is made that the prayer of faith, so offered, shall be rewarded openly.

HUMILITY SHOULD CHARACTERIZE OUR CONDUCT

The doctrine of humility, taught in this lesson given us by the Redeemer, should characterize the conduct of Latter-day Saints in all of the activities of life, for he has told us that we should be clothed upon with humility, for God resists the proud and giveth grace to the humble. And he tells us that as we wax stronger in humility, we become firmer in the faith unto the filling of our souls with joy.

Latter-day Saints should seek wisdom and learn the value of righteousness and justice; they should patiently submit to persecution when it is for righteousness sake, be slow to anger, quick to forgive, merciful, but always just. They should be peacemakers constantly striving both by precept and example to bring to pass the universal brotherhood of man.

GOOD WILL AND FORGIVENESS FUNDAMENTAL

It is fundamental to the faith of all creeds that man should not take the life of his fellow. The Redeemer went further than this, teaching that he who is angry with his brother will not be held guiltless. He taught us that when differences arise between brethren, they should be settled quickly, and when once adjusted, are not to be the subject of further discussion or comment; that we should be men and women of few words, reaching conclusions quickly, but wisely, as circumstances may justify; making our decision yes or no, and let that be the end of controversy.

The law of Moses taught the doctrine of retaliation for wrong inflicted. The Master teaches that we are not to resist evil, but patiently submit to the offences of others, that we should not only love our friends, but our enemies also; that we should bless those who curse us, do good to those who hate us, and pray for those who spitefully use us and persecute us—a thing not easy of accomplishment; but nevertheless a direct commandment, and one which brings to the soul of those who apply it the satisfaction of a righteous act performed.

EXERCISE CHARITY WITHOUT OSTENTATION

In this age of organized charity, when the contributions which we make to provide for the necessities of those who have not, are advertised to the world, and we love to be known as liberal givers, it is well to turn again to the word of the Lord, for he has told us that when we give alms we are to see to it that it be not before men, to be seen of them, otherwise we have no reward of our Father which is in Heaven; that we are not to sound a trumpet before us as the hypocrites do, that we may have the honors of men, but that we, when we give alms, are not to let our left hand know what our right hand doeth. In other words, the alms which we give should be contributed for the love of giving, and with desire to administer to the necessities of others, rather than for the praise of men. It was this, my brethren and sisters, which made the widows mite more acceptable to the Lord than all that others had cast into the treasury.

SEEK WISDOM AND NOT WEALTH

Having become members of the Church, taking upon us the name of Christ, acknowledging our dependence upon him and entering into covenant that we will serve him and keep his commandments, the Lord has told us that we are not to devote our energies to the accumulation of wealth, that we shall not seek after riches, but after wisdom, and those things which bring eternal blessings; for he says that riches and the honors which men bestow will canker the soul, if not used for the glory of God, and that the lament of the rich, who have not used their wealth for the accomplishment of good, will be: "The harvest is over, the summer is passed, and our souls are not saved." Neither will poverty in itself bring blessings. It is the poor who are reconciled to their lot, and the rich who are poor in spirit, with whom the Lord is well pleased. He has admonished us that we are not to devote our energies to the accumulation of wealth for this reason, that we cannot devotedly and acceptably serve two Masters. He says that we will either neglect one or the other. We cannot faithfully, as we should, serve both God and Mammon. Therefore he admonishes us that we should lay up treasures in heaven, where moth and rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break in and steal.

BE SLOW TO RENDER JUDGMENT AND CRITICISM

The Lord has plainly told us that we should be wise and judicious, that we should be slow to render judgment or criticism of our fellows; for he has told us that with the judgment which we mete out to others, we ourselves will be judged. How often, how readily, we detect and magnify the faults of our neighbors, while we overlook our own imperfections. How often we seek to pull the mote from the eye of our brother, and forget the beam which is in our own. "Therefore," saith the Lord, "judge not, and ye shall not be judged; condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned; forgive and ye shall be forgiven." In other words, whatsoever ye would that men shall do unto you, do ye even so unto them—an admonition of the Lord, carrying with it one of the most sublime principles ever uttered by the tongue of man.

FAST WITH CHEERFUL COUNTENANCE

Fasting is a doctrine of the Church. Here again the Lord has told us that when we fast we are not to be as the hypocrites who disfigure their faces, that they may appear to the world to fast; but we are to wash our faces and with cheerful countenance appear to men not to fast; and the definite promise is made that the Lord, who seeth in secret, will reward us openly.

HONOR MARRIAGE; BE CHASTE AND VIRTUOUS

The marital relations of the world,—and to a certain degree it applies to the Church—were referred to yesterday by Bishop Nibley. Here again is a matter which is deserving of our most careful attention and consideration. The fountains of life, designed by the Creator for the reproduction of humankind, and sacred to the marital relation only, are made the plaything of faithless, godless men and women. The holy bonds of matrimony, the only order which gives proper sanction to the association of the sexes, is entered into and dissolved at will. These conditions are, in my opinion, the most dangerous menaces to our national life which exists today. The Lord pleads with us to honor the association of man and woman in lawful wedlock, and makes plain to us the penalties which are attached to the violation of laws of chastity and virtue, both in this life and that to come, and appeals to us that we shall observe these laws, which are the crown of matrimony, and should be held by us as sacred as life itself.

WHY THESE SIMPLE DOCTRINES SHOULD BE IMPLICITLY OBSERVED

I have referred to these simple, but indispensable doctrines of the Church, because it appears necessary to me to do so. We are living in the day referred to by the Prophet Isaiah, who said that the nations should rush as the rushing of mighty waters, but God would rebuke them.

I sometimes fear, my brethren and sisters, that in this mad rush for wealth, for power, for personal aggrandizement, this age of dishonesty in high places, disregard for law, and indifference to virtue, and religion, that we may be caught in the swirling flood and carried on to destruction unless we revert to those simple but fundamental doctrines of the Gospel, and put our trust in the Lord, renewing our covenants with him, that his arm may sustain us.

We are living at the time seen by Lehi, the Nephite prophet, when, because of the darkness, which covered the earth, many people who had entered into the straight and narrow path which leads to eternal life, as we have done, lost their way and perished. But those who seized and held fast to the rod of iron, which is the word of God, found their way safely through the dark night until they reached the tree of life, and partook of its fruit, which is more desirable than all others.

WARNING AGAINST BECOMING LIKE THE PHARISEES OF OLD . .

The commission given to the Twelve who hold the apostleship today is to go into the world and preach the gospel to all people, admonishing them to rely upon the merits of our Father, to take upon them the name of Christ and to keep all of the commandments which he has given, to only a few of which I have called your attention. We must not my brethren and sisters become so absorbed with the temporalities of life, with the weighty and abstruse doctrines of the gospel, that we forget these simple and fundamental doctrines of the Church to which I have called your attention, lest we become like the Scribes and Pharisees of old, of whom the Redeemer said: "Ye diligently pay your tithes and offerings, but ye forget the more weighty things of the law, judgment, justice and mercy. These," he said, "you should have kept and not left the others undone."

REMEMBER THESE SIMPLE, FUNDAMENTAL DOCTRINES

May the Lord help us all, my brethren and sisters, for I am speaking to myself as well as to you, to remember these simple fundamental doctrines of the gospel of Christ, that our lives may be such that the Spirit of the Lord may abide with us, and the revelations of heaven be manifested to us through the whispering of the Holy Spirit, which has been conferred upon every one of us, the office work of which is to take the things of the Father and make them known to us, that we may each discharge with honor before the Lord the obligations which are upon us, and wait patiently the development of his work, that we may bring to pass the redemption of his covenant people, the establishment of righteousness in the earth, when Christ shall reign triumphant among his people, is my humble prayer, through Jesus Christ, Amen.

President Grant announced to the congregation outside that it would be acceptable if they would be as quiet as possible and move around as little as possible so that those who were standing at the Bureau of Information could hear the speakers.

It is a wonderful opportunity to stand here and face this multitude of people, and I am sure some of you realize that it is a wonderful responsibility. I hope to enjoy the Spirit of the Lord the few moments I stand here, in keeping with the brethren who have already occupied this position. I have learned, to a certain degree, the weight of responsibility that has come to me as one of the youths of Israel, one of the young men of Zion, in these the last days.

President Ivins has been speaking to us concerning the commandments of the Lord, and how these commandments have been taught to us of the Lord, at different times in the history of the world. We are aware of the fact that the Lord has spoken to us in plainness, and that his commandments are given to us in our own language, simple, plain and forceful, and yet many of us are so blinded by the conditions that surround us, perhaps by the fashions of the world, with which we are surrounded, that we fail in many ways to keep the commandments of the Lord. I suppose, my experience has given me as good a view as any officer in the Church, to judge about how well the Latter-day Saints keep the commandments of the Lord. I think also that the Lord has made me in a way rather sympathetic, and when I discover my brethren or sisters seeking the Lord, for comfort, blessings, strength, courage, faith, and for other gifts or blessings, or help, I stand ready, naturally, to do my part in assisting to see that the desired comfort, and consolation, are received. But I have discovered that the greater number of those who are seeking comfort and consolation and help from the Lord are those who are in trouble, those who have unfortunately stumbled over some of the obstacles that have crossed their pathway. And so there are a great many members of the Church who are constantly seeking for help, comfort, and consolation, and the Lord in his kindness, in the great and wonderful organization of his Church, has placed officers therein to assist in administering the comfort and consolation which his children naturally seek.

I should like to bring to the attention of the members of the Church these noble and worthy officers whom the Lord has placed in his Church, they are stationed throughout the Stakes of Zion just as well as at the head of the Church. They are noble, exemplary and worthy men. They are the Patriarchs in the Church and are authorized with the powers and the keys of authority, to administer the blessings desired by the members of the Church. It is my purpose on this occasion, my brethren and sisters, to recommend these good men to you, to administer your blessings, in keeping with the instructions which have come to us from the Lord through his holy servants. They are modest in their character; they dislike very much to come to you and say: "Well now, here I am, a servant of the Lord, authorized with all the keys, authorities and powers to bless you, and I am ready, ask and you shall receive." It is not their purpose to come to you, particularly, but it is your privilege to go to them; they are authorized to act for you, and it is my faith and my testimony to you brethren and sisters, that they are humble and pure enough to act in their calling, and give unto you the blessings of the Lord, and not entirely the blessings of men. It is true that we, as fellow-men, can bless one another. We can encourage and comfort each other; but these men of whom I speak, who bear the holy Priesthood, have been especially authorized, called and set apart, they are authorized to comfort you with the blessings of the Lord. So I recommend that you do not slight or forget these good men. Pray for them as you would pray for your own household. Pray for them that they may enjoy the spirit of their office and calling in the Church.

In olden days, patriarchs were placed in Israel to perform ordinances for Christ, by the laying on of hands. Adam called his posterity together and foretold unto them the great future that might befall them, for their benefit, comfort, and guidance, and in like manner these men are placed in our midst for that same purpose, to comfort, guide and sustain us in the fold of Christ. I have been convinced that there is a blessing for every faithful member of the Church. It is true there are many members who have had other blessings, and if they are considered in a proper light, I am sure they have done no harm, and perhaps will do no harm in the future. But I think every faithful member of the Church should receive his or her blessing.

The first Patriarch in this dispensation, the father of our Prophet, when he was upon his dying bed, called his family around him and gave them his dying blessing; and when his oldest living son came, he said: "Hyrum, the only blessing I have for you is to reconfirm upon you your patriarchal blessing which you have already received." That was his dying blessing, with very few other remarks of comfort and consolation; this assures me that there is a fundamental principle in a patriarchal blessing when pronounced and recorded. It is an eternal anchor for our soul with the Lord; so it is not particularly necessary to receive a multitude of written blessings. But when these blessings are given and properly recorded, they are just as eternal and binding upon us through our faithfulness as were the blessings which were given by Adam, Abraham, Jacob or any of the former patriarchs in the times which have passed.

I have open here before me the Book of Genesis, which contains the records of a number of patriarchal blessings. They are not long, they do not cover pages and pages of manuscript, but they are very brief and pointed; and it has taken generations of time, many years of time, for their fulfilment; in fact, they are not entirely fulfilled yet—blessings that were given upon the heads of the descendants of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, and upon the sons of Jacob.

So, my brethren and sisters, if you will discover the keynote of your blessing it will not be a long one, necessarily, but an index that will point to you the book of life, the book of the way of your life, in the path that you should go to serve God and to keep his commandments. So, I say, do not wait until you are in trouble to go to the Lord, through his holy servants, but seek them out in their homes, in their offices, make appointments with them and get your blessings.

My heart is filled, today, with compassion and with the blessings of the Lord for his people, and I pray that our Father in heaven will continue to pour out his blessings upon this Church, upon those who are called to preside over it, and in it, that he will sustain them with health, strength, wisdom, and with his Holy Spirit, that he will bless the people in their homes and in their fields of labor, the Saints both gathered and scattered, that they may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord, and live exemplary lives, free from the follies and vices of the world, even though we are much surrounded by the world. Let us be that peculiar people which the Lord declared he would have. Let us hearken unto the whisperings of the Holy Spirit, and to the teachings given us, not only in general conferences, but in our quarterly conferences and in all of our local gatherings. And in the name of the Lord, as his humble servant, I bless this multitude present here today, and say unto you: Serve the Lord and keep his commandments. Hearken unto that small voice, which is the voice of the Holy Spirit, which will guide you in the way of truth, in the way of life, and then you will receive the precious blessings which you desire, in faithfulness and which have been nobly pointed out to us this morning by President Ivins. They are the blessings of the Lord, and they will be upon you and upon this people, so long as we will serve the Lord; the Lord of this Church, this land, this world; for this world is his, and we are his, and if we will only hearken unto his teachings, he will bless us temporally and spiritually. God bless you all through your faithfulness, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The anthem, "He watches over Israel," was sung by the choir.

ELDER REY L. PRAET

(President of the Mexican Mission)

I assure you, my brethren and sisters, that I sense very keenly the responsibility of addressing you for a few moments this morning, and my only desire is to add my testimony to those that have been borne by the brethren who have spoken during this conference relative to the truthfulness of the work in which we are all engaged.

Since the beginning of this conference the words of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthian saints have been passing through my mind, wherein he said:

"For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power." And I am most thankful to the Lord that in this day and age in which we live he has again set up his kingdom and established his Church and restored his gospel, and in them has placed his power; for I testify to you, this morning that the Prophet Joseph Smith was raised up of God, and did not take unto himself power, but from our Father in heaven received power to establish this great work; and the work of the Lord, in this day and age in which we live, is characterized by the power of our Father in heaven in all of its ramifications. We who have listened to the inspired words of our Prophet and leader and his counselors, and the Twelve Apostles in this conference, surely are witnesses of the power of God that has accompanied their words. I marveled last night, when we saw the body of this hall filled with men bearing the holy Priesthood, at the wonderful power there is in this Church for the work of the ministry, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the preaching of the gospel, for the warning of all men everywhere in order that they may turn from error, from false traditions, and receive the principles of the gospel and be saved in the kingdom of our Father in heaven.

I bear witness to you, my brethren and sisters, as one who labors in the mission field abroad, that the young men who go forth from Zion to preach the gospel unto the nations of the earth, are preaching it in power. They speak truly after the manner of the Master, and men marvel, and are led to comment and say, "They speak as men having authority." There is no doubt as to the genuineness, the sincerity, of the testimonies borne by the young men who preach the gospel message in the world. While many people do not accept their teachings, they do not question their sincerity. And this is a tribute, I take it, to the great power that accompanies their ministry in the world.

I know that the gospel is true. I have no definite knowledge as to what my status or standing will be in the future. I do not know that I shall be able to maintain my integrity and my faith, but I do know, and bear witness to you here today, that the thing known as "Mormonism" is the gospel of Jesus Christ; it is the power of God unto salvation, and it is a means unto the salvation of every man who will believe and obey its principles. This is the message that we are delivering in the world. I care not what obstacles present themselves before this work. The Lord himself has said, that even though the gates of hell combat against it, they shall not prevail. I have faith in the fulfilment of all that God has promised unto his people in these days. Particularly I wish to refer to my faith in the promises of the Lord made by his holy prophets concerning the redemption of the Lamanite people. My heart was touched yesterday by the recital of Brother Levi Edgar Young of the Indian brothers who crossed this continent, going to the East, in an endeavor to bring back with them that which would save their people. The pathos of their having to go back without it was truly touching to me, my brethren and sisters. And now I rejoice that God has restored the truth, that he has made known a book and brought it forth in the world, that is the history of the forefathers of these people. And in that book is prophetically held out a hope for the redemption of the Lamanite people everywhere.

We are laboring in a land beset by strife and turmoil, trouble and revolution. It would seem almost sufficient to discourage us in our efforts. But I wish to bear testimony that my faith grows, rather than diminishes, in the knowledge that I have, that God will, in his own due time and in his own way, redeem the Lamanite people.

I delight to bring word to the fathers and mothers of the faithful boys and girls—for they are mere youths—who are in that mission, that they are enjoying good health, and above all, they are enjoying the spirit of their mission. They do not wish to turn to the right nor to the left, but are willing to face conditions as they find them, and humbly preach the gospel, in the hope that their testimony may touch the hearts of the people and bring them to a knowledge of God, and a knowledge of their forefathers, and the gospel whereby they may be redeemed.

I am thankful to the Lord for giving me this testimony. I pray that it may always be with me, and with you my brethren and sisters, and that we may go on without fear and without doubt, remembering this, that in the Church is the power of God that can work his will for the redemption of all men everywhere. May the Lord add his blessings, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

I should like to speak for the fathers and the mothers of the Church and in their behalf say to the young people of the Church:

A MESSAGE TO THE YOUTH OF ZION

Young men and young women, we believe in you; we have confidence in your integrity, and in the achievement of your high destiny. We support you, we love you. I believe if we could make the young people of the Church understand that, we should have gone a long way to hold them to the standards of the Church and to the keeping of the commandments which have occupied in their exposition, such a large portion of this conference.

THE GREAT OBLIGATION OF PARENTS

I was very grateful that President Grant was led in the course of his opening remarks to restate and reemphasize the great obligation of parents to their children; for it is that thing which seems to me, above all others, to claim our attention as a Church. We are depending upon the rising generation to carry forward this great and mighty work. Only a few years at best will serve to see the men whom you will sustain here today as the prophets and authorities of this great institution, pass to their honorable reward. The burdens of administration, the opportunities of leadership must, in natural sequence, pass to other and younger shoulders. So that, loving the work as we do, believing in its great accomplishments for the future, we must, of necessity, hold and claim these young people to carry it forward, to stand for and maintain God's work.

I think they need at this time large sympathy from us. When I contemplate the environment in which they are placed, the unusual conditions surrounding them, my heart goes out to every one who must stand for honest manhood and resist untoward influences and maintain himself in accordance with the commandments of God and the standards of the Church.

UNUSUAL EDUCATIONAL ENVIRONMENT INFLUENCES THE YOUTH

Do you contemplate the fact that the great educational forces surrounding the youth of today are most unusual, that in the major portion they did not exist a few decades ago? There were no moving pictures twenty or twenty-five years ago, and within that short space of time, that great enterprise which produces these pictures and distributes them all over the world for the education, mind you, of the people of the world, and the youth of the land in particular, has come to be, it is said, the fourth largest commercial enterprise in the world. Thousands and thousands every day are subjected to the influence and the education of these pictures. What that education is, you may judge for yourselves. What lessons are taught, you yourselves have seen, and that our young people should respond to those lessons is as natural as it is for flowers to grow in the sunshine, or for vegetation to die in the dark, depressing, poisonous atmosphere of a cellar.

Many inventions and innovations of the past few years have also wrought their influences upon these boys and girls so susceptible to their environment. There has been the advent of the automobile, radios, new kinds and varieties of drama, of music, or that which is said to be music, all of which just as naturally and as inevitably influence and determine the emotions, and in a large respect, the actions of these boys and girls, as it is possible to do. A man can, only with the greatest of restraint and of force, take himself out of his environment and stand against the influences inserted against him in society. It is harder for young people than it is for adults to do that, because their natures are more susceptible and impressionable to the influences around about them.

AN APPEAL TO PARENTS IN BEHALF OF THE YOUNG FOLKS

In behalf of all these young folks up and down the Church, I would like to say to the parents of the Church: We claim your sympathy. We need your guiding hand, but we need your guidance expressed in terms of love and understanding. I feel that in many instances the young folks of the Church are not fully understood. I do not like to hear them berated, I do not like to hear it said that they have all gone wrong and that they are all going wrong. I do not believe it, because I believe that these young folks, by right have inherited, fundamentally, the faith of their fathers. They have inherited a disposition to serve God. That is the natural and logical sequence of the lives of the great pioneers of this country who came here to serve him and keep his commandments, and establish his great and mighty work. Therefore, I cannot think that in the main the young people of this Church are not the best, the most dependable, the most progressive and the finest young generation which the world, at least within the realm of history, has ever seen.

Sometimes parents, out of a great desire to be helpful and to warn against danger and evil, assume an austerity that is forbidding to these young folks, and too often, much too often, there is a failure of that sympathetic understanding which makes a bond of union and love between parents and children than which there is no greater bulwark of safety for the young people of the Church. I appeal to every parent in this Church to understand his children. To understand them he must, to some extent at least, participate in their activities and recreation. He must delve into their inmost longings and cravings and aspirations. He must know the things that have appealed to them, and then discriminately, wisely, sympathetically, he shall guide them, guide them in the paths of truth and of righteousness.

VISIONS OF WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITY OF THE HOME

What we need today is an interpretation of the gospel of Jesus Christ in terms of joyous living. The gospel is not, as many of our young folks think it to be, a hard, a joy-killing rule of life. I sometimes think that our young people are dissuaded from participation in the activities of the Church because there has never been given, to many of them at least, the great vision of the wonderful opportunity, the joys, the happiness, the services which are to be had within it. We need to let them know that for happiness, for supreme joy, for those permanent satisfactions that go to make life worth living, there is no course in life comparable to the course laid down by the blessed gospel of our Lord and our Savior. They do not all understand that. They do not all recognize the great joy to be had from participation within our Church institutions, and it is our great mission in the various institutions of the Church, and primarily in that greatest of all Church institutions, the home, to give that joyous conception of the principles of the gospel.

THE GOSPEL A CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAM

Our gospel is not a gospel of negation. It is true that we are commanded to eschew evil and to avoid many things which present themselves in forms of temptation, but our gospel is a positive uplifting, constructive program, making life happy if we will but subscribe to its tenets and live up to the commandments as they have been given to us.

I think that the Christian church of the world has itself to blame for its failure in really teaching the gospel of Christ. It is largely because of the attitude taken by many of its leaders, whose long-faced piety and joy-killing aspect have never been pleasing to young people. It is said by the critics of Christ that, "Christ is the prophet of the weak; on the contrary, he came to give strength to the languishing, and to raise up those trodden under foot to be higher than kings. They say that his is the religion of the sick and of the dying, and yet he heals the sick and brings the sleeping to life. They say that he is against life, and yet he conquers death; that he is the God of sadness, and yet he exhorts his followers to be joyful and promises an everlasting banquet of joy to his friends. They say he introduced sadness and mortification into the world, and on the contrary when he was alive he ate and drank, and let his feet and hair be perfumed, and detested hypocritical fasts, and the penitential mummeries of vanity. Many have left Christ because they never knew him."

OH, THAT BOYS AND GIRLS MIGHT KNOW JESUS CHRIST

Oh, how I want our boys and girls to know Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of men! How I wish that they would recognize that he is their dearest and their greatest friend, that they may put their trust in him, knowing that he will never forsake them, and that a testimony of his divinity and his great work is the greatest influence that will ever come into their lives.

Brethren and sisters, it is our mission and our duty to give them that testimony, for the enrichment of their souls, and for that salvation, for which we all labor and strive. God bless the youth of Zion, that they may accomplish their high and noble destiny in the purposes of the Lord, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER SEYMOUR B. YOUNG

(President of the First Council of Seventy)

In this exalted position, being honored to stand before this magnificent congregation, I hope to voice the sentiments of my heart in the testimony which I hope to bear to you today.

The gospel is true. God has indeed spoken from the heavens and called into being the power that has resulted in the organization of this great people constituting the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned," or condemned.

Time since the organization of the Church has proved this great fact, that the majority of mankind are not prepared or preparing themselves to receive the word of the Lord. Nearly one hundred years have passed since the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and yet among the eighteen hundred millions, or two thousand millions of peoples of the earth, the true Church, as we view it and testify for it, has only about a half million members, proving beyond a question of a doubt that the great majority of mankind has something to attract their attention besides their soul's salvation. Rather than contemplate the future and prepare for future life, it would seem that the large majority of the people of the earth are preparing for social and pleasant enjoyment of the present day, giving to themselves all the pleasures of life that they can gather, and seemingly not impressed at all with the great future and the great reward that will come to those who serve the Lord and keep his commandments.

I am very glad to stand here today and look over this great congregation, this large Tabernacle filled to its capacity; and seemingly every face, so far as I can observe, is anxiously turned this way.

Every person seems devoted and determined to hear the words that are spoken by the servants of the Lord.

This is a day of prosperity for the Latter-day Saints. We are in the midst of a very prosperous season. The years that have gone since the great World War terminated have marked this nation of ours with wonderful, I might almost say supreme, prosperity. The earth has brought forth in its strength all the necessities of life, and the luxuries; while there are, as we know, nations on the continents of Europe, Asia and Africa, that are suffering with hunger, and in the colder climates with cold, for want of proper clothing; and yet this nation of ours prospers, as it is being well supplied with the food crops necessary for prolongation of life, with health and means for sufficient clothing, and the comforts of home. While this is evidenced here, it is also made plain to us that there is plenty of room for the disposition of wealth and comforts of life to those starving millions on the other side of the ocean; and I believe that there has no other nation responded so readily to those calls of necessity by the agencies that have been established, there is no other nation, so far as I know, that has stood so loyally and so promptly in the gap to help to sustain life in the midst of these suffering nations, and for the prompt reply, favorably, to the calls that have been made, from time to time, by these nations. I believe that for this reason we are thus blessed and prospered today. For we have not refused, but have always sent, and given largely, and many times in excess of all demands. At least there is a united purpose in the midst of our nation, seeking to relieve the sufferings of those who are hungry and cold.

When the Church was organized, on the 6th day of April,—by the by, this is the 6th of April, the 94th anniversary—there was considerable disturbance in the minds of religious peoples, and from those very religious or social gatherings came largely the opposition to the Prophet Joseph Smith and to his calling and position as a Prophet of the Lord. Thus the gospel of Jesus Christ has been compelled, through those recognized servants of the Lord, to fight its way through, and by and by, from the time of its organization, I suppose, with the hope of some day living in peace with our neighbors. That day seems to have dawned. We are in peaceful relationship with our neighbors, and with everybody, so far as we can get into their circles with the gospel truths. Never before, I believe, have we had such splendid ministrations in our great missions, I mean as to competent elders and competent missionaries of both sexes; and today we rejoice in the testimonies of the brethren who are at the head of these missions of the Church. They believe that they are making progress in every department of the work, and I am glad to hear the testimonies of my brethren from this stand, for they all bespeak a characteristic of perfect faith and knowledge in the outcome of this work, in its being superior to any other religious work that is now being established. From the President of the Church to the least and last member, each of those occupying a lesser position, as they have testified here during this conference, and as they will continue to do until it is closed, we hear nothing but what is prompted by the spirit of the Lord, by the testimony of a faithful Latter-day Saint. In each and every case, nothing but the free spirit of progress has been expressed here, and nothing but pure testimonies of the gospel of Jesus Christ have been heard from the lips of the speakers.

Today will probably see the sustaining vote of the congregation, as they are called to vote for the officers of the Church. I do not believe, with the circumstances with which we are surrounded, and the spirit of this great congregation, that there will be one dissenting vote or one contrary to sustaining the authorities of the Church, when the vote shall be taken sometime during the day.

I am glad to be associated with the Latter-day Saints. I began my experience at one year of age, at which time I went through the experience of the massacre at Haun's Mill. I attended a fair in one of the nearby cities a year or two ago, and I saw within the gates of the fair grounds a stone, an old-fashioned burr stone, as we used to call them, for grinding grain. You know it speaks in the Scriptures of the upper and nether mill-stone. And one of these stones, it was stated on a placard, was taken from the old well where twenty "Mormons" were buried after a battle with the citizens of the surrounding country. I said to the people standing by: "That does not tell the truth. It was not a battle, it was a bloody massacre of innocent men who had no means of defense." And, by the by, the toll exacted at that massacre was the largest of any at any one time that had ever been taken from the Church. The deaths amounted to about twenty-two persons, all males, however. There was one female, I think, wounded accidentally but not seriously. The people who came to distress that little band or colony of "Mormons" seemed to shun the idea of killing women and children, and devoted their entire strength to the destruction of the men. Eighty-five years have passed since that massacre, and I would like very much to see a very well-marked stone at the place where the massacre occurred—not costly, but merely a mark that will remain for future generations to see.

I rejoice today in the testimonies which I have heard. I testify to you that the gospel is true. I know that God lives and that Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world. I know as well as I know that I live that Joseph Smith was indeed a prophet of God, and those brethren who have succeeded him, commencing with President Brigham Young, including President John Taylor, including President Wilford Woodruff, including President Lorenzo Snow, including President Joseph F. Smith, and now our beloved President Heber J. Grant, are men called to that high position which they occupied and do occupy, by the inspiration of the Spirit of God, and under the direction of that power and that Spirit, they have led and guided the people; and the conditions with which we are surrounded today proclaim to me in the most satisfactory manner that the people generally, the majority of the Latter-day Saints, are striving with might, mind and strength, from the President down to the least and last member, to know the mind and will of the Lord and to keep his commandments. The prosperity which we experience today, the plenty with which we are surrounded, and the testimonies of the people who do not belong to the Church, all are convincing arguments to remind us that the Lord is blessing his people more abundantly today than ever before, and the testimonies of the brethren seem to be brighter and clearer than ever before, bringing to my mind and to my great satisfaction, that we are lovers of God more than lovers of pleasure, and that we are trying to fulfil the measure of those two great commandments given to us by the Savior of the world: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind * * * and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

I pray the Lord to bless the Latter-day Saints. Bless their labors and inspire them in the future as in the past. Give them joy in their labors, because of the earnestness of endeavor that the people are making to serve the Lord and keep his commandments. God bless the Presidency of the Church, and every responsible leader, and all the people, I pray, through Jesus Christ, our Lord, Amen.

Announcements of the special Priesthood meeting to be held on Monday morning at 10 o'clock, also of the Sunday School conference to be held Sunday evening, the 6th, at 7 o'clock, were made.

The choir sang, "The Inflammatus" with Dolores Seal as soloist.

The closing prayer was given by Elder Jacob Hamblin of the St. Johns stake of Zion.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 a. m., April 6, 1924. Elder William A. Hyde, president of the Pocatello stake of Zion, presided. Music and singing were furnished by the Twenty-first ward choir under the direction of Walter A. Wallace, and Tracy Y. Cannon, organist.

The choir and congregation sang, "How firm a foundation."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder William C. Winder, of the High Council of Granite stake.

The choir sang, "Ye simple souls who stray."

ELDER WILLIAM A. HYDE

(President of the Pocatello Stake of Zion)

Perhaps a word of personal mention this morning would be excusable. Under the rather unprecedented circumstances in which I am called to preside over this meeting, no doubt there are very many in the audience who are not acquainted with the presiding officer. I am William A. Hyde, of Pocatello. You have frequently heard of the town in Idaho, no doubt, and incidentally have heard of our connection as a stake with the Church; for we are all more or less connected and acquainted with the history of the Church in its various departments and organizations.

I am relieved of some embarrassment this morning by the kindness of President Grant in asking that I should speak first. Otherwise, I should have been under the necessity of pushing myself forward into a place that otherwise I would not care to assume. I approach this duty and this opportunity with a great deal of pleasure, from the fact that this honor has been given me, but nevertheless with apprehension that perhaps I may not be able to acquit myself with a degree of success that would be becoming. There are perhaps only two or three other presidents of stakes in the Church who are older in seniority than I am. I have now been laboring in the ministry, in this capacity, about twenty-five years, and, as I recall it, there are only two or three others who have been in the service longer.

It would naturally be thought, I presume, and it would be the logic of the situation, that with service in the Church there should come a degree of wisdom and a degree of experience; in fact, that is what the Church requires of its men and of its women and expects of them. I come to you today representing a part of the Church which has as deep an interest in the growth of the whole as perhaps any other part of the Church, and is keenly alive, I believe, to the necessities that lie before this great work, and alive to the ends of our heavenly Father, with respect to us. Never have I had the opportunity thus of confronting an audience with this responsibility, but I feel that it is a part of my duty to turn my mind with full earnestness of purpose to make this meeting in harmony with the grand meetings of this conference and those which no doubt will ensue.

There are experiences in the lives of all men, no doubt, that have made great impressions upon their minds. Some of them come to us early in life. I recall one now through which I passed in the early days of my ministry that has been of great value to me; in fact, has been one of the leading things that has happened in the course of my association with the Church. I remember that in company with one of my companions I started upon a long journey to go over the top of the mountain into an adjoining valley for the purpose of a certain investigation. Those of you who have lived in country districts and have made journeys of this character will well understand now what I am about to say. We began our journey up one of those long, apparently interminable trails that are characteristic of our mountains, passing the familiar grades and varieties of willows and brush until we came, at last, to the evidences that pointed to the fact that we were near the top of the mountain—the sparsely growing quaking aspen trees and other evidences showing that we were near the summit, when suddenly there came upon our view a most unlooked for landscape. It seems that the Creator had in some way hollowed out a miniature amphitheatre in the tops of the hills, a bowl, a round valley, the edges of it fringed with pine trees. In the bottom of this little valley was a little stream of water that percolated through a tiny meadow. There were no evidences of any habitation there except a small log house, with its accompanying outbuildings, around which could be seen a few of the ordinary cattle that men in farming communities usually have.

As I saw this rather unusual landscape, the thought occurred to me, "What can this man see?" I learned subsequently that, at periodical times, he went over the rim of the valley down to the nearby station to get his mail, but otherwise he was shut out from the world; he was in a way a recluse, he was what you might term a hermit. He lived his life alone in the tops of the mountains, surrounded only by his few stock and the other little evidences of life, and perhaps they had a small family. When he stood out at his door at night he could see only about half of the firmament. The stars that deck the sky for you and me who live upon the plain were not observable by him. Perhaps no more than one half of the course of the sun could he ever see, and the great throbbing world around and about him never was observed by him except upon isolated occasions. And I thought, "How like man in general, in his attitude toward life and education, and the things that are best in the world, is this man who is thus isolated in the top of the mountain!"

And from that I drew a lesson which has been a valuable one all the days of my life. It has been a lesson that has taught me the value of a greater outlook and view of things, of a broader perspective of life, and of the things with which we are surrounded and which go to make up our present life and that eventually will make up our future existence. I have seen men worldly wise and all-sufficient in their own estimation, who, like this man, though unlike him in a way but like him in this, surrounded by their wall of self-sufficiency, so that they have not been able to look out upon the vast acts and purposes and opportunities of men but have been limited to their own narrow conclusions, based upon their self-sufficient philosophy, and I have thought, "How inadequate are these men for all work of life, how insufficient are they for the things that our Father in heaven requires of them."

Upon the other hand I have seen men in humble situations who have stood upon the mountain top and from their elevated pinnacle have viewed the varied course of events, and it seems to me sometimes have been able to look down to the great finale of things. I have thought with relation to this lesson that the Prophet Joseph Smith, from his outlook and from the standpoint from which he viewed matters, knew more about the planets, the firmament, the great heaven of heavens than you and I know about the little potato patch that we cultivate in our back garden.

And I have from it drawn many a lesson that has been of comfort and of value to me in my ministry among the people. I have drawn from it the lesson of the value of perspective, the ability to see and to place together things in their proper relations as to distance and as to size and as to importance. I have learned that one who from proper distances may view the scenes of events, to him the scars, the crudities of life, the things that wound and hurt, are lost in the general view, just as one looks down upon the valley from the top of one of these hills, where now there may be gullies and crude formations of earth, and may see the plain one vast carpet, as of some vast Axminster rug spread out beneath the sun. Distance takes from us the sting and the hurt of things, and gives us a better view of the proper relation and quality of men and their actions.

And from it I have drawn this conclusion, that we are too near to our men today to properly understand the fine motives that actuate them. I believe that one hundred years from now we may look back upon this time in which we are now living, and some historian may say with full confidence, and with just as much authority as any historian who has ever written, that in this day in which we now live certain men spoke and directed, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Then from that distance we may see and recognize the prophetic word and the prophet, just as well as we now recognize the prophet of olden times. And men who stand in our midst today and who have stood among us, who by reason of our very nearness, and of our close association with them, have lost in a degree that certain sacredness of character which attaches to a prophet—that having been removed by time—we may classify them among the prophets of whom ancient history speaks. Even now at this time there is one enshrined just so in the minds of the Latter-day Saints. He is removed from us by a hundred years, or nearly so, and today he has assumed a new form and aspect in life and he has become to us just as surely and as certainly a prophet of the Lord as ever any man that lived to whom that title has been given.

And so, let me assure you, my brethren and sisters, and especially my young friends who may be listening to me today, these men who now stand among us are invested with that authority that empowers them to speak the word of God and speak with just the same convincing force as did any man who ever lived upon the earth who presumed to speak in the name of our heavenly Father. And so I have learned from these things the value of perspective, the right way to look at things, the way to disassociate ourselves from the nearness of the present, and to see men as if they were afar off, and under the influence that time always casts upon men.

I have learned this also, the value of patience. Events fly so swiftly by us that they are not seen in their proper relation. We little understand the movement of time. It takes time to bring to pass the fruition of God's purposes. Not always are the combinations seen in a few years, in a generation even. Men and women plod out their slow lives in their menial duties, and in the offices and callings that come to mortality, sometimes fretting and sometimes wondering if God will never justify their sacrifices; but lo, and behold, a generation passes; their sons follow them and their sons' sons stand in their stead; and lo, the work of the Lord has been accomplished in the thing that they hitherto had undertaken! A pioneer goes into a far distant country. In travail, trouble, poverty and distress, he plows the ground, sows and reaps, and sees the fruitage gone year after year, perhaps, but finally the culmination comes, where a temple is reared upon the very place he first set his foot, and the land blossoms under the blessing of the Almighty. He was the beginning of it, the one who spread the way and who opened up the means for the accomplishment of the thing that ultimately the Lord, our heavenly Father, gave to him and to his succeeding generations.

And so, I have learned the lessons of patience, and in my ministry I have occasion, time and again, to say to people, "We are like the waves of the sea; now we are upon the crest of success, and again we are down in the troughs of the ocean; have patience, my friends, the time will come when your bark will be lifted upon the crest again, and you will see out upon the broad expanse of waters." How applicable this lesson may be to those who are in distress, at the present day, I think we may well consider.

We have been passing through times of intense commercial travail and trouble. Many and many are the good men and good women who have been down in the very bottom of despondency, due to these unusual conditions through which we have passed. Nevertheless, by a proper understanding of God's purposes, and by a proper estimation of our strength, we may hold out firmly to the end, until these things shall have passed and prosperity shall again come to us. Thus I know that the Lord decrees that men shall have patience; that they shall endure; that it is not his purpose that in any man or any generation of men shall all things be culminated; but that we, following one after another in the line of our activities and of our peopling of the earth, constitute the grand whole of which God's plan is made. We today are contributing to the success of tomorrow; and, throughout the Church of Christ, there should run the element of patience and of faith, in the thought that eventually there will come success to all those who sincerely trust in him and patiently abide the day of his vindication.

Speaking of the attitude which men assume and from which they may view, I had a rather unusual experience this morning that fits in nicely with the theme that I have undertaken. Coming down the street, I passed a man whom I have known for years, a poor old cripple, who must be now seventy-five years of age, who dragged one foot slowly behind the other, in evident pain as he traveled, but nevertheless with a contented look upon his face, his good old wife with her arm in his, helping him along the sidewalk. And just after I had bade them good morning, and had passed my salutation with him as an old friend whom I had known formerly in the stake over which I preside, he called to me and said, "Brother Hyde, do you know about my genealogy?" Why no, I did not know about it. Said he, "We have the names of ten thousand people, and we have done the work for four thousand of them." And then there was a happy look of anticipation upon his face. I thought I could see the unuttered thought in his mind, "What a joy and pleasure it will be to do the work for the other six thousand of them." And, as I turned from him, I thought, "This man with his dragging foot, drawn in pain along the sidewalk, is far above the ordinary man, he is lifted upon the wings of the spirit, that has taken him above the mountain top. He looks down upon us, I think, from his lofty station, perhaps with a degree of pity—upon those who do not see as he does." And I thought, "How glorious is this work of the Latter-day Saints! How superior their thought, in a way, to the wisdom of men! How broad and expansive are their conceptions of the almighty purposes of our heavenly Father! They are not recluses; they are not hermits; from the standpoint to which God has led them by his revelations, they look forth upon the work which comprises and embraces not only the scheme of mortality, but all the vast concourse of the sons of men from the beginning of time."

And so, my brethren and sisters, let us take these lessons from these observations which you, no doubt, have seen as I have seen and recounted, to have patience, and faith, and to seek to come out from the narrow limits of our own self-sufficiency, to emerge from that species of confidence which sometimes comes to the Latter-day Saint and makes him think that he and his people are all there are who are associated in the work of the Lord. I like to take the broader view, that God, through men, is working out his purposes, and that he is bringing to pass, from all directions and from all sources, the things that will contribute to the glory of his name; and that inventors, poets, and workers in all lines of thought are doing perhaps unconsciously the very thing that God would have them do. So, with faith thus pitched and attuned to the purposes of the Almighty, let us go forward with full purpose of heart, to serve him and keep the commandments, in faith, believing, and with vision seeing the wonderful things that God has in store for his people.

May his Spirit be in the minds and hearts of the Latter-day Saints and spur them on to renewed activity and faith in this great and glorious work which has been given to us to accomplish in these the last days. This is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

(President of the Central States Mission)

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I may be led to say what the Lord would have me say on this occasion, that our meeting here together may be beneficial unto all, that we may go home and feel that this part of our conference was in harmony with the preceding sessions. I have been greatly encouraged in my faith through the sessions of the conference this year and by the splendid instruction given by those who preside over us and by the other speakers, who have taught the principles of the gospel pertaining to life and salvation. I think I have never been more impressed with the greatness of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Men and women are gathered from great distances to this conference, from many states of the United States, and also from Canada and Mexico, and are come here to receive instruction concerning the work of the Lord, to confer with one another, and to receive counsel, advice, and inspiration so necessary in carrying on the work of our Father in the different places where they have been called upon to take positions of trust. The great majority of people who have gathered here are men and women who have been called upon to represent the Lord in their own home or section, and it is a very representative body, and the body of representatives are reinforced by members of their own home town and ward and stake, who have come here to aid and assist them, so that the work of God may continue to grow. There is absolutely no question as to the success of the work of God under such splendid organization. It could not be duplicated in all the world. There is no organization to compare with the restored Church of Jesus Christ here in the earth. This is the Church of God, represented by his Priesthood, his power, here upon the earth, and it is a medium by which men and women may return unto him. And those who fail to accept or who reject the glad message which the Lord has revealed, shall not have the happiness that comes to those who shall inherit a glory wherein he rules and reigns.

We find scripture to give us encouragement both at home and abroad. A few years ago, when I went into the mission field, a gentleman was on the train with me, and the train was so crowded that we had to stand up from here to Provo. He was a stranger to me, for I had never seen him before, and did not even know who he was, but he told me to read, on reaching my mission field, the 84th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, and called my attention to some of the blessings which the Lord had placed at my disposal. He pointed to the 65th verse, down to the 90th. I shall not read them all. He said, "When you get out there, and you are alone, and you find that you are far away from home, among strangers, in a strange land, without any experience, you will learn that the Lord has provided for you, so that you shall not be alone, and you shall have his Spirit for your companion." And so I found the scripture as he had referred me to it:

"Behold, I send you out to reprove the world of all their unrighteous deeds, and to teach them of a judgment which is to come.

"And whoso receiveth you, there I will be also, for I will go before your face. I will be on your right hand and on your left, and my Spirit shall be in your hearts, and mine angels round about you, to bear you up."—(Verses 87-88.)

My brethren and sisters, there was never anything more true than that promise which God gives to those who represent him. And with my experience in the mission field, I have concluded that these truths and promises not only apply to the mission field, but to men and women at home—those who are engaged in the work of the Lord,—who labor in their weakness, with a determination to serve him. Nothing can be found in the world equal to it—where our Father, who gave us, his children, the privilege to come into the world, has said, when we go out in the world, if we will keep his commandments, as we have been taught them, and as President Grant reminded us yesterday morning, the Lord will be with us: "I will be on your right hand and on your left, and I will go before your face, and mine angels shall be round about you, to bear you up." And he said further that any one who shall not fail to continue faithful in these things, "shall not be weary in body or in mind, neither in limb nor joint, and an hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed."

I am, of course, as you are aware, more closely associated with men and women in the ministry, away from the stakes of Zion. These words mean that the Lord is with the boys and girls of yours, with as much power as he ever was in the earth, and that they may possess the same faith their fathers and their grandfathers possessed, even from the day of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Only this past winter we have had missionaries out in the field traveling without money; walking through the country wherever their duties called them, among entire strangers, to places, where elders had not been for at least twenty years—and in twenty years' time a new population almost grows up in a country. They have been cared for night and day, never having to buy a meal, never having to pay for a bed, and the Lord has gone before their faces, his influence and his power with them, so that they were fed and cared for until they were under no expense at all. When you think that missionaries in our field have gone through the early part of this year, three months some of them, with an expense of only $5 per month, it is almost unbelievable. And it could not be done, anywhere in the world, except under the direction of Jesus Christ our Lord. It was he who died on Calvary for you and for me; it was he who gave his life that we might live; it was he who bought and paid for the human family with his blood. He is at the head, and he directs the forces in the earth, and he gives men their privilege to accept him or to reject him. But he is there with those who desire to serve him and keep his commandments, and men can grow as close to our Father here in mortality today as they ever did in any time of the world's history. There never was greater organization in the earth than in this Church. It is most perfect. There is no need for a man or woman to be idle. They should be anxiously engaged in this great work of God, whether at home or abroad.

And I might read to you some scripture that has been given unto us along that very line in these last days, for all scripture has been given unto us for our benefit. If we do not read it or become acquainted with it, we do not know or ever realize or understand the real joy and pleasure of putting our faith and trust in the Lord.

The Lord says, "Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in no wise lose their reward." (D. & C. 58:27, 28.)

There is the principle of free agency, which the Lord gives unto every one of his children when they come into the world. You can do as you please. We all learned many things before we came to the earth, as a result of our experience under the direction of our heavenly Father in that ante-mortal state, where our Father guided the destiny of all of us, according to our faithfulness there, and then gave unto us the privilege of coming into the world and receiving this power of free agency. And he says that we should be anxious concerning his work.

Some missionaries go out into the field and travel free, and there is not anything that would hinder them from making a success. They have a desire to proclaim the gospel. They are not fearful of men. They are only fearful of their own weaknesses, and that is the normal condition of a true missionary in this Church; they do not fear men, but they fear the Lord, and they rely, and know they must rely, upon him for their success. But they go out and arrange meetings, and it is nothing unusual at all for boys in their teens to go and arrange meetings where they speak, every night in the week. To me it is a marvel and a wonder that they are able to do it. Congregations of people come and fill the little chapels or schoolhouses, wherever they may have the privilege of preaching. And many have been brought into this Church as a result of it. The opinions of thousands of people have been changed as a result of the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ through the missionaries of the Church, in these the last days, and in my time, in this dispensation.

If men are anxious concerning their work, how easy it is! If we will just make up our mind to do it, and we fail not to continue faithful in these things, the Lord will open up the way, provide for us, so that we can reach the people. And it is not difficult to change the opinions of men and women if we proceed in the way which the Lord has counseled. There is just as much power in prayer and in the faith that comes as a result of prayer today, as there was in the days of Abraham or preceding him or following him. There never was any more power given unto men in the earth than at the present time. Missionaries have gone forth today as they did in the days of the Prophet Joseph, in the days Brigham Young, and in the days of John Taylor and all those mighty men who laid the foundation for this great work of God, of which we are enjoying so much the blessings at the present time. Missionaries are now being raised up from among the rank and file in all parts of the Church, who go out and test the gospel and the promises of the Lord, and have found faith in the earth, just as much as they did fifty, seventy-five, or more, years ago, even back unto the time of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The work is not failing; it is absolutely impossible for the work of God to fail. When I think of the care that is given to the details of this Church—I feel in my heart to say that in my experience I have never seen any person more careful over details than the present President of this Church, Heber J. Grant, who devotes his entire time to the work, I am reminded of the fact, that he is anxiously engaged in the great cause of the Lord; he is commanded only of God, and he sets to the people the proper example, and as a result the work is becoming greater and more glorious. To me it is a marvel and a wonder. Men arise everywhere in defense of the Lord Jesus Christ. The people of the earth are anxiously waiting for the gospel. I do not blame people, in a way, for rejecting the testimony of men whom they do not know anything about. Men and women have to be melted. Why, this Church would not succeed at all if it were not for the fact that the people are called together in the ward once or twice or thrice a week by a careful, faithful bishop, and if those wards were not called together under direction of the stake presidency, who give all the care to details that they know how, and in addition to that the general authorities of the Church visit them and talk to them! In addition to that, they are called together twice a year in great conference assembled, and they are there taught the principles of the everlasting gospel, as the Lord has revealed it, from those whom the Lord calls to speak, and as a result the Church moves forward in its great, mighty march and improvement as the years come and go, and among these men and women will be found the faith of Israel. Why, the faith of Israel will be greater next year than it is this. The Church will never be weaker than it is today, and it never was stronger than it is today. Men shall arise from among the wards and stakes of this Zion who shall make apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be the ones who will build on the foundation that God revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and they will carry on this work until we shall arrive at the time when the Christ shall come.

There is absolutely no possibility of failure, neither is there any man who can disprove the work of the Lord. A man may say that Joseph Smith is not a prophet, or that the Book of Mormon is not true. He only tells what he thinks is the truth; but a man who has not made an investigation of the Lord's work in this dispensation, who has not made it a matter of prayer and faith and been honest and square, that man is not a good judge. And if he were honest and true, he would have to say that he does believe Joseph Smith to be a prophet; and the same argument would hold good with the Book of Mormon or the Doctrine and Covenants. It requires faith, attention, devotion, and the heart of a man, to know this word of God.

Here we are in mortality, having been given our free agency to do as we would do, and if we ever come to a knowledge of the truth and walk through mortality under the divine guidance of that truth, we must be governed and controlled by the principle of faith and the principle of desire, and be anxious in our hearts concerning our life here in mortality. And so it is with men and women abroad, they have to come out of the conditions in which they are, slipping, struggling along, not knowing the true way of life. And my heart goes out to the children of men here in mortality. I have made it a point never to offend men or women. I have gone out of the way many times in my experience, just to make a friend. It is not anything to me at all, so far as a personal reward on earth is concerned, but it is to me, so far as the Church is concerned, my duty. Those people are not to blame. They have grown up as Methodists and Presbyterians and Baptists and Catholics, and they are firm in the belief of their fathers. They have faith in their fathers' work, and they are not to blame. We can afford to be charitable; as we plead for God, our eternal Father, to be charitable and kind unto us, so we must likewise be kind and charitable unto those among whom we are called upon to live and labor here in mortality. These principles should guide us every day. And Oh! what a glorious opportunity we have here in mortality to acquit ourselves like men and women, and to become as fountains of living water unto the children of men, among whom we labor. God is at the helm and directs the work. He will see that it does not fail. We may fail, but his work will not fail, because others will carry on the great work of God, until every man and every woman has had an opportunity, either here in mortality or in the spirit world, to hear and accept the truth. Then they may say, if they desire, it is true, or it is not true, according to their findings.

May the Lord give you and me the privilege of walking uprightly before him. May he encourage us, and may we live so that we may feel that encouraging life and spirit with us, and not be discouraged. May we be anxious concerning his work, and of our own free will go on and develop the character that we brought to this world with us as a result of our experience with him.

May we have the power to reject evil, may we always stand for the testimony of Jesus and for his authority in the earth. May we make men and women strong who hold positions of trust in his great Church in the earth. May we respect the teacher and the ward auxiliary officer; may we uphold the bishop as the father of the ward, and his counselors and his assistants, and these stake presidents and high counselors who preside in the different parts of the Church. May we uphold their authority as the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. May we keep the principle of loyalty and love in our homes and in the Church at home. Then may we stand for God's authority here in this earth—President Heber J. Grant, whom the Lord chose and raised up to lead us in these days, as you may all read and learn, because it is all recorded in the history of this Church how the Lord raised him up. And the Lord will raise others up. He has left us a history, a written history, a testimony in addition to that of man; so that we may know the truth, so that we may know where we stand, and that we may not be deceived. May he give us the blessings of faith and hope and courage, that we may keep this work of his foremost in our minds always, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSHUA H. PAUL

(Of the University of Utah)

One of the most remarkable fallacies of modern times was well stated a few years ago by the late Professor Huxley, the leader of advanced thought, whose views on scientific truth were perhaps more widely accepted than those of any other man of his day. In a lecture, first delivered in 1866, and extensively quoted ever since (as in Ayedelotte, English for Engineers, page 207), this great scientist says that the business of thinkers of the Middle Ages was to deduce, from data furnished by the theologians, conclusions that agreed with the decrees of the Church; that to them nature had no fixed order; "that when good authority has pronounced what is to be believed and faith has accepted it, reason has no further duty." He adds that many excellent people still hold these convictions, and goes on to argue that the improvement of natural knowledge is effected by methods that directly give the lie to all these convictions. Then he says: "The improver of natural knowledge absolutely refuses to acknowledge authority as such. For him skepticism is the highest of duties; blind faith, the one unpardonable sin. The votary of science holds his firmest convictions, not because the men he most venerates hold them, not because they are verified by portents and wonders, but because whenever he brings these convictions into contact with nature, nature verifies them. The man of science has learned to believe in "justification, not by faith, but by experiment."

As far as I know, no very definite answer to the indictment which Huxley so shrewdly brought against the cardinal principle of religion has yet been made by the Christian world at large. If any such answer has been made, I shall be under great obligations to any one who will bring it to my attention. Yet it is well known among our own people that experiment has exactly the same function in religion that it has in scientific knowledge, and is the test, in fact, of religious as well as of all other forms of truth. When our parents walked across the plains, as so many thousands of them did, was this not an experiment? Did they not thereby put to the test these words of our Lord and Savior: "If any man shall do his will, [the Father's] he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." In other words, men are here bidden to make the experiment and to learn for themselves the truth. Real faith does not rest upon belief in authority. It is tested and confirmed by experiment—not by an experiment performed upon a table in a corner of a laboratory or under a microscope or in test tubes, but in the broad field of life and in such a way as to involve all the powers of man. True, it is not the result of doubt; it rests first upon testimony given by others; but so also does scientific knowledge. For the scientist hears of a theory or principle, and then proceeds to test it by experiment. The believer hears the good news that God lives and has revealed himself to man, and he accepts the testimony. But he immediately proceeds to test it in many ways, just as the scientist proceeds to test natural knowledge. The only difference between the two kinds of belief is that faith rests upon and is verified by spiritual experience, while scientific faith rests upon physical experience. In both, the process of experiment is carried on; in both, the words of others are at first to some extent relied upon; and in both, subsequent experiments or experience will be necessary finally to prove or disprove what is accepted as probably true—the testimony of competent and trusted witnesses. The Latter-day Saints almost daily make the true answer to the criticisms of Mr. Huxley. They may not know that they are answering the skeptic when they make the claim that the all-important part of their religion is a testimony of the truth—a feeling of certitude that the gospel message is true. They say that every one may have this testimony, this feeling of certainty, if he will only live for it; if he will only take heaven at its word and do the will of the Father. We say it is the most important thing in life to lay hold of. It is not a theory, not a theological definition, not a dictum from the dark ages, but something to work at with your hands, not an abstraction; something to live for, something for which to aspire, something to be learned and re-learned, something old but ever new.

When, therefore, my mother, like many of yours in this audience, walked across the plains to come to Zion,—was this a theory, a definition, a blind following of those in authority? Or was it not an experiment of great magnitude and reality? Not all, of course, in order to test the promises of the Almighty, can undergo such an experience as crossing the plains afoot, but there are universal tests—tests for every one—tests that no one can avoid—experiences or experiments that are arranged for all of us irrespective of our own choosing; and these commonly bring us to our senses, till we come to realize, even in our misfortunes, that God lives and all is well. For example: when a boy, I learned from my Wilson Reader a poem, "The Little Boy that Died;" but not till I was grown and had the same experience that the author had, did I understand the meaning of his verses. Now his verse seems to me to go far toward proving that we shall meet them again—all whom we have loved and lost. So when the Lady Lucile of our household died, we were ready only then to understand the scripture that she is not dead, not asleep, not gone. She is only in the presence of our Father, and he is with us, if we abide in him. Rossiter Raymond thus brought these truths to our attention:

"Beside the dead I knelt in prayer,
And felt a presence as I prayed;
Lo! it was Jesus standing there.
He smiled, 'Be not afraid.'

"'Lord, thou hast conquered death, we know;
Restore again to life,' I said,
'This one who died an hour ago.'
He smiled, 'She is not dead.'

"'Asleep, then, as thyself didst say,
Yet thou canst lift the lids that keep
Her prisoned eyes from ours away.'
He smiled, 'She doth not sleep.'

"'Nay, then, though haply she doth wake
And look upon some fairer dawn,
Restore her to our hearts that ache.'
He smiled, 'She is not gone.'

"'Yea, Lord we feel that she is free,
And moves upon some higher sphere;
We are bereft; she is with thee.'
He smiled, 'And I am here!'

"'Dear God! how can we know that they Still walk unseen with us and thee,
Nor sleep, nor wander far away?'
He smiled, 'Abide in me.'"

If we perform the great experiment, if we abide in him, we shall know for ourselves, and shall find our peace in the gospel truth. All shall be clear, he tells us, if we put the matter to the test by doing the will of the Father. And that we may do so is my prayer in behalf of one and all.

ELDER JUNIUS F. WELLS

(Assistant Church Historian)

My brethren and sisters. The thought has occurred to me that I am standing about where President Jedediah M. Grant stood seventy years ago speaking at the April Conference. I am not telling of something that I know for myself, because I was not born then; but, as an historian, I suppose it is right to remember some things that are written. Upon the site of this building there then stood the old adobe tabernacle. It was placed lengthwise, north and south, about 130 feet and was 65 feet wide. On the western side there was a vestry, which had an entrance through the west wall of the temple block. The Presidency of the Church and the Twelve would come in and meet first in that vestry. Rising from it there was the stand, facing the congregation, which was seated facing west; the two broad entrance doors were on the east side of the building. It was soon found that, on account of the length being the other way, the people seated north and south of the stand could not hear, consequently the arrangement was changed and the stand was placed in the north end of the building. The choir was in the south end. The old organ, ten or twelve feet square, I remember very well. Charley More used to blow the bellows and we boys would get up there and help him blow.

Upon the occasion that I am referring to, seventy years ago, President Jedediah M. Grant discoursed upon the fulfilment of prophecy, and especially with respect to the wars that were at that time afflicting the world. The Crimean War was then on. He said:

"Can the wise men of Europe tell the result of the present war between Russia and Turkey and the allied powers? No, they cannot. If the present war should be suspended for a time, can they tell when the next war will break out and what will be the result of it? No, they cannot. But if you will listen to the revelations of God through the spirit of prophecy, and to the servants of God, you may learn it all with certainty."

It was then, as it has been since the Great World War, quite the fashion to proclaim peace just as war between striving nations was about to break out and, again, as it would approach its close, to say there never could be another. Great philosophers, great men of thought, and statesmen at that time were proclaiming peace, and since then.—Why, do you know, some of our most eminent Americans, within a year of the outbreak of the Great World War, having traversed Europe from one end to another, proclaimed from public stands and issued written proclamations of the impossibility of another war!—Jedediah M. Grant did not take that view with respect to war in his day nor in this day and age of the world. He made this remark: The God of heaven, or as he expressed it, "The Gods in yonder heavens have something to do with these mighty revolutions and warlike convulsions, which shake creation almost to its center." And in effect he added; This world is destined to be drenched in war, and these nations that are proud are destined to be brought down to destruction and obliteration through war:

"Though the fulfilment of the words of the prophets is clear and visible to us as the noonday sun in its splendor, yet the people of the world are blinded thereto; they do not comprehend nor discern the hand of the Lord * * * We see it in the revolutions of our own continent: we see it in the scattering of the house of Israel; in the fading away of nations (Indian) on the right and on the left; in the present commotion in our own nation; in the broils and contentions between the South and the North; in short, we see it in all the events connected with our own and other nations living on the continent of North and South America. And when the mind's eye stretches abroad, across the mighty deep, throughout Europe we see the hand of the Lord visible at work there; not only in the spread of the Gospel, in the prosperity of the people of God, and in the proclamation of the eternal principles of truth, through the agency of the elders of Israel, but in the war-clouds gathering black around, dyeing the ocean with human gore and drenching the solid earth with blood."

Remember this was spoken in the year 1854. Well, just to recall a few wars that have transpired since President Jedediah M. Grant spoke upon that theme. Following the Crimean War (1854-1856) there came the Great American Civil War (1861-1865). President Grant alluded to that and the evidence of such a strife already before the people. He supported the prophecies of Joseph Smith the Prophet (December 25, 1832 and April 1843) in which he said:

"Three days before the prophet Joseph started to Carthage I well remember his telling us we should see the fulfilment of the words of Jesus upon the earth, where he says the father should be against the son, and the son against the father, the mother against the daughter, etc. The Prophet stood in his own home when he told several of us of the night the visions of heaven were opened to him, in which he saw the American continent drenched in blood; and he saw nation rising up against nation; for he saw that the spirit of God should be withdrawn from the inhabitants of the earth, in consequence of which, there should be blood upon the face of the whole earth, except among the people of the Most High. The prophet gazed upon the scene his vision presented until his heart sickened, and he besought the Lord to close it up again."

After the Civil War there was the great Franco-German War of 1870-1871; a war which left the burning feelings of war, with the determination that there should be another war. It has had its expression in this great World War of the present time. "Revenge!" the French cried, having been defeated by the Germans at that time. Now, they have had their revenge.

Then there was the great Turco-Russian War, (1876-1877) fought with the utmost bitterness and the destruction of many thousands. And then there was the Spanish-American War (1898), in which we had a conflict with Spain and obtained the Philippines; released Cuba from Spanish control and drove out from this continent of America, from this land of Zion, the last kingly authority—"The destruction of Kingdoms!"

Then there was the British-Boer War in South Africa (1900-1901), most destructive; then the Russian-Japanese War (1904-1905) in which other tens of thousands were brought down. Then at length there came the Great World War, (1914-1918).

The spirit of war is still in the world, my brethren and sisters. It is not finished. Many predictions of the prophets have yet to be fulfilled. The world that has forgotten God; the nations that do not know him; the churches that use his name in vain, not having authority; nor the inspiration of his spirit, nor the knowledge and testimony of his design and purpose, may proclaim peace and talk peace and form peace congresses, but in vain; enduring peace is far from this world of contention and strife. As a result of the Great World War, what do we witness? Is there greater unity? Is there greater love? Is there a greater confidence? Is there greater trust? The world has never seen a time when there is so much distrust among the people; when there is such utter lack of confidence in leaders—every nation seeking, for the men, or feeling the need of men, that are fit to lead, who can speak with authority and command the confidence and the love and the trust of their fellowmen. But it is hard to find them. Where are the great mighty kingdoms and empires that were thought to be indestructible only ten years ago; the great German empire, the great Austro-Hungarian empire, the great Russian empire, the great Turkish empire? Gone! And it is the destiny of mankind to see further destruction, because the spirit of peace, the spirit of unity, the spirit of God, which alone can bring the people to peace, is not found in the world. They have rejected the prophets. Most of the nations have had the opportunity to receive, in this dispensation of the fulness of times, the testimony of the servants of God. They have turned their backs upon that testimony and despised it, and God will hold them responsible for it. This testimony has not only been carried to the nations of the earth, calling upon the poor and the humble to receive the truth, and to which many of the blood of Israel have responded; it has been published in almost every land, and the opportunity to receive the truth has been presented generally to mankind. A few have accepted it, and rejoice in it. The testimony has not only been to believers, but the testimony that binds the judgment of God, and looses the power of destruction upon them righteously, has also been borne to unbelievers with the same fidelity; so that God's justice, respecting the nations, may not be doubted even in the wars, the calamities, the pestilences, the famines, the widespread destruction that we are bound to witness and that we are witnessing, in this world of conflicting, unbelieving mankind, at the present day.

I did not think I was going to speak upon this subject, for there was something else that I thought to speak upon which is far pleasanter from one point of view. Nevertheless, I am not one of the pacifists, who believe that this world is ready for peace. I see peace only through the fulfilment of the judgments of God, which are decreed upon the world in which we live, because of the unbelief of the world. All the children of men are called upon to believe in God the Father and in Jesus Christ his Son; in the authority of the Holy Priesthood, in the manifestation and power of the Holy Spirit. They are called upon to recognize the fact that God himself has appeared and spoken to his children and is in the world, though the world knows it not. We are called to maintain the truth that the Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were martyrs to the truth, whose blood has been spilled unrighteously, to seal the testimony of God upon the world that is responsible for it. We have no other business, we Latter-day Saints, than to proclaim these truths, with all the power, means and influence the Lord gives us; to declare to mankind that the judgment day is at hand and is now upon the world. John the Revelator foresaw the time in which we live—foresaw the time when the angels of heaven, flying in the midst of heaven, should bring the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth, crying with a loud voice, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come and worship him that made heaven and earth and the sea and fountains of waters." Do we Latter-day Saints know that the revelation given John upon the Isle of Patmos is fulfilled, or is being fulfilled? We most assuredly do. And we declare to our fellowmen that this gospel which has been revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith is a gospel of revelation; is a gospel of the ministering of angels; is a gospel of the demonstration and exercise of the power of God in the hands of his Priesthood, and that it must be recognized; that it must be accepted. It is bound to make its way, until the honest in heart, the humble, the pure, the true, out of all nations, who are of the house of Israel, shall come to the knowledge of the truth and to rejoice in the testimony of Jesus Christ.

Now, my brethren and sisters, our fathers, the associates of Joseph Smith, became converted through this kind of preaching. The elders that were called upon in the beginning, and Joseph himself, had that duty—undesirable in a way—to perform, that unthankful task to perform. The very first message Joseph had to deliver was to the leaders of religion, telling them that they were all wrong; that they were corrupt; that they had a form of godliness but denied the power thereof; that they had not the right and authority to teach the people. He maintained that a vision of heavenly quality, even the appearance of the Father and the Son, had raised him up and caused him to deliver that message. He knew he had seen the vision; he knew that he had heard the voice of God; he could not deny it. He wondered that the leaders of religion should not have taken him, a mere boy, a youth, and tried to persuade him that he was in error, if he were. Instead of that, they arose in opposition; they called him an imposter, and began to persecute him; hounding him throughout his life and ultimately to a martyr's death. That was the only argument they brought against him—persecution.

Wicked warfare has been made against the Latter-day Saints and the testimony which they have borne to the world; not arguments, nor sound reasoning, not offering something that was better than that which the Saints have freely given to mankind; but abuse and persecution. They have nothing else to offer. They have not that which is better, I wish to say this to the young people, descendants of parents who received the gospel in the early days. And how did they receive it? They received it as a voice from heaven. Talk about argument, reasoning, discussion, investigation, and experiment! Why, my brethren and sisters, tens of thousands of Latter-day Saints received the testimony of Joseph Smith, as the revelation of God to them, and the testimonies of the apostles and elders that were raised up by him, who went as early as 1837, to Europe, and were sent all over the world between that time and 1860. They received the testimony of these servants of God, who called upon them and all men to repent of their sins; to believe that God lives and has spoken from the heavens, and that Jesus Christ lives; that he has organized his Church upon the earth and established his kingdom among men; that he calls upon mankind to repent, offering them remission of their sins and that they should be forgiven; that they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, which should bear witness that they were in accord with God and were in possession of the truth, and in fellowship with him and with one another, in bonds of eternal righteousness. That was the burden of their testimony. That is what the converts received through their ministry.

How long did it take to convert them? Heber C. Kimball went into Chatburn, Lancashire, where they said he would be mobbed and not permitted to speak. He stood in the market place one evening at six o'clock, and began to speak to the people in this manner, proclaiming the fact that he was a servant of God, an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. He called upon the people to repent of their sins, and he melted their hearts; so that, with tears in their eyes they came up to him at that meeting, the first they had ever seen of him, and one said, "Will you please baptize me?" "And me?" "And me?" "And me?" Twenty-five that night before midnight he baptized, and in the morning twenty-six more. No more faithful Latter-day Saints ever lived than those who responded to that kind of testimony. He and others bore witness to them by the Spirit and power of God, exercising and manifesting the power of the Holy Priesthood, as apostles of Jesus Christ, who spoke as men having authority, because they possessed it.

Now, my brethren and sisters, that authority was restored through the ministering of angels. Through the revelations of the Lord this Church has been established with its organizations and ordinances. This testimony is before the world. They cannot escape it, and it will bind them and be sealed upon them; to the salvation of all who believe and will accept it; and, as inevitably, to the destruction, righteously, of those who reject it. President Jedediah M. Grant spoke of the wonderful progress that had been made in those seven years, from the time of the arrival of the Pioneers, when he led the third company of Saints across the plains in 1847. The progress that had been made in seven years was simply astonishing. The old tabernacle, then new, which they met in, would hold as many as this Assembly Hall does. It was so crowded, at the following conference in the spring, they decided to build a bowery, which would seat seven thousand. It was located at the north end of the tabernacle. I remember the old bowery very well. I remember the old tabernacle and attending meetings there with my mother. President Grant not only referred to the material progress which had been made, and to the wonderful advancement beginning already to triumph over the sterility of these arid valleys; but to the gathering of the people by tens of thousands; for they were coming, in thousands then. Do you know that, two years before the date of this discourse, in 1852, there were more Latter-day Saints in Great Britain than in Utah? The largest number of our converts at one time were members of the Church in Great Britain—as I recall it, thirty-three thousand. As many as four or five or even six thousand emigrated in one season; they tried to bring, and I think they nearly accomplished it—one year, between 1853 and 1860, ten thousand souls across the plains, mostly from Europe.

President Grant proclaimed with power that there was nothing that could hinder the progress of this work, or that could stay the hand of the Almighty; that God was in the wars of the world, and that God was in the prosperity of his people; that it was his work, and that we are his servants and that there was no power that could prevent the onward progress of this Church. I wonder how Jedediah M. Grant would now feel and how he would view the situation today! His youngest son here in the Great Tabernacle, presiding over this great conference and Church, over these tens of thousands, aye, hundreds of thousands of faithful Saints; all bearing witness to the fulfilment of his father's prophecy, delivered, within thirty feet of where I am standing, seventy years ago!

• May God bless you, my brethren and sisters. Let us realize and appreciate the inheritance from our forbears. No more faithful men, no truer men and women ever lived; none who lived nearer to God, who understood the whisperings of his Spirit and were willing to give their lives and all things they possessed for the establishment of this work, which we now are upholding. We have only still to bear their testimony; to proclaim the truth which they proclaimed; to stand for it; and to see that it is carried to the ends of the earth; to the conversion of the honest in heart and to the conviction of those that still rebel and will not receive the word of God. There are many in the world who will not believe that God is, although he has appeared and spoken; who will not receive his word and acknowledge the ministry of his Priesthood. What can be their excuse? Where is their refuge? The condemnation of the world is unbelief. How can there be permanent peace between the nations or among the people in unbelief? It is not possible. Such peace can come to mankind only in a unity of belief, in one God, in one faith and in one baptism. There is only safety in accepting the truth. The truth is that God our Creator, the Father of us all is in the world. His children do not know it. It is your business, Latter-day Saints to proclaim it; it is my business to proclaim it, and to manifest it in our lives, in such a way that our fellow creatures will take heed and notice and try to get in accord with the design and purpose of the Almighty; instead of trying to find some other way, in opposition to it.

May God help us to do this, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The choir sang, "Forever worthy."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder D. R. Lyon, Bishop of Ensign ward.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING

A second overflow meeting was held in the Assembly Hall at 2 o'clock, April 6, 1924. Elder Edward H. Snow, president of the St. George stake of Zion, presided. As in the morning session, the Twenty-first ward choir, Walter A. Wallace, conductor, furnished the music; with Tracy Y. Cannon, organist.

The choir sang, "Come let us anew, our journey pursue."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Joseph B. Smith of the High Council of Ensign stake.

The choir, accompanied by an orchestra, sang the cantata, "The Landing of the Pilgrims," with Elder William F. Bennett singing the bass solo.

ELDER EDWARD H. SNOW

(President of St. George Stake of Zion)

As it will be appropriate for me to announce the speakers to you this afternoon, perhaps I would do well to begin with myself, by announcing to you that I am Edward H. Snow, President of the St. George Stake of Zion.

The announcement of that to you has a tendency to fasten upon my mind the sense of my responsibility. It is said that every bird sings sweetest in its native forest, and I am quite sure that I am much more at home among my own people, where I am known, than I am standing here today. Yet I do not have in my heart any fear for you or of you, but only the fear of God, which I have always remembered, that I may not be able to do full justice to the great cause which he has established on the earth and in which I am called upon, in a measure, to form a part. I am always inspired in my attendance upon these conferences, and I never stand up with the brethren in the opening hymn of our conferences, when I look around and see the immense congregation joining in the hymn, but I feel a sense of comradeship, of common cause, of inspiration, and of loyalty to the great work of the Lord. I am always thankful too that I was born and reared in the Church, thankful for its environment, for the influence which the gospel has had upon my life, for the high ideals that have ever been expounded by the leaders of the Church, for the safeguards which they have thrown around us. While giving us full free agency, they have magnified the good, the noble, the pure, and the true, and they have not left us in doubt as to the course that we ought to pursue, if we desire happiness here on the earth.

Happiness does not come to us as a result of prosperity or of riches, but from the consciousness of our doing the duty that lies nearest to us, well and faithfully, which means, substantially, following the work, life, and examples of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in spending our time, talents and efforts for the good of his children. Thereby do ye manifest our love for God, our faith in him and in the ultimate triumph of his cause here on earth. The other morning, when we stood up to sing, I thought of the remark of Patrick Henry in the House of Burgesses, when the great cause of human freedom was hanging in the balance and when the foremost thought among the colonists was declaration of independence from Great Britain. He made, as you know, this memorable declaration, that three million people, armed in the holy cause of freedom, were invincible. Well, we do not reach that number, yet the cause that we represent in the earth, and which we have taken upon our shoulders to forward in the earth, is just as great, or perhaps greater than that which the colonists espoused; and, though we be few in number, yet it is my sublime faith that united and harmonious as we are today and have ever been, we will be invincible in the earth, and that this work will continue to grow and increase in power and in influence and prestige among the people of the earth, and the virtue which the gospel inculcates, and which we exemplify in our lives, will be the saving grace of nations and kingdoms and thrones, and we will be a power in the land. Those who stand for truth and righteousness will look to us as an ally in the great cause of human redemption, and the holding together of our inheritance and our civilization.

I am thankful for the strength which we feel in being clean. I am thankful for the personal cleanliness that exists in the Church, and the high ideals that we have of it, and that there is such a vast majority of the people who form the membership of this Church whose skirts are free from contamination with the sins of the world. Thereby will we have our strength. Thereby will we keep our faith, inspiration, desire, and our power in the earth to do good, to magnify and glorify the name of the Lord. As a people we have passed the Rubicon. We are like the old drummer boy of Napoleon; we do not know a retreat. All that we know is to go forward, to charge, in the kingdom of God, and to fight sin and unrighteousness, wherever it shall be found. I sincerely pray that God will bless us as a people, that he will bless us here this afternoon, that those who shall speak to us may be filled with the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and that we shall have, as a result of this meeting, our faith increased, and our desires to serve him increased, and that we shall depart from this meeting, so far as we are concerned, to fear God and keep his commandments, that we may emulate the love and the favor of God, which are the sources of all true happiness, and to this end I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. ELISON

(President of Raft River Stake of Zion)

I was delighted this morning listening to the opening songs in the Tabernacle, to find that the theme suggested was along the line of the mission of Joseph the Prophet. Our opening hymn "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah, Jesus anointed that Prophet and seer," etc., thrilled my soul, and if it may be the will of the Lord, I should like to dwell for a few moments along this line of thought. During my lifetime I have been impressed with the mission of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, with the great work that Nephi performed, with the mission of Joseph Smith the Prophet, and I note in considering these characters that, to my mind, they have performed a most wonderful work, yet in each instance they were called in their youth; and herein I wish to emphasize the thought that the youth of Zion have a mission to perform.

You will recall the scriptural story of how Joseph was taken into Egypt, and it is not my purpose to dwell upon how, particularly, he was taken there, but the mission he performed after abiding there some length of time. You are reminded by the story, that his brothers, and later his father, came to him, and he was instrumental in temporarily saving them from destruction by providing corn for them and other foods necessary that they were not raising in their own lands at that time. When I think of the fact that Joseph was driven from his home, was expelled from the association of his brothers and of his parents, when but a youth, it touches my heart. Then we take Nephi as the next instance. His father was warned in a dream to leave Jerusalem, for the city was going to be destroyed. This evidently was no easy task for Lehi and his family, and those who were later associated with him, because they were going to a wilderness, so to speak. They were not invited to civilization, they were not asked to remain among friends and loved ones, but the Lord said to this man, "Go out into the wilderness and I will lead you whither ye shall go." As I recall some of the incidents connected with this most wonderful trip: after a few years travel and experience, Nephi, the son of Lehi, and the younger son at the time, assumed the reins of government among his people and, in fact, did so legitimately; yet in the eyes of his older brethren he assumed this position much to their dissatisfaction. They complained of him, but nevertheless he performed his part. On one occasion only, I believe, was this young man ever deprived of at least a few friends to console, encourage, and help him, during his administration among the people. On one occasion not only did Laman and Lemuel complain, not only his mother, but even his father complained, when Nephi was unable, because of the breaking of his bow, to provide food for them. He was bound upon the ship; he was persecuted by his own loved ones, yet he never faltered. And I believe that one of the chief reasons for it was that early in life he obtained a testimony of the divinity of the work of the Lord.

You recall that when he returned to Jerusalem to obtain the plates his brethren severely criticized him and abused him, and finally it became necessary for an angel of the Lord to appear and rebuke them for their deeds. Now, this was a difficult experience, it is true, but at the same time Nephi obtained a testimony that the Lord lives. He learned that there were angels in heaven, who administered to mortal men upon the earth. And he was enriching his life with a testimony of the gospel, although he was undergoing great persecution. By referring back you will see that this was also true to Joseph who was sold into Egypt. He became the interpreter of dreams, he became a mouthpiece to those people in Egypt; yet he was but a boy.

In this dispensation we find a like character, to my mind, starting out to find the truth. He read the scriptures in James, that if any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God. This boy put it to the test, a thing, by the way, the we are all invited to do, and he also learned in the beginning of his life's mission that there were not only angels in heaven, but that God the Father and Jesus the Son, whom these very scriptures in which he was reading testified of, exist. By a visible view of them, he learned that they lived. And early in his life he said to a minister of religion, so-called, that he had seen the Father. Then to his own friends, and particularly to himself, he said, I cannot deny it; I know that I have seen God and his Son, and the Lord knows that I know it; I am conscious of it.

Now, my brethren and sisters, the question may be asked by those not of our faith, "What has this to do with this great latter-day work? What has this to do with 'Mormonism?' And whence do you derive your name? My brethren and sisters, as I see it, it has this much to do with it. It is only another epoch in which the Lord has made himself manifest to the children of men. He did it to these other youths; he assisted them, he gave them strength to carry on their work,

And it seems to me it is a source of great encouragement to the youth of Zion to learn as much in detail as possible the history of these three young men. They have been a source of inspiration to me; they have strengthened me in time of trouble; they have been a means of causing me to investigate the truth and to gain hope and courage in furthering the work of the Lord. And so, when I hear these songs sung, my heart rejoices and I feel to praise the Lord for the lives of these young men:

"Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah!
Jesus anointed 'that Prophet and Seer'—
Blessed to open the last dispensation;
Kings shall extol him, and nations revere."

My brethren and sisters, this ought to be inspiring to us.

We have sung for a long time the words given in the days of the Savior:

"Far, far away, on Judea's plains,
Shepherds of old heard the joyous strains:
Glory to God, glory to God, glory to God in the highest."

And they, too, have inspiration in them. But I love to connect up these things, bring them together as an evidence that the Lord is working with his children and particularly to bring it to bear upon our existence and work at the present time. A writer of our day has composed a song in which he vividly portrays a condition that existed when Joseph went out to pray. He describes the morning:

"O how lovely was the morning!
Radiant beamed the sun above,
Bees were humming, sweet birds singing,
Music ringing through the grove,
When within the shady woodland,
Joseph sought the God of love."

I ask you, my brethren and sisters, to read that song: in the closing of the song, instead of saying, "Joseph sought the God of love," he said,

"Joseph saw the God of love."

I am grateful, my brethren and sisters, for the privilege of living in this dispensation. I am grateful for the lives of these men. I cannot step forth on these grounds in front of those pieces of statuary that we have here of Joseph and Hyrum without feeling that my life is enriched thereby; because those men, those boys, as they were, did for humanity and particularly for all those who accepted the message of life and salvation, that which is beyond price.

I recall when going into the mission field a few years ago that it had been customary, apparently, from the council that we received from our mission president, for a good many elders to teach only faith in God, repentance, and baptism, etc., and that the bearing witness that the work of the Lord is re-established, that an angel has come to earth, seemingly was held in the background; and I recalled that Brother James G. Duffin, who was our president at that time, said, "Brethren, I want you to go out and testify that the Lord has sent an angel to earth, that he sent him to Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and that message we are now bearing to the children of men." My companion and I did that. We went from city to city, from community to community; we held cottage meetings on every hand, and in every instance we found that by bearing testimony to the fact that God had sent an angel to earth to Joseph the Prophet, we obtained and secured friends everywhere, that people were interested in our message. And to me the greatest satisfaction came in the fact that it strengthened and built up my testimony. And I bear my testimony here, brethren and sisters, to the effect that, while I claim not particular miraculous manifestations, little by little faith has come to me by doing the works, and I can truthfully say today that I know nothing else of this work but truth. I cannot conceive of its being anything but truth. I have not in me any conception of anything else that I desire in preference to the work of the Lord that we are engaged in as a people. My brethren and sisters, to me it is the truth, and it is all the truth, and it is the means, it is the way, by which the children of men will get back to God, and in no other way. May his Spirit be with us. May it be carried to the children of men everywhere, that those who know us not and know not the truth may hear and accept this glad message and be saved and celestialized in the kingdom of God, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. BECKSTRAND

(President of Millard Stake of Zion)

My dear brethren and sisters.—As I have listened to the remarks of our brethren who have spoken to us during the sessions of this conference, there are two phases of this great work that I have been led to think about; and that is, the gospel as it is preached at home in the homes of the Latter-day Saints, and abroad in the mission field by our elders that are laboring in this wonderful cause, and in connection with this, the great work that is being accomplished in the temples of the Lord for the dead.

That I may be better understood, I desire to refer to the 110th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, a most wonderful section, which means so much to us as Latter-day Saints. There, in the presence of the Prophet Joseph Smith and his close associate Oliver Cowdery, a wonderful message came to them. The eyes of their understanding were opened; that is, their spiritual eyes that they were blessed with, and they saw the Lord, even the Savior, Jesus Christ, upon the breastwork of that temple, and in the comforting words that he spoke to them, he told them that their sins were forgiven, that they were pure and holy before the Lord, and that he had accepted the great work that they had accomplished in the erection of that building, and that he was satisfied and pleased with that which had been done and accomplished by the Latter-day Saints—a most wonderful revelation. And I am sure a great satisfaction came into the hearts of those two brethren as they stood under the voice of this heavenly messenger and heard those soothing words.

When this manifestation cleared away, another one appeared unto them. The Prophet Moses of old, who held the keys of the gathering of Israel, appeared unto them and conferred this authority upon them, that they might have that privilege or that power in this dispensation of the gospel. Up to this time the gospel had only been preached in a few of the eastern states and in parts of Canada, but within a year of that time, missionaries were sent out in the various states of this nation and across the water into Europe, into Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries, and a most wonderful harvest followed the labors of those men; the spirit of gathering followed conversion to the gospel. Many souls were made members of the Church through the testimonies of these brethren who came to them; they accepted the gospel and the spirit of gathering followed it. Many souls were gathered into the fold of Christ; many joined hands with the Saints in this part of the land. And in addition to this, in part-fulfilment of that prophecy, Orson Hyde and John E. Page were set apart for a mission to Palestine. Their mission was to dedicate that land as a gathering place for the house of Israel. We are told that Mr. Page fell by the wayside; Orson Hyde continued that wonderful journey through privations and hardships, and after a year and a-half's labor and work and worry, reached that part of the country, and we are told that on the Mount of Olives, with his face turned toward the city of Jerusalem, he alone offered that dedicatory prayer that he was sent there to offer. And we, of course, have wondered and have looked with astonishment as to how that condition might come about. But we saw in the great World War a condition brought about indicating that those people may be gathered back to their home country. And that prophecy will be fulfilled.

My brethren and sisters, there is no question in my mind as to the fulfilment of prophecy, as to the great work that is in store for the Latter-day Saints.

And, in connection with this mission to the living as it has been preached in the various nations of the earth, we have the vicarious work that is being accomplished and done for the dead. When we think of the eight temples finished and completed, and the ninth under erection, of the vast amount of work that is being accomplished for the dead, and the desire on the part of the Latter-day Saints to perform this great labor and mission, what a blessing it is! Many souls who have gone to the grave without a knowledge of the gospel without the privilege of receiving or hearing it, are waiting for that work to be accomplished for them, that they, too, may join with the Latter-day Saints in the great blessings of the gospel.

I bear you my testimony that this is the work of the Lord, that this is the plan of salvation. Every man, woman, and child who will obey and live it, will be saved in the presence of our Father in heaven. And may we be faithful in the performance of our duties, day by day as Latter-day Saints, is my prayer. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE T. HYDE

(President of the Portneuf Stake of Zion)

My brethren and sisters, I appreciate the honor that has come to me in being invited to address you for just a few moments, and I sense very keenly the responsibility that rests upon me in occupying this most important position, and I realize, that only through the inspiration of our Father in heaven will I be able to say anything that will tend to benefit, comfort, or build us up in our most holy faith.

I bring to you, my brethren and sisters, greetings from the Saints who dwell in Portneuf stake, who live over the border line, that invisible line which marks the geographical division between the State of Utah and Idaho. Possibly I am a stranger to you, my brethren and sisters, but I feel that we are all brethren and sisters in the great work of the Lord, all children of that great Father in heaven, all actuated by that same spirit, the spirit of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I have been coming to the conferences of the Church for many years, but never has the greatness, marvelousness, and the wonders of the work appealed to me as they have throughout the various sessions of this wonderful conference, and truly I realize that the Lord indeed is doing a marvelous and a wonderful work. I feel that the work of the Lord has made wonderful growth and progress since its organization, since those early days which our brethren have referred to here so beautifully this afternoon. When we contemplate the numbers that there are today in the membership of the Church, we can then in a sense realize that it is indeed a "marvelous work and a wonder." When we stop to contemplate the fact that there are today, as President Grant announced in his opening address, 1,700 or more of the young men and women of this Church engaged in missionary labors throughout the world, bearing the message of life and salvation to those who sit in darkness, taking to them the glad tidings that God has again made known his mind and will and restored to earth the authority to administer in the ordinances of his gospel. When we contemplate these things we can realize something of the magnitude of the work that has already been, is being, and will be, accomplished, and I feel that the work of the Lord will make still more rapid strides, if we, the membership of the Church at home, truly live up to the teachings of the gospel, if we ourselves observe to do the commandments that our Father has given to us, if we magnify the duties that membership in the Church brings to us. I believe that if we do that, as our young men and young women go out into the nations of the earth declaring the word, they will have a stronger, a greater force behind them in the lives of their parents at home, in the power of the example that we are setting here, I feel that it is incumbent upon us to live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is indeed a great and a marvelous work, and we are indeed a peculiar people.

Some of the characteristics of the Church, we may say, too, are peculiar, and one of those characteristics that appeals to me and that I oftentimes think of, is that it means on our part continual service, and work. There is no place, no time, in our lives when we can sit idly by, but we must continue faithfully in the service of our Master to the end, if we would reap the reward of our faith, and eternal lives in the kingdom of our Father.

I feel that throughout the sessions of this great conference we have had some of the most wonderful, inspirational teachings, speaking and counsel, that have ever been given to the Church. The opening address of President Grant, enunciating the doctrine that it is necessary for us to keep the commandments, to live the laws of the gospel, to be faithful continually, brought into my mind the fact that if we would reap the benefits of the gospel, we must keep the commandments. I feel that while we are gaining numerically, making wonderful progress, there is still a greater work, I may call it an invisible work, that is going on throughout the entire world as a result of the restoration of the gospel. I recall that in that opening address of President Grant, he referred to the coming of Elijah and the fact that the spirit of Elijah has been poured out upon all the world. Over the nations of the world, the people everywhere, has come a spirit of gathering the genealogies of their forefathers. They know not why, he said, but they are inspired through the coming into their hearts of the spirit of Elijah, which causes them to do that work. I feel, too, that many other truths of the gospel are being gradually taken up by various religious denominations of the day; the leaven, in other words, is gradually working, leavening the lump. Notwithstanding our attention has been called to the fact that many of the churches are preaching and advocating that Jesus Christ is not the Only Begotten Son of the Father, we bear testimony that he is; for that truth has been revealed anew to us—an additional evidence has been brought to us, that he is indeed the Son of God in the flesh. But many are denying that, and it seems to be creeping into the hearts of many, yet there are thousands, yea hundreds of thousands who do believe that he is indeed the Son of God and the Savior of the world, and many of them are gradually adopting the truths of the everlasting gospel.

The Word of Wisdom, is a wonderful and great law of life, simple truths of living I oftentimes term it, which our Father in heaven so mercifully revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith to guide us in our daily lives that we might be physically strong, that we might be spiritually awake and strong. Those wonderful principles enunciated in that, are being adopted by the scientists and men of wisdom throughout the length and breadth of the earth, and today many of our foremost men of science, men of ability along many lines, are advocating the living of those simple rules of life, the abstaining from strong drink, from tobacco, from tea and from coffee, and from using meat to excess—adopting those great truths that were made known to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the early history of the Church. So likewise are they adopting many other of the truths of the gospel, and so I feel that, by and by, in the providences of our Father in heaven, that the converts to the Church will be more numerous than they are at the present time. I feel that in the near future they will flock to the standard of Christ by the thousands. And this brings home to us the necessity on our part of living the gospel and teaching our children the wonderful truths of it, that they may grow up in the fear and admonition of the Lord, full of faith and the knowledge of the gospel that they may proclaim its wondrous truths to the nations and be capable and able ministers of the word.

It was a wonderful address we had this morning from Elder Richards, relative to the youth of Israel. I never before listened to such a wonderful discourse upon that particular theme. He handled it so beautifully! It touched my heart. I have always felt, and I feel now, that we owe to our children a good and proper example. The great truth has come into my life, that example goes much farther than precept. O it is easy to talk to them; it is easy to tell them, do this, and do that, but it is a difficult thing, sometimes, to live the principles which we advocate. Our daily lives should be such, that our children can follow in our footsteps. We should live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by our example teach it to our children. If we would have them observe the Word of Wisdom, I feel that we should observe it. If we would have them honor the Sabbath day and keep it holy, I feel that we should honor the Sabbath day. If we expect them to grow up full of faith and integrity and active in the Church, our lives must be such that they will lead our children into activity.

I was never before so stirred in my life as I was some six months ago with the address of President Grant, when it was published in one of the periodicals. It appealed to me so strongly that I am going to read an extract to you:

This was toward the conclusion of that wonderful address. He says:

"I desire to read just two paragraphs from the prayer given at the dedication of the Alberta temple:

"We thank thee, O Father, for the knowledge which we possess that thou dost live and that thy Son Jesus Christ is our Redeemer and our Savior, and that thy servant Joseph Smith, Junior, was and is a prophet of the true and the living God. And, O Father, may we ever be true and faithful to the gospel of thy Son, Jesus Christ, revealed through thy son Joseph. We especially pray thee, O Father in heaven, to bless the youth of thy people in Zion and in all the world. Shield them from the adversary and from wicked and designing men. Keep the youth of thy people, O Father, in the straight and the narrow path that leads to thee. Preserve them from the pitfalls and snares that are laid for their feet. O, Father, may our children grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord Jesus Christ. Give unto them a testimony of the divinity of this work, as thou hast given it unto us, and preserve them in purity and in the truth."

Then he added, "And I say unto you, O fathers in Israel: if you will set an example by being honest before God in the payment of your tithes, if you will observe the Word of Wisdom, if you will observe your family and your secret prayers, God will give you strength to preserve the youth of Zion, as mentioned in this supplication. May the Lord bless us and pour out upon us richly his Holy Spirit during this conference, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen."

That which appeals to me in this is that we desire that our children grow up in purity, that they be active men and women in the Church, honorable members of the communities where they live. Here are the words of the living prophet, pointing out to us how we may be successful. Our children are dearer to us than all the world; they are the most precious jewels that our Father in heaven could give us. We love them. We would give our very lives for them, and here are a few simple rules of life for their preservation, if we will but observe these rules, the prophet said we will be successful in rearing our children in purity and deliver them from the pitfalls that constantly beset their paths. If we will observe the law of tithing honestly before God and before our children, if we will faithfully observe our family and secret prayers, and if we will faithfully observe the Word of Wisdom—the prophet says we shall have power and strength to preserve our children in purity. That is one of the greatest promises that has ever been made to us, and I have faith in it, I believe it, my brethren and sisters, and I want to bear my testimony that if you will keep the commandments of God and observe to do them, you will be successful in the rearing of your children.

In conclusion, I bear testimony to the truth of the great work in which we are engaged. I know that it is of God, that in this day and age of the world he came from heaven to earth and visited the prophet Joseph Smith, and that other messengers came to Joseph under the direction of our Father in heaven, and restored the gospel in all its purity, with all its power, keys, and authority—all that is necessary for the salvation, and exaltation of all the children of men.

May God bless you, my brethren and sisters. May you appreciate the blessing of membership in the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, I pray. Amen.

ELDER ANDREW JENSON*(Assistant Church Historian)*

I feel, my brethren and sisters, that it will be a hard task for me, as, in fact, it has been for the speakers who have preceded me, to hold my own against the amplifiers. The people here assembled have the choice between remaining seated here and listening to us, or going out on the lawn to have a standing seat and listening to what is going on in the Tabernacle, and unless we are endowed with an unusual degree of the Spirit of the Lord, and thereby draw your interest, it may be a hard matter to keep you here. But I feel that the Saints gathered in this Assembly Hall are entitled to the blessings of the Lord as much as those congregated in the Tabernacle, as this meeting has been appointed by proper authority, and speakers selected, and it is our privilege to enjoy the Spirit of the Lord, and it is the privilege of the speakers here as well as the listeners, to receive the bread of life.

I rejoice with my brethren in the excellent conference we have had, so far, and the last meeting, which is now in session over in the Tabernacle, is undoubtedly as interesting and instructive as the former sessions have been, and I trust that we all shall leave feeling that we have had one of the best conferences the Church has ever held.

Never before since the Church was organized, have so many people attended a general conference as on this occasion, and it reminds me that it is just eighty years ago today since President Joseph Smith, the martyr, also had occasion to attend the largest conference the Church ever held up to that time. It was the memorable conference held in April, 1844, (the last conference the Prophet attended) on which occasion he asserted that all of North and South America was the land of Zion. Up to that time some of the brethren had entertained the idea that Nauvoo was already too far from Jackson county, Missouri, which was called Zion, or the place for the building of the City of Zion, and some of them had misgivings in regard to living in Illinois, thinking they were too far away from Jackson county, to be included in the land of Zion. The Prophet's declaration was therefore good and timely, as we are now very much farther away from Jackson county than Nauvoo is, and yet we are in the land of Zion, representing as we do here ninety stakes of Zion, all organized in this western land since the days of Nauvoo.

I am expected, according to the appointment received, to say something to you in regard to the importance of history and the necessity of record-keeping. We Latter-day Saints have been unusually blessed in regard to this matter, as the Lord has revealed to us in these the last days some of the missing links in the history of the world. When we were a part of the sectarian world, some of us were taught that the Lord created the world out of nothing; but the Lord, in new Scriptures, has revealed unto us the true history of the creation. On a certain occasion the Lord called Moses up into an exceeding high mountain and there showed him his creations—the many worlds that he had created. But he told Moses that he could not comprehend them all, as there were so many worlds that mortal man could not number them, but that those worlds are all numbered to the Lord. God then said: “And now, Moses, my son, I will speak unto thee concerning this earth upon which thou standest; and thou shalt write the things which I shall speak.” (Moses 1:40). The Lord then revealed to Moses how the earth on which we live came into existence. This question has often arisen: Where did Moses, the first recognized historian, get his information from, in regard to the creation of the world, and also in regard to the flood, to Enoch, and Abraham and other patriarchs? What historians had written books before him from which he could copy? Legend says that a big pillar with historical inscriptions upon it had been erected on or near the site of old Babylon, on the river Euphrates, but that assertion has never been verified. The facts are that the Lord took Moses up on a high mountain and there revealed to him how the earth came into existence, and also told him about our father Adam in the garden of Eden, how he fell from grace, and furthermore that the gospel that we are preaching here today, and in which we rejoice at the present time, was preached to Adam in the beginning, and did not come into existence in the meridian of time. John was not the first man who baptized, but Adam was taught the principle of baptism. The gospel, as we receive it now, and as we understand it, was revealed to father Adam, was revealed to Enoch and Noah, was preached to Abraham, and was known in part in the days of Moses. This knowledge has come to us through the faithful labors of historians. The Ten Commandments were written by the finger of the Lord himself upon tablets of stone, and in addition to that, Moses wrote his books, which seem to have existed in fragmentary form among the Israelites for generations, and when the great Babylonian captivity took place the people were scattered, as well as their records, and the Children of Israel lost for a while their national identity and records; but when the Israelites came back from the Babylonian captivity there was a general reconstruction of affairs, under the direction of Ezra, the priest, and Nehemiah, who were the accepted leaders of the return to Jerusalem; and it is recorded that the people got very much interested in their records and genealogies. The following is from the writings of Nehemiah:

“All the people gathered themselves together; * * * and they spake to Ezra, the scribe, to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel, and Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation, both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding * * * and he read therein * * * and Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose * * * and Ezra opened the book in sight of all the people * * * and when he opened it, all the people stood up: and Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God. And all the people answered, 'Amen, Amen,' with lifting up their hands; and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground * * * * So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading * * * * All the people wept, when they heard the words of the law." (Neh. 8:1-9).

We can scarcely realize how much we are indebted to the history of the past which has been written for our benefit. Reverting to the history of the creation, we have a duplicate form of the same in what was written by Abraham, many, many years ago—revealed anew in our dispensation. The writings of Abraham, which came into the possession of Joseph Smith in 1835, contain a very beautiful account of the creation of the world, going hand in hand with that which, a little later, was revealed to Moses. When, in a sectarian world, some of us were taught as children that God created the earth out of nothing, we were taught that which is not true. The writings of Abraham tell us that the Lord stood among those "who were with him." That accounts for the term "Gods" being used sometimes instead of the singular form "God". God stood in the midst of his associates and said to them:

"We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials and we will make an earth wherein these (God's children) may dwell, and we will prove them herewith to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them. And they who keep their first estate shall be added upon; and they who keep not their first estate shall not have glory in the same kingdom with those who keep their first estate; and they who keep their second estate shall have glory added upon their heads for ever and ever." (Book of Abraham 3:24-26).

This is a most beautiful revelation which has come to us in these last days through the Prophet Joseph Smith. We frequently sing: "We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet," "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah," etc., in appreciation of modern prophets and modern revelations, because these new revelations serve as a key to the old revelations. The Christian world generally have one book, the Bible, which they do not understand, while the Latter-day Saints have four sacred books, which they do understand, for the Lord has given us the key in new revelation to both new and old revelations.

And here we have the Book of Mormon. Do you know what importance was attached to records in the early Book of Mormon days? Does it appeal to you that a certain justifiable homicide was committed in the interest of the family of Lehi which left Jerusalem 600 years before the birth of the Savior? Do you remember what happened to Laban who lived in Jerusalem at the time that Lehi and his family were commanded by the Lord to leave that city to go into the wilderness, relying upon the Lord leading them to a land of promise far away? After they had been in the wilderness a short time, they realized that they had no records with them. They did not even know the genealogy of their forefathers; but Laban, their kinsman, had the records, and Nephi, the faithful son of Lehi, and his brethren, were commanded to go back to Jerusalem to obtain these records from Laban. They gathered all the gold and silver and precious things which the family had left in Jerusalem at the time of their exodus, and offered it to Laban in exchange for the records. But Laban, seeing the treasure, was tempted to possess it, and, after getting it, he sent his servants after Nephi and his brethren to kill them, and they would undoubtedly have been destroyed, had they not succeeded in escaping from Jerusalem. Laban took their property and kept the records. But Nephi prevailed upon his brethren to return to Jerusalem once more and try again. The Lord certainly did not want the family of Lehi to go into this land of promise without a knowledge of their forefathers, for in that case they would be in danger of losing not only their genealogy, but also their language and religion. When the sons of Lehi arrived in Jerusalem and found Laban in possession of the riches of which he had robbed the estate of Lehi, they devised new plans for obtaining the records, and to cut a long story short Nephi was constrained, or rather commanded, by the spirit, to slay Laban. It was better that one wicked man should perish than that the whole people which the Lord intended to lead into the promised land far away, should dwindle into ignorance and unbelief. That is how the Nephites came possessed of the brass plates, which, among other things, contained the law of Moses, even similar writings to those which caused the Israelites in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah to glorify God. On that occasion the law of Moses and other things which had been written were preserved for the benefit of the Israelites who returned to Jerusalem, after their captivity in Babylon, to rebuild the temple and to commence anew their national existence.

And so the sons of Lehi obtained the brass plates and in due course of time crossed the great waters to the land of promise. But the brass plates were not sufficient; the Lord commanded Nephi to make plates of his own—golden plates—upon which he might record the doings of his own people. Thus Nephi made a record upon his plates of how his father's family left Jerusalem, how they traveled through the wilderness, how they built a ship, how they crossed the great waters, and how they finally landed upon this great western continent, this land of America, which became a choice land above all other lands, after the flood had devastated the earth in the time of Noah. Now it is recorded that Nephi was faithful in keeping the commandments of God. He even made two sets of plates; on one set he recorded the things that pertained to the service of God, and upon the other plates, which were the larger plates, he recorded the secular history of his people, including the story of the kings and some of the troubles, contentions and wars which occurred between the Nephites and the Lamanites. We have in the Book of Mormon a translation from the small plates of Nephi, and we also have in that sacred record Mormon's abridgment of the text of the large plates of Nephi. These things are very precious to us, and that such would be the case was well understood by the prophets of old, even by Nephi—that same Nephi I have already been speaking of—and the Lord promised him that if he would be faithful in recording the history of his people, his writings should be preserved for the benefit of his posterity. In his second book, third chapter he writes:

"Wherefore, the fruit of thy loins shall write; and the fruit of the loins of Judah shall write; and that which shall be written by the fruit of thy loins, and also that which shall be written by the fruit of the loins of Judah, shall grow together, unto the confounding of false doctrines, and laying down of contentions, and establishing peace among the fruit of thy loins, and bringing them to the knowledge of their fathers in the latter days; and also to the knowledge of my covenants, saith the Lord." (2 Nephi 3:12).

This promise was repeated later on. Nephi writes, "The Lord God promised unto me that these things which I write shall be kept and preserved and handed down unto my seed from generation to generation." (2 Nephi 25:21).

Enos, a son of Jacob (Nephi's brother), writes, "I had faith and I did cry unto the Lord that he would preserve the records, and he covenanted with me that he would bring them forth unto the Lamanites in his own due time." (Enos 1:16).

Helaman records that many records were being kept of the proceedings of the Nephites. He says: "There are many books, many records of every kind, and they have been kept chiefly by the Nephites." (Hela. 3:15).

The historian, Mormon, writes in his abridgment, "There are records which do contain all the proceedings of this people and a more short but a true account was given by Nephi." (That is part of the record we now have). "Therefore I have made my record of these things according to the record of Nephi, which was engraved on the plates which were called the plates of Nephi. And behold I do make the record upon the plates which I have made with mine own hands." (3 Nephi 5:9-16).

I will read one more extract. Mormon, in giving the history in his abridgment from the large plates of Nephi, departs from the historical narrative in speaking of the administration of Jesus Christ among the Nephites, and writes:

"And now there cannot be written in this book [Mormon's abridgment] even a hundredth part of the things which Jesus did truly teach unto the people;

"But behold the plates of Nephi do contain the more part of the things which he taught the people [of Nephi].

"And these things have I written, which are a lesser part of the things which he taught the people; and I have written them to the intent that they may be brought again unto this people from the Gentiles, according to the words which Jesus hath spoken." (3 Nephi 26:6-8).

I will quote one more instance. The chief recorder in those days was Nephi, not the first Nephi, but one who lived later on. A prophet by the name of Samuel, a Lamanite, had predicted that when Christ should rise from the dead, some of the dead Saints who had lived in former days should arise and appear unto many, and the historian had seemingly overlooked that fact, and when Jesus visited the Nephites on another occasion (for he visited them a number of times) he said:

"Bring the record which ye have kept. And when Nephi had brought forth the records and laid them before him, he cast his eyes upon them and said: Verily I say unto you, I commanded my servant Samuel, the Lamanite, that he should testify unto this people, that at the day that the Father should glorify his name in me that there were many Saints who should arise from the dead, and should appear unto many, and should minister unto them. And he said unto them: Were it not so? And his disciples answered him and said: Yea, Lord, Samuel did prophesy according to thy words, and they were all fulfilled. And Jesus said unto them; How be it that ye have not written this thing, that many Saints did arise and appear unto many and did minister unto them? And it came to pass that Nephi remembered that this thing had not been written. And it came to pass that Jesus commanded that it should be written; therefore it was written according as he commanded."—(3 Nephi 23:7-13).

Now, passing on, brethren and sisters, did it ever occur to you that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints could not be organized, or at least, it was not organized, until the Book of Mormon had come forth. We are called "Mormons" today, and while the name, of course, is in one sense a misnomer, it is not altogether so, because there were none known as "Mormons" among the children of men in America, or elsewhere, until the Book of Mormon appeared, and that book came into existence just before the Church was organized. Thus there were in reality "Mormons" in the world before there was any Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, for as soon as the Book of Mormon had been printed, Joseph Smith and those associated with him at once became known as "Mormons."

We find that the Book of Mormon contained so many truths in regard to the gospel of Jesus Christ that when we place it beside the New Testament, and especially with that which was written by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, we have most precious documents. The writings of these four evangelists placed by the side of that which was written by Nephi and the other historians on this continent give us what we sometimes call the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. That does not imply that we in these two books have everything the Lord wants us to know, for he will yet reveal many things which will make us wise unto salvation. However, until the Book of Mormon was printed in the English language, Joseph Smith was not authorized to organize the Church, but with the Book of Mormon and the Bible, put side by side, he understood the principles of the gospel and how to organize the Church, being aided by the revelations which he from time to time received from the Lord.

The coming forth of the Book of Mormon is a very interesting theme to speak about. We frequently deliver lectures on the Book of Mormon, and we do not tire of dwelling upon the faithfulness of the Prophet Joseph, upon the testimony of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon and also upon the solemn testimony of the Eight Witnesses. We are pleased to know that all these men were true and faithful to their testimonies, and some of them in the midst of troubles and persecutions staked their all upon the fact that the Book of Mormon is true.

The Nephite record, which, according to prophesy, should come from the earth lay buried in the Hill Cumorah for 1427 years. The people of which the book bears record were destroyed from the earth and the record was sealed up and buried by Moroni—the last Nephi prophet and historian. When it finally came forth it was like a voice from the ground, or a message from the grave. The Hill Cumorah was opened, the plates delivered by Moroni (who now appeared as a heavenly messenger) to Joseph who translated the records into English, and the people at once began to read it. It was the record of a people which no longer existed, but which had once flourished on this continent, and among the most precious narratives contained in it was an account of that which God, through his Son and his prophets, accomplished in this western continent.

Now, brethren and sisters, coming down to our own day and dispensation, I wish to remark that we Latter-day Saints are not destined to go through the same ordeal as the Nephites; we are not to be destroyed; we are to stay here for ever; hence we should learn a lesson from the records of the Bible and the Nephite records in regard to the keeping of our own records. What if we had no historians today? What could we do even now in writing the history of the Prophet Joseph Smith so many years after he suffered martyrdom? It could be done perhaps after a fashion, but could not be done correctly from memory; but we have a good record of the Church from the beginning written at the time when the events occurred. Permit me to remind you of the fact that the very first commandment which the Lord gave to his Church almost immediately after it was organized, was this: "Behold there shall be a record kept among you." You will find this the very first sentence of the very first revelation given to the Church after its organization on the 6th of April, 1830.

Oliver Cowdery, who had assisted the Prophet Joseph Smith in translating the Book of Mormon, was made the first Church recorder. Later, John Whitmer, one of the Eight Witnesses, was called to be the Church recorder, and since that time we have always had Church recorders and historians.

Now, brethren and sisters, I want to emphasize the importance of keeping records. We should feel like Parley P. Pratt who, in writing the preface to his Voice of Warning, said: "Should the author be called to sacrifice his life for the cause of truth, he will have the consolation that it will be said of him as it was said of Abel, vis: 'He being dead, yet speaketh'." Parley P. Pratt is alive today. He was martyred in 1857 by a wicked man, near the town of Van Buren, in Arkansas, but Elder Pratt is still preaching the gospel; his Voice of Warning is read by thousands and tens of thousands today. His Key to Theology and his Autobiography are still read by the youth of Zion, and, if I can judge from my own experience, the Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt has made a deeper impression upon the youth of Israel than any other book that has been written so far. In saying this I do not slight any other literary production written by the Elders of the Church, but the Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt is, in my estimation, faith-promoting from the first to the last chapter, and to me it proved an inspiration indeed. I owe to the existence and to the reading of that book much of what I am today. After reading that book I felt a great desire to become a servant of God, and in my reflections I thought: Why cannot I seek unto God and receive similar blessings to those received by Brother Pratt? So I began as a youth to seek more earnestly after the truth of heaven than I had ever sought before, and I desired to become a missionary. I wanted to preach the gospel, and the Lord in that regard has answered my prayers, as I have filled a number of missions for the Church.

But I have been more particularly interested in the history of our people. A short time ago I summarized the number of miles which I have traveled in my lifetime. That may not mean much, as our salvation does not depend upon the number of miles traveled or the length of sermons preached. But there is nevertheless something interesting connected with preaching and traveling, when done with an eye single to the glory of God; and when I discovered that I had traveled something like 469,000 miles, mainly in the interest of Church history, I felt somewhat satisfied with my efforts and the discharge of my duties in that direction.

Now, I wish to say to you, my brethren and sisters, that we are still pioneers in the cause of Christ. "Mormonism" is not yet one hundred years old, and we have as a fact only just commenced to exist as a people. One thought I desire to impress here upon you. It is this: If you ever had a desire to live in the days of the Savior and to belong to that Church which he and his apostles organized 1900 years ago, you would, after the lapse of 100 years, have had the choice of one of two things; either to become a martyr for the gospel's sake, or to be swept away by the wave of apostasy. Compare this with the assertion made at this conference that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was never in a better condition than it is today, and that its membership was never more numerous or prosperous than it is at the present time. What can we say of the original Church in the light of history, after it had existed one hundred years? There was very little left of it. The apostasy which commenced to show itself in the days of Paul had spread to such an extent that after the great lights of the Church had fallen as martyrs, the great majority of the Saints had turned away from the gospel as originally taught by the Savior. So we thank God for the dispensation of the fulness of times, and we are writing the history of a people the like of which has never been written before. It is not a history of an ancient people, or of a past dispensation, such as that of the first Christian era or the dispensation of Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and Moses. All these dispensations had their day, and we know something of their history. But in our case the work of the Lord is here to remain, and it behooves us to remain with it; and our children after us, we trust, will continue the work even more faithfully and successfully than we have done.

My message to you, my brethren and sisters, is this: You, and particularly the old veterans who sit before me (and you will all be old by and by), write your histories and biographies. I am already gray-haired myself. I commenced my missionary experience when I was the youngest of all my missionary companions, but now I am numbered among the older ones, and I would like to feel that I have not lived in vain. I do not wish to die, I never want to die. I know I shall die as to mortality, but otherwise I want to live on continuously, and I want to leave something for posterity. I have been privileged to write some books which I think will be read with considerable interest after I shall have passed to the other side; they are already appreciated by some. And as I think of myself I think of you—you fathers and mothers—who are now living but who in a little while will be in the spirit world, like myself. Do you not desire to leave behind you something for your children to read? Do you not desire to preach the gospel after you are dead and gone as to mortality? If you do, write your histories. Dictate the experiences of your lives to your sons and daughters, that they may write them, for we have among us many young and talented people, our sons and daughters and grandchildren, who can write good English. Let them, from your dictation, record something of your life's work, and do it without delay. Take this timely advice from one of your historians who has spent his whole life in studying these matters. Do not be satisfied to live the short span of seventy years, but live forever! Record that which God has done for you and by you, and if you have a testimony that this is the work of God, bequeath that testimony to posterity. I believe that nearly all who are sitting here under the sound of my voice could bear the same testimony as those who have testified from this stand—the speakers at these meetings. Based upon many years of observations, I may make the statement that our sons and daughters will think more of us after we have left them than they do now, when we are with them. Parents, as a rule, are not appreciated as they should be until after they have passed into eternity. Then, after the children become fatherless and motherless, they will appreciate their parentage, and endeavor to remember what their fathers and mothers have taught them by precept as well as by example. Let us not rely upon the public records to do us justice, but let us pay special attention also to our individual records which will be of equal importance to those who shall live after us, and particularly to our own posterity throughout generations to come.

God bless you, my brethren and sisters. My testimony is the same as those which have been borne by my brethren who have already addressed you. "Mormonism" is true. Joseph Smith is a true Prophet. Through him God restored to earth the true gospel of Jesus Christ, and I for one, feel that I owe everything that I am in life, spiritually and temporally, to that gospel, the gospel of Jesus Christ. And I feel grateful to the father of these boys (referring to two sons of the late Apostle Erastus Snow sitting on the stand) who came over to Scandinavia in 1850 to introduce the true gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of northern Europe. I was then in the spirit world, and I imagine that I thought it was time for me to enter into mortality, so I asked God to send me down to be born on the 11th of December, 1850, as Erastus Snow and his brethren had arrived in Denmark on the 14th of June previously. I do not remember that I asked to be sent down at the time of my birth, but I can imagine such a possibility, because in the spirit world I may have known something of what was taking place on the earth and may have asked for the privilege of coming down to take part in this gospel dispensation.

God bless you. May he enable us all to do our duty, not only in history-making and record-keeping, but in keeping the commandments of God generally speaking, until the end, so that we eventually may be saved in the kingdom of God. This is my desire and sincere prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The Church authorities were presented and unanimously sustained, as at the Tabernacle.

The choir sang, "Glorious things of Thee are spoken," and benediction was pronounced by Elder Frank R. Snow of the High Council of Ensign stake.

CLOSING SESSION

The closing session of the conference was held in the Tabernacle on Sunday Afternoon, April 6, 1924, at 2 o'clock. President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

Invocation was offered by Elder Daniel G. Miller, President of the Yellowstone stake of Zion.

The choir sang the song, "Have faith, ye Saints."

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

I desire earnestly, while I stand before you this afternoon, to have the words I speak prompted by the spirit of our heavenly Father.

APPEAL FOR GREATER INTEREST IN LEARNING HOW TO LEAD AND TEACH THE YOUNG.

Like Brother Stephen L. Richards, I was greatly pleased to have the President in his opening address make a special appeal to parents and to the members of the Church generally in the interest of proper training for our young people. I propose this afternoon to make an appeal, as strong as is in my power, to all the people of the Church to take advantage of the training that is being offered in practically every ward in the Church in the teacher-training classes.

We are a community of teachers. Only by teaching effectively can our real mission be accomplished. By taking this work in teacher-training, certainly all who desire to do so can increase their teaching efficiency. If you have a son over whom you do not have satisfactory control, I believe the teacher-training course will help you to secure that control. If you have a daughter who does not seem to take kindly to your instructions, if she is not willing to go in that way which you indicate, your influence with her, I believe, will be greater if you study teacher-training.

If you are presiding over a ward, or a stake, or any organization, if you are a teacher in a class, I believe you will be able to do your work more effectively if you take up this course of study. In the Church we want more men like George Goddard; more men like Karl G. Maeser, and George H. Brimhall. These are unusual teachers. By study, real struggle, and inspiration, they have acquired the information contained in the lessons that we are attempting to teach in our teacher-training classes.

EXAMPLE OF A FARMER WHO, HAVING THE PRIESTHOOD, WAS A GREAT TEACHER.

Long years ago in one of our "Mormon" villages, there was a great teacher. He had taken no college honors, nor was he a public school teacher. This man was a farmer. His hands were plainly marked with the indications of arduous toil. He wore common clothing. He was just an ordinary laborer, but he was a natural teacher, a great teacher—a teacher of the Bible. He taught my Sunday school class. This man did not confine his teaching to the Sabbath day, nor to the hours of Sunday school. During the evenings of the week he used to have a group of us bare-footed, commonly-clad little youngsters in the country go to his home, and there he would teach us our Sunday school lessons.

This man was a diligent student of the gospel, of the scriptures, and of human nature. He studied thoroughly both his subject and his class. Through hard work and inspiration he became an unusually inspirational and successful teacher.

I shall refer somewhat fully to one lesson which he taught because it illustrates what teachers can do who by faithful effort acquire splendid teaching ability.

This man magnified the Priesthood which he held. He was filled with a burning testimony, a love for studying the scriptures and an ardent desire to assist in teaching the gospel to all the world—for he believed the scripture which says that when this has been accomplished “then shall the end come” (Matt. 24:14). In his life, his work and teaching, he certainly sought first the kingdom. The logic in the following Bible lesson on the apostasy and restoration, as he gave it, illustrates what can be accomplished by those who use the methods that are taught in our teacher-training classes.

The teacher was preparing us for our Sunday school jubilee. He would instruct us something like this:

THE GREAT APOSTASY PREDICTED

“There is to come a time when the gospel will not be found anywhere in all the world. I learn this from the Bible. The scripture says: (II Tim. 4:3,4) ‘For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap unto themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables.’”

“Now boys,” he would continue, “that prediction is recorded in holy writ. Furthermore, the Bible says: (Isa. 24:5) ‘the earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant;’ that is the Bible, and here,” he said, “recorded in holy writ, are the words of our heavenly Father himself. He said in a most positive fashion that sometime or other, the gospel shall not be found anywhere in all the world. These words are as follows: (Amos 8:11,12).

THE APOSTASY TO BE UNIVERSAL.

“Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor of thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, shall they run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it.’ Thus there is predicted a time when the gospel of Jesus Christ cannot be found anywhere.

GOOD CHEER FOR THOSE WHO ENDURE TO THE END.

“But I want you boys to remember,” continued this farmer teacher, “that the scripture also says: (Matt. 24:12), ‘And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many will wax cold.’ But you must be cheered up, all the time, by these words written in this splendid book; (Matt. 24:13) 'But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.'

TEACHING FOR DOCTRINE THE COMMANDMENTS OF MEN

This man with a group of country boys, bare-footed, sitting before him, was a real master. He said: "And the scripture describes a little more clearly the conditions that are to prevail in the world, for: 'This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain they do worship me,' saith the Lord, 'teaching for doctrines the commandments of men'." (Matt. 15:8, 9).

CONDITIONS IN THE LAST DAYS—THE BOASTING OF SOME WHO LEARN A LITTLE SCIENCE.

A passage he used to emphasize was quoted yesterday by Dr. Talmage. It reads: (II Tim. 3:1-3) "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good."

"That is the condition, that is going to prevail in the world. Men will even be 'despisers of those that are good' (II Tim. 3:3, 4), 'traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.' I want you boys to remember," said this great farmer teacher, "that in the world there is to be a time when people will be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, traitors, heady, highminded lovers of pleasures, as I have said, more than lovers of God, (II Tim. 3:5) 'having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.' These are they who rely upon themselves; these are they who are called scientific; these are they who rely upon their own judgment. These are they who think they have no need of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. These are they who boast of their own intelligence, of their own knowledge, of their own studies, of their own conclusions, these are they who have no reliance in, and think they need no help from the God of Washington, the God of Franklin and the God of Lincoln. The scripture tells what their condition is. They are always studying, yes, in the language of the Bible, they are (II Tim. 3:7) 'Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth'."

THE THRILLING DREAM

Then he drew our attention to that splendid vision of Nebuchadnezzar, the King, and the result of Daniel's appeal to divine providence for information concerning the dream and its interpretation. The king had forgotten the dream. And Daniel prayed that he might be able to draw the dream to the remembrance of the king and give him the interpretation thereof. He told the king that in the dream he saw a great image with a head of gold, with shoulders and arms of silver, with body and thighs of brass, with legs of iron, with feet and toes of iron and clay, miry clay, mixed together. And that he saw a little stone cut out of a mountain without hands; and that it rolled forth and smote upon the great image and broke it into pieces, and the little stone grew into a mountain that filled the whole earth.

Now for the interpretation: The head Daniel saw, represented the king himself. There are to be other kingdoms afterwards and these are to be divided—the arms, the legs, the feet, the toes—these represent many kingdoms. See with what clearness the Bible says: (Dan. 2:44).

THE GOD OF HEAVEN TO SET UP A KINGDOM THAT SHALL NEVER BE DESTROYED—TO STAND FOREVER.

“‘And in the days of these kings shall the god of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed.’ That is a strong sentence. I put the emphasis on that word, never. ‘A kingdom that shall never be destroyed,’ nor will this kingdom be left to other people, ‘but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever’.”

“‘Forasmuch as thou sawest (Daniel 2:45) that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure,’ said this splendid teacher, this farmer, this man of God, bearing and magnifying the holy Priesthood. “Let me read to you further,” he would say: (Rev. 14:6, 7).

ANGEL IN THE MIDST OF HEAVEN RESTORING THE GOSPEL.

“‘And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.’ That is the prophecy.”

Who in all the world should receive the angel? A philosopher, a statesman, a wise man, a scholar? No, a boy; place your trust in boys and they will not fail you. When the Father himself, the great Creator of the heavens and the earth, wanted to deliver an important message to the world, he called a boy. The angel flew through the midst of heaven; the angel delivered the message. Was it done by divine providence or by the wisdom of Joseph Smith, a boy—age fourteen?

THE TEMPLE AN EXPRESSION OF THE FAITH OF THE PEOPLE IN THE MESSAGE OF THE ANGEL.

Across the way, on this very block, stands that great temple of granite, dedicated to the Lord. On the top of it is a statue of the Angel Moroni, placed there in commemoration of the fulfilment of this clear-cut prophetic scripture.

The country teacher said: "The angel is to fly through the midst of heaven; the kingdom is to be established over which Jesus, the Son of God, the King of kings and the Lord of lords, is to preside."

WHERE IS THE KINGDOM TO BE BUILT THAT SHALL LAST FOREVER?—WAR TO CEASE.

"Where is it to be established? We look to the Bible for that information."

These are the words the teacher read. They were quoted yesterday by President Penrose: (Micah 4:1,2)

"But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, 'Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem;' and in these days, the last days, it continues: 'And he shall judge among many people, (Micah 4:3) and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more'."

THE GREAT TEACHER, A FARMER, BUT A MAN OF GOD.

This is the sort of lesson that one plain man (Samuel Orme), in a little "Mormon" village, (Tooele) long years ago, a farmer in ordinary farmer's clothing, taught to a group of bare-footed youngsters. God bless his memory. Let us remember that scripture that he emphasized so positively: (Matt. 24:12,13) "'Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold, but, he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved'."

Thus by the use of teacher-training methods this plain country gentleman with scripture quotations made clear to us, his students, the whole plan of the apostasy and the modern gospel restoration.

God bless our teachers. Bless the parents who by study and prayerful efforts prepare themselves to teach their children. Bless the class teachers, the visiting teachers, and those who teach from the pulpit, that all may by reasonable effort, and the inspiration to which they are entitled become effective teachers and leaders of men, I humbly pray, through Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

Within the last year a distinguished citizen of this country, prompted, undoubtedly, by his great love for humanity, offered one hundred thousand dollars as a prize to anyone who would submit a plan that would produce world peace.

THE WORLD AND ITS PEACE PROBLEMS

Since that offer was made, I have thought upon it many times, and have asked, What have we to do with a proposition of that character? What have we to do with the world and its peace problems? And there has come to me in the contemplation of this subject the burning conviction that we have much to do with the world and its affairs, not because of ambition which we have to become a world power, but because of the appointment of the Lord unto this people. We cannot separate ourselves from the world and its affairs. I read from the first section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants these words from the Lord himself, to the Church:

"Wherefore, I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments;

"And also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets—

"The weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh—

"But that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world;

"That faith also might increase in the earth;

"That mine everlasting covenant might be established;

"That the fulness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.

"Behold, I am God and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding."

In this same connection, I wish to read a few verses from the 133rd section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, beginning with the 57th verse:

"And for this cause, that men might be made partakers of the glories which were to be revealed, the Lord sent forth the fulness of his gospel, his everlasting covenant, reasoning in plainness and simplicity—

"To prepare the weak for those things which are coming on the earth, and for the Lord's errand in the day when the weak shall confound the wise, and the little one become a strong nation, and two shall put their tens of thousands to flight.

"And by the weak things of the earth the Lord shall thrash the nations by the power of his Spirit.

"And for this cause these commandments were given; they were commanded to be kept from the world in the day that they were given, but now are to go forth unto all flesh—

"And this according to the mind and will of the Lord, who ruleth over all flesh.

"And unto him that repenteth and sanctifieth himself before the Lord shall be given eternal life.

"And upon them that hearken not to the voice of the Lord shall be fulfilled that which was written by the prophet Moses, that they should be cut off from among the people.

"And also that which was written by the prophet Malachi: For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

"Wherefore, this shall be the answer of the Lord unto them:

"In that day when I came unto mine own, no man among you received me, and you were driven out.

"When I called again there was none of you to answer; yet my arm was not shortened at all that I could not redeem, neither my power to deliver.

"Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea. I make the rivers a wilderness; their fish stink, and die for thirst.

"I clothe the heavens with blackness, and make sackcloth their covering.

"And this shall ye have of my hand—ye shall lie down in sorrow.

"Behold, and lo, there are none to deliver you; for ye obey not my voice when I called to you out of the heavens; ye believed not my servants, and when they were sent unto you ye received them not.

"Wherefore, they sealed up the testimony and bound up the law, and ye were delivered over unto darkness."

THREE SPECIFIC PURPOSES OF THE CHURCH

These scriptures leave upon the Church a binding obligation to the world. Ninety-four years ago today there came into existence the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, organized for three specific purposes.

PROCLAIMING THE GOSPEL TO THE WORLD

One to proclaim to the world the restoration of the everlasting gospel, in the hour of God's judgment, referred to in the Scriptures quoted by the brethren today, and that warning was also to be accompanied with the generous offer of our heavenly Father providing means of escape for all men.

THE SALVATION OF THE DEAD

Another great obligation that is upon the Church is to provide, in the way the Lord has given, through his holy temples, in the exercise of the authority of the holy Priesthood, the means, the way, whereby even those who are dead may be with us partakers in these glorious blessings vicariously performed for and in their behalf, by men in the flesh.

PERFECTING THE LIVES OF MEMBERS

Then the other great task is purifying and perfecting the lives of the members of the Church, and building them up in preparation to be the people worthy of the King of kings when he shall come.

AS TO PROCLAIMING THE GOSPEL

I wish, with all earnestness, my brethren and sisters to direct your attention to the first obligation, the obligation of carrying the gospel to the world. I conceive our heavenly Father as deeply interested in all these, his children, but it was his way to commune with them through his chosen servant, the Prophet Joseph Smith. Knowing the calamity which was to come, and out of consideration for his children, he sent the warning voice, the message that was to be delivered by the angel whom John saw flying through the midst of heaven with the everlasting gospel for Earth's children crying: Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. That is the message the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is under obligation to carry to all the world. And as I have observed, the Lord gave, in connection with this warning, the fulness of the Everlasting Gospel, as the means of saving the world from the perils that were to come. I rejoice that so far as this obligation is concerned, we have been performing our duty acceptably, I believe, before the Lord, and yet the task is not completed. We have acted as if we were on serious business. We have not been indifferent towards the world, nor the delivery of this message. We believe that we have a vital message for all men. We know it, and we have acted as men who did believe it. From the time the first elders of the Church left their homes to begin this task, when their families and they were outcasts, when chills and fever were raging, the men themselves were sick and had to be lifted up into the wagon, and as they were about to leave their loved ones, who were sick and afflicted and sorrowing, abiding in poor little hovels, temporary quarters, these exiles, gave three cheers for Zion, to raise their drooping spirits, and left, making these sacrifices, to cross the water to carry this message to the peoples of the old world, which the Lord has required of the Church. There have followed in their wake thousands of men and hundreds of women, and never a dearth of missionaries. We have never seen a time when we could not supply, generously, those needed to discharge this obligation to the world.

NOTHING EVER DETERRED THE ELDERS FROM THIS DUTY

In the time when gold was discovered in California, and the whole world was interested and thousands were coming westward to seek their fortunes, I suppose it was a matter of great surprise to the gold seeker to meet companies of "Mormon" missionaries going away from the gold, pushing their little hand-carts, with their few earthly belongings, to preach the gospel to the peoples of the old world. There has never been anything that has deterred the men of this Church from performing this sacred obligation. When I think of it, however, and recognize the fact that there are yet nations that have not heard the Gospel, and the great war through which we have passed seems to me to have prepared in many places the way for delivering the message, I am concerned that we shall fulfil our obligation before the Lord, within the times he would like to have us do it; and, therefore, we are calling for more help. Great as our sacrifices and service have been, the labor is not yet completed, and it must go forward; we cannot stop now.

MORE EFFORT ASKED IN THIS LINE

We are asking that there shall be more cooperation on the part of the Church members in helping to discharge this obligation. It is not the duty and task of the man who happens to have a son, to pay his way and to bear the whole burden. Of course he will have to make a sacrifice, the sacrifice of his son's time, and means to maintain him, but the burden of keeping these representatives in the field rests upon every members of the Church, and so there has been apportioned among the wards a certain number that each ward should have in the missionary field, and it is every man's duty, in the ward, to see that his representatives are in the field. It ought to be indeed a matter of regret, and I was going to say shame to any ward that would allow the representatives from that ward to come home because perchance their parents have exhausted their means and cannot go any further. The wards should rally to the help of their representatives and keep them in the missionary field, discharging the obligation that rests upon all of us.

HOW FUNDS MAY BE OBTAINED FOR THIS PURPOSE

Again, it is splendid to have missionary farewell parties. Sometimes, however, we have a very successful missionary party, a large sum is realized, but the missionary is to go to some nearby mission.

Then the next missionary farewell party is for one who is going to South Africa, or to Germany or elsewhere at a distance, and if it happens to be an unfavorable night, a small amount of money is contributed, not nearly sufficient to take him to his field of labor. We feel that the practice adopted by some stakes would be splendid if carried out elsewhere. Have your missionary farewell parties contribute liberally. Let the means, however, go into a fund in the ward from which the fare of your missionary to his field of labor, be it long or be it short, shall be paid, as the Church does in returning them, and let that fund be built up by the contributions of those who have never performed missionary service. There are men who could not go because of their own business affairs, or because of physical disabilities. It would be a splendid thing for every such man to give five dollars, ten dollars, fifteen dollars, or twenty-five dollars or more a month for two years to such a fund, from which these, our representatives, might be sent into the field and assist those in need to remain; for there are hundreds of young men in the Church today anxious to go, but their finances will not enable them to fully take care of themselves.

THE GOSPEL THE WORLD'S HOPE

By a united effort and cooperative spirit we may continue this work acceptably to the Church and before the Lord. I feel earnest about it because I recognize that it is the world's hope. I recognize that there is no salvation for this generation except through the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I recognize that the Lord has required it at our hands, and that it has to be done and done speedily. The time may not be so definitely fixed that we know exactly how long it shall be, but it has to be done in the period of time known as the "times of the Gentiles." It will not last forever; the time will come when the Gentiles will close their doors and no longer wish the elders of this Church, when the wheat has been gathered. I expect to see that time, but when it does come I want our missionaries to be there in force, as a witness before God and all men that we have acquitted ourselves honorably and acceptably to the Lord, and that we are free from the responsibility that has been upon us, and that the obligation has been fully discharged. I believe that our heavenly Father is very much like an earthly father in some respects.

HOW CAN THE CHILDREN OF GOD BE SAVED?

What can an earthly father do to save his disobedient boy or girl? He can plead with him, he can point out the way of danger and the path of safety, just as our heavenly Father, seeing the course and the tendency of this generation, leading towards sorrow and distress, wanted to save men, and he gave the warning and the way to save them. So an earthly father can plead with his son or daughter, point out the danger, and the way of safety. He can say: "My boy, the course you are taking is going to lead you to bonds and imprisonment, to sorrow and to distress. Turn away from it. But, here is the path that will lead you to happiness, to success, to virtue, to prosperity. Take this path, my son." When a father has done that, he has nearly reached his limit. If his son takes the wrong course, wilfully disobeying his father and mother, that father cannot save his boy. The boy comes to bonds and imprisonment, as many are today doing, to pay the penalty of their transgressions, with their own lives, or a life sentence. There are those who would give their lives to save these boys, but they cannot veto the sentence, they cannot set it aside; the law must have its way. Our heavenly Father can plead with his sons and his daughters, to abandon the course they are taking. He can point out the dangers, and he has always done that, whether it was in the days of Noah or now, it has been the same, he has had the same attitude towards his children, pointing out the danger, pleading with them to turn away from that danger, and pointing the path of safety and of success. But if men disregard it, even God cannot save them, because he is limited. He must himself obey law. He cannot save his sons and his daughters, only inasmuch as they repent. We have spoken about the time when Satan shall be bound, and will have no more power over the hearts of the children of men. How will he be bound? When all men turn away from him and cease to follow after him, so far as they are concerned, he will be bound. But do you know that we can bind the Lord also by our wickedness? By our own rebellion, we tie his hands, we make him helpless to save us, and he cannot do it except men will repent. That being true, recognizing that the children of men are in peril and are in danger, and the only hope—is in the hands of this people, and it is that which is known as the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Ought we not to be active, ought we not to be anxious to bring to them the glad news that has brought us peace and salvation?

RESULTS OF THE REJECTION OF THE GOSPEL

I bear witness to you that there will be, following the rejection of the testimony of the servants of the Lord, new witnesses raised up by the Lord—he himself has spoken of it—they shall be the thunder, the lightning, the earthquake, the perils by land and by sea, famine, plagues, and distress that shall naturally come. As you sow, so shall you reap. We do not want to have the world reap that kind of harvest. I have no delight in it, for I love the souls of the children of men.

OUR OFFERING TO PREVENT SUCH RESULTS

How can I help it? Thirteen years of my life have been spent in the mission field. How could I give that time for men without loving them? I do love them; yet I recognize that my love for them cannot save them. God's love for them cannot save them except they repent. Jesus himself, with all the love he had for the children of men, upon the Mount of Olives, wept over Jerusalem and said: "Oh, that thou wouldst have received the message. How I would have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens." But they would not. So, my brethren and sisters, I speak of our offering to the world with some degree of pride. If one hundred thousand dollars has been offered by one of our distinguished citizens in this country to produce a plan for world peace, we have offered the services of more than sixty thousand missionaries, and I have estimated, at a reasonable figure, the probable value of their time, and the money sent to them in the field and to take them there and bring them back, and this little handful of people have contributed, to bring peace to the world, more than two hundred millions of dollars in time, service and money. That is our offering, and we have not stopped offering yet. We are on serious business. We recognize that this is a stupendous task, for a little handful of people to perform, yet we have given our time and service freely, out of the love we have for the souls of the children of men.

THE GOSPEL IS THE MESSAGE OF PEACE TO THE WORLD

But we know as we know that we live, that this is the message of peace for this world. Measures, such as offered in the plans of men to bring peace to the world, may be good, they are undoubtedly steps toward the end, but I say to you, there is no plan to settle the world's troubles, only as it is found in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; and when men receive it and repent and are baptized and come under the influence of the Holy Ghost, and he becomes the common teacher of all men, he will never teach them to go to war with one another, but he will soften their hearts, take hatred out of their souls, and the spirit of repentance shall come, and love for their fellowmen shall abide. All the plans of men cannot duplicate this system of our God.

OUR MISSION TO WIN THE WORLD FOR CHRIST

I have no fear for schism and division of this Church, over the questions on doctrine that are arising in other churches. Or whether modernism or fundamentalism shall ever be a question among us—fundamental things in this Church have clearly been established from the beginning. And we have continuous revelation that will settle all such questions. We are founded upon the truth, that God lives, a real being, our Father, that Jesus Christ is his Son, the Only Begotten in the flesh, the Firstborn in the spirit, the literal Son of God, and the only Savior of mankind. I know it as well as I know that I live; you know it; and we are to tell the world of it and try to win the world for Christ. Oh, that we could tell all men! Oh, that these amplifiers could carry today the message to the ears of all flesh, that God has spoken, and in an age of the world's dire peril, he has extended his helping hand to save them, and if they will but repent and receive the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, they shall find salvation here and hereafter. May that message be carried forward and reach all flesh, and blessing and honor shall be upon every man and every woman who thus contributes to this noble world cause. May it eventually prevail, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints."

CLERK OF GENERAL CONFERENCE

Edward H. Anderson

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I will announce that the auditors have made the usual report, and reported that they found the books and accounts, and everything in the Bishop's Office and the Trustee-in-Trust's in perfect order.

The Church Stenographer, Brother Frank W. Otterstrom, handed me the following, which appeared in last Sunday's issue of the New York Times, being a statement made in 1911 by Dr. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard University:

"How to live long—Go to Church. Keep a clean heart and a good conscience. Give your mind exercise as well as your body—really think. Exercise regularly, eat in moderation, take a full allowance of sleep. Avoid indulgence in luxuries and the habitual use of any drug whatsoever—not only of alcohol, but tobacco, tea and coffee."

In 1833, the Lord told us, in a much more substantial way than President Eliot, to refrain from all those things. Among other things, my brethren and sisters, keep the Word of Wisdom.

I am very pleased to announce that Brother George Albert Smith is with us this afternoon on the stand, but it is scarcely considered wisdom for him to attempt to address this vast congregation.

FOR THE SUFFERERS IN EUROPE

There was a special drive made during the past season for the suffering people in Europe; and in addition, there was a drive made for clothes, and we have been able to send four carloads of clothing to Europe. The railroad and steamship companies have furnished us transportation for these clothes, practically free of charge, for which we are grateful indeed. It has been estimated that the cash received, $12,500 of which went to the Near East organization, and the clothing, would amount, in round numbers, to fully $100,000. Sixty and odd thousand dollars was the estimate placed upon the clothing sent. We have received word from our European missions that this clothing was very good indeed, that they were surprised at the high quality of the clothing that was delivered. There were extensive repairs made on the shoes that were given, which made them very much more acceptable. This assistance has been rendered to the Netherlands and Germany, to the Armenians, and also the Near East, as stated, and some assistance also to Great Britain.

PROGRESS AND INCREASE IN MANY CHURCH ACTIVITIES

There has been a substantial increase in the attendance at our sacrament meetings during the past year. There has been better ward-teaching and an increase in the number of families visited monthly; statistics show an increase in our tithes, a large increase in the number of tithe-payers, and a splendid record of the stake and ward officers in the payment of tithes, for which we are grateful.

An extensive building program is being carried out in many of the stakes of Zion. New meeting-houses are being erected and the people are very liberal in their donations for the same.

In the conservation of life, the records show a marked decrease in the deaths of children under five years of age, showing that better methods are being adopted all through the state to prevent our little ones from passing away in their infancy.

For the first time, more people have removed to the missions of the Church from the stakes of Zion than have been received from the missions. A splendid work is being done, as I announced here at the opening of our conference, by the missionaries in every part of the world.

It is estimated that there have been 1200 converts to the Church as a result of our home missionary work in the various stakes of Zion.

The work of increasing the accommodations in the Salt Lake temple has been completed, and has proved a great convenience to those attending this temple. The facilities have been very greatly enlarged and are highly appreciated by those who are working in that temple.

The Manti temple has been thoroughly overhauled and renovated.

The frame-work of the Arizona temple is now completed and the terra-cotta is being delivered. The building is to be covered with terra-cotta—the same general style of covering as the Hotel Utah. The walls will be completed within a few months.

CONDITION IN THE MISSIONS

There is a marked improvement in the conditions for missionary work in Great Britain. The Netherlands mission is very prosperous, having very many investigators. A French mission has just been created, comprising the French people in the devastated regions of France, the French-speaking people of Belgium, and the French-speaking people of Switzerland.

In the Scandinavian missions we are still having difficulty in getting people into Sweden. I regret that the present condition is altogether different from what it was in the days of King Oscar. It fell to my happy lot, with Brother Alex Nibley, whom I see here, and some of my friends, to have the privilege of calling on King Oscar on the 4th day of July, many years ago. With characteristic American assurance, I presented myself at the king's palace and requested an interview and the man who came to the door looked at me as if he thought I was crazy, not to be properly presented through the minister plenipotentiary. I wrote a letter of introduction to his majesty and enclosed a letter from Governor Heber M. Wells of the state of Utah, told him that day, July 4th, was the day that we Americans celebrate, and asked for an audience; and added that I knew that I ought to be presented in proper order, that I had letters from the Utah senators to our minister; but, the day being the 4th of July, we hoped that he would waive all of the customary formalities necessary to see a king. And he very kindly consented, stepped out of the palace, and greeted us; and after learning that only two or three in our party understood the Swedish language, he immediately changed to faultless English, perfect English. He was a magnificent specimen of humanity, standing over six feet high. He made this remark to me: "Mr. Grant, I have sent my personal representatives, unknown to the people, to nearly every state in the Union of the United States, to find out how my former subjects are getting along, how they are prospering; and in no other state in the Union are the former subjects of Sweden and Norway more contented, more prosperous and happier than in Utah; and, as long as I am king of Norway and Sweden, your people shall have religious liberty, notwithstanding all the priests and religious denominations are against you." I wish he was still alive.

An extensive building program is now in operation in many of the missions of the United States. Meeting houses of a substantial character have been erected in some of the missions—in far off New Zealand, in Australia, and in some other places. We are grateful for the very excellent progress that we are making all over the world in our missionary work.

WORK OF THE M. I. A. SCOUTS

Some remarks have been made here, telling of the good opinion that people have of us today, in comparison with what it used to be. It fell to my lot to be at a Boy Scout gathering at the West-side High school, where representatives from this section of the country were present. President Moore, the head of the great World's Fair at San Francisco, was one of these men, Stewart French was another, and other influential national representatives were there. One of the men present upon that occasion was George J. Fisher, who is the second in command of the Boy Scouts of America. The man in charge, the head man, Mr. West, was with us in this building about a year ago, and he delivered a magnificent address and paid splendid compliments to our people. He remarked to me that it was a great pleasure to him to have nominated Oscar A. Kirkham to have charge of the Boy Scouts who went to Europe—a great compliment, I feel to the American people. Oscar A. Kirkham has received a letter from Dr. George J. Fisher, which I think every Latter-day Saint would like to hear read. Every Latter-day Saint ought to have read it, because, in every Latter-day Saint home there ought to be the Improvement Era. But, for fear there is not one in every home of those who are here, I will read this from the March number of the Improvement Era:

"It was my pleasure recently to meet the representatives of the Boy Scout movement in Utah and to observe Scouting in action.

"I was deeply impressed not only with the extent to which the boys of Utah had been reached, but with the quality of the program of Scouting which was being conducted.

"Utah excels in Scouting. In Salt Lake City and in Logan, the headquarters of two Councils of the State, I witnessed actual demonstrations by the boys themselves.

"I was profoundly moved and greatly inspired by what I saw. Utah excels in the number of boys reached in proportion to the population. In many communities practically all of the boys available are scouts. There are more boys of advanced rank and a greater percentage of Eagle scouts than in any other section of America.

"Scouting reaches the boys not only in the large centers of the state, but in the remotest villages.

"So well is scouting administered that the boys themselves manage much of their activities under wise adult guidance.

"I saw a great rally directed entirely by scouts in Salt Lake City. The dispatch, precision, efficiency and spirit with which they conducted the affair was worthy of high praise. I have never seen it excelled.

"Scouting is raising up a fine breed of boys in Utah. It is giving them splendid executive training that will fit them for effective leadership in the affairs of state in the years immediately ahead.

"Scouting is a course in the practice of patriotism. It is developing patriots in Utah, yes, boys who will be felt in the public and private life of the nation.

"That state is a great state which gives to its youth its first attention. Utah excels in that regard.

"The secret of it all is that splendid, high motivated men are giving themselves unselfishly to the boys of the state. This is the way to success and real achievement.

"These men are taking serious training for their tasks. I associated for part of two days with almost a hundred of them in training at the State Agricultural College at Logan. They came from the remotest parts of the state and of nearby states. It was an inspiration.

"These men will determine the standards of boy life in the state. It is a noble enterprise, a worthy and commendable service. All praise to them.

"These scouts in the state are catching and demonstrating the spirit of Scouting. It is a great spiritual crusade. They are living the Scout Oath and Laws. They are practicing the 'daily good turn.'

"Scouting is reaching all boys: poor boys as well as those who are more favored. Utah is setting standards for the whole country. Utah is repeating history. Just as she developed the early scouts, the great heroes of pioneer days, so now she is raising up boy scouts, caught by the same spirit of enterprise, by the same spirit of adventure. It is the pioneer spirit, the holy crusade of olden days applied in practical, yet romantic fashion to the youth of this later age.

"The 'Mormon' Church is the largest factor in this splendid achievement. She it is that is furnishing men and vision and ideals to the young men throughout the state, and they as scoutmasters in the great majority are inspiring the youth of the state to become good scouts. Splendid co-operation is given by other religious agencies in this work.

"And for this good service we are deeply grateful. Scouting is marching on in Utah, an excellent example to all the nation."

PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG'S ADMONITION SEVENTY-ONE YEARS AGO APPLIES TODAY

October 6 to 9, 1853: Words of President Brigham Young:

"We will now bring our conference to a close. I wish the Latter-day Saints to hearken to the counsel they receive from time to time, and especially to the counsel I will now give to all Latter-day Saints in this house, in the valleys of the mountains, and to all who are scattered among the nations of the earth. I ask one thing at your hands, and that is, to live your religion day by day.

"The religion we profess is the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ; a religion of revelation, ministering of angels, and the power of God on the people through the ordinances of God. My counsel is, to live their religion. If they do, they will live watchfully, prayerfully, humbly; and their hearts will be filled with compassion one towards another, and they will seek to do good all the days of their lives; and when an evil is presented to them they will shun that evil, and will cleave to that which is right before the Lord; otherwise they will bring disgrace upon themselves, and dishonor their religion. This is my counsel to all Saints, and I wish you to carry it from this conference to your neighbors, and spread it abroad, throughout all the churches of the Saints, upon the face of the whole earth;—Live the religion you profess!"

Brother Junius F. Wells was indexing some of the Journals of Discourses and ran across the above and handed it to me; and I felt I would like to read it here.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY

I am very happy to inform the Latter-day Saints that there has been a very wonderful and remarkable "come-back" in the sugar industry of this inter-mountain country. Instead of the various sugar factories being in debt many, many millions of dollars of money to the banks in New York and Chicago, with large stocks of sugar on hand and no sale for it, there is now a demand for sugar throughout the entire country; and almost without exception, if not without exception, (I am not thoroughly posted) the companies are not in debt to bankers who were unwilling three years ago, without additional capital being invested, to renew obligations that they held. Today, most if not all of the companies are free from bank obligations in the East and the industry has come back in a splendid way; for which we are grateful. The farmers are giving loyal support and raising larger quantities of beets, which means an increased product, which means an increase of prosperity to this intermountain country.

GIVE LOYAL SUPPORT TO HOME INSTITUTIONS

From my earliest recollection, I have heard Brigham Young and all of his successors preach to the people and beg them to support and sustain all of the various industries that were established throughout this inter-mountain country; and I appeal to the Latter-day Saints today, to all who are here present, to carry the message to the people throughout the entire Church—to support the institutions of our state, to be loyal to those institutions through which employment can be given to the people, and from which you can secure articles that are manufactured here at home. Give them the preference; help to build up our country; sustain this inter-mountain country. We need support for everything that is started in the nature of a manufacturing institution in this country. We are so far away from the centers of consumption for many of our products that railroad freight charges prevent us exporting many goods which, but for the long distance to the markets, we could do. Therefore, let us be loyal to our institutions here at home.

BUILDING OF THE ARIZONA TEMPLE PROGRESSING

I am pleased to inform you that it has fallen to my lot, during the past six months, to visit Arizona and to see the progress that is being made there upon our temple; and I am sure that when that building is completed we shall all be proud of it. I am sure that it will be one more monument testifying to the faith and the loyalty of the Latter-day Saints to the work of the Lord and to the message that has come to us in our day—to labor for the redemption of our dead. I am sure that it will be a credit to our people that will be recognized by those not of our faith, in seeing one more splendid monument of the kind and this in the state of Arizona.

INCREASED TESTIMONY AND FRESH INSPIRATION FROM READING THE BOOK OF MORMON

I have rejoiced during the past six or seven weeks in reading carefully through, at the rate of about ten pages a day, with a prayerful heart, the Book of Mormon. I do not think that I have ever before enjoyed that book so much. I do not think the wonderful testimonies contained in it regarding the divine mission of the Savior, have ever made a more profound impression upon my heart and soul than they have made this last time that I have read the Book of Mormon. I remember, and have often spoken of the fact of reading it in my youthful days, and how there came into my heart an abiding testimony that that book was true, that it was in very deed exactly what it purports to be—the sacred history of the forefathers of the American Indian. I could not as a child or as a young man, comprehend and understand as fully as today the splendid discourses regarding the divine mission of the Savior. His wonderful teachings to the people upon this continent, the wonderful inspired teachings of Alma and Abinadi and many others, as contained in that book. But I am thankful beyond expression that I did read the book in my boyhood days and that the assurance came into my heart that it was in very deed the truth, and that I fell in love with the character of Nephi. More than any other mortal man that we have any record of in the Bible, the Old, or the New Testaments, or in the Book of Mormon, more, I believe, than the influence of my friends and associates with whom I have lived, Nephi has made an impression upon my heart and my soul and has been one of the guiding stars of my life—a man who endeavored upon all occasions never to become discouraged or disheartened, never to complain; but who endeavored to the full extent of his ability to carry out his own wonderful words spoken to his father—

"I will go and do the things which the Lord hath commanded, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commanded them."

That remarkable declaration, exemplified through his entire life, has stayed with me, I am sure, now for fully fifty long years; and I rejoice in the fact of the impression that was made upon my heart and soul by that statement. I also rejoice in his immediately exemplifying the statement that he would do what the Lord required. What had the Lord required? The Lord, through Lehi, his father, had received a dream to the effect that his sons were to return to Jerusalem and secure the brass plates upon which some of the ancient scriptures and the genealogy of the forefathers of Nephi were recorded. And his brethren were complaining, when he made that impressive announcement that he would go and do the thing which the Lord had required.

They made a failure of their first attempt, and his brothers desired to return to their father in the wilderness, but Nephi said:

"We will not go down unto our father in the wilderness until we have accomplished the thing which the Lord hath commanded us."

And they went up again to Jerusalem, and they gathered their riches and they offered them to Laban for the record. Instead of making the exchange, Laban sent his servants to kill them, and he stole their wealth. Nephi's brothers then commenced beating him, and an angel of the Lord appeared and told them to go up again unto Jerusalem and the Lord would deliver Laban into their hands, and they would obtain the plates.

No sooner had the angel disappeared than these men, lacking in faith—and men that do not keep the commandments of the Lord are always lacking in faith and always will be lacking in faith, and always will find fault; and those who are perpetually seeking for some great and wonderful manifestation will never amount to very much in the Church; while those who keep the commandments of God never find fault, they have faith, they believe—these brothers of Nephi said:

"How is it possible that the Lord will deliver Laban into our hands? Behold he is a mighty man, and he can command fifty, yea, even he can slay fifty; then why not us?" And the answer of Nephi was: "Let us be faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord; for behold he is mightier than all the earth, then why not mightier than Laban and his fifty, yea, or even than his tens of thousands?"

Many men say: "If I could only see an angel, if I could only hear an angel proclaim something, that would cause me to be faithful all the days of my life!" It had no effect upon these men that were not serving the Lord, and it would have no effect today.

As I say, I rejoice in the increased testimony that has come into my heart and soul regarding the divinity of the Book of Mormon, in the reading that I have just completed while on my recent trip to the south.

THE TERRIBLE CATASTROPHE AT CASTLE GATE

We have had one of the most terrible catastrophies in the history of the state of Utah, on which occasion one hundred seventy-three, as I remember it, lives were lost in the Castle Gate coal mine explosion. It fell to my lot, with Elder Richard R. Lyman and others, to visit Castle Gate and to see the effects of that terrible calamity there. The Governor of the state and others have inaugurated a drive for the benefit of the families that have been left destitute of a provider. I hope and pray that in every hamlet, and in every home there will be a disposition to contribute something toward this great drive for the benefit of the families of the men who were killed in that great disaster. There is nothing truer than the statement in ancient writ that "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and I say that the greater blessing will come to those who give than to those who are not willing to give in this case. Let us do our part, as we have ever done our part in all of the various calls that have been made by our nation in times of trouble and by those in distress. I am sure that the appeal will not be made in vain. The Church has been solicited to assist and we have contributed $2,500 of the tithing funds for this purpose, which was somewhat more than the request made by the chairman who called upon us.

THE SAINTS LOVE THE GOSPEL, AS WITNESS THE CONFERENCE ATTENDANCE

I have been very pleased indeed, my brethren and sisters, with the wonderful attendance at our conference. We have never had anything like it within my recollection, nothing to compare with the wonderful outpouring of the people at these conference meetings. To have our week-day meetings so crowded in this tabernacle that many have had to stand up is a new experience, and it shows to me that the Latter-day Saints are awake, that they are alive, that they have a love of the gospel, that they are anxious to come here to partake of the spirit of our conferences, that spirit which has been with the Latter-day Saints, in this building, from the very day it was first opened. It has fallen to my lot, from my childhood days until now, excepting when I have been absent from the state upon foreign missions, to attend conferences in this building twice a year, and I have never come into this building and been disappointed; I have never come here but what I have been benefited and fed with the bread of life and built up in the faith, and strengthened in my knowledge and testimony regarding the divinity of the work in which we as Latter-day Saints are engaged.

PRAYER FOR THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

I pray that the Lord will bless the President of the United States of America and his cabinet, and that he will vindicate the President and every honest member of his cabinet; and I believe that there are honest, upright, God-fearing, patriotic men in the cabinet of President Coolidge. I believe he is a man worthy of the blessings of Almighty God. That is my opinion of the President of the United States. I believe that he has the welfare of the people of this great country at heart.

BLESSINGS ON ALL ISRAEL, AT HOME AND ABROAD

I pray that the Lord will bless each and everyone of the Latter-day Saints throughout all the stakes of Zion, from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south. I pray that he will bless the Saints all over the wide world, in all the different missions, that they may grow and increase in the light and the knowledge and the testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I bear my witness to you here today that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, the Redeemer of mankind, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the true and the living God, and that each man, woman and child who lives the gospel of Jesus Christ shall find life eternal in the presence of our heavenly Father.

I pray for the blessings of the Lord to abide with all Israel, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

The choir sang, "Then shall your light shine."

Elder Orson F. Whitney, of the Council of the Twelve, offered the benediction, and the conference adjourned for six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing, assisted by Professor B. Cecil Gates. Edward P. Kimball played the accompaniments, interludes, etc. on the great organ, assisted by Tracy Y. Cannon. Professor J. J. McClellan was absent on account of illness.

Stenographic reports of the discourses were made in the tabernacle by Franklin W. Otterstrom, assisted by Joseph Anderson; and in the assembly hall by Frederick E. Barker.

EDWARD H. ANDERSON, clerk of the conference.

Ninety-Fifth Semi-Annual Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

FIRST DAY

The 95th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, October 3, 1924.

President Heber J. Grant presided and announced the opening of the Conference at 10 o'clock a. m.

GENERAL AUTHORITIES OF THE CHURCH PRESENT

Of the First Presidency: Heber J. Grant, Anthony W. Ivins, Charles W. Penrose was absent owing to illness, but through the radio heard the proceedings, and enjoyed the conference very much.

Of the Council of the Twelve: Rudger Clawson, Reed Smoot, George Albert Smith, George F. Richards, Orson F. Whitney*, Joseph Fielding Smith, James E. Talmage, Stephen L. Richards, Melvin J. Ballard, John A. Widtsoe.

Presiding Patriarch: Hyrum G. Smith.

Of the First Council of Seventy: Seymour B. Young, B. H. Roberts, J. Golden Kimball, Rulon S. Wells, Joseph W. McMurrin, Charles H. Hart.

Of the Presiding Bishopric: Charles W. Nibley, David A. Smith, John Wells.

OFFICERS AND OTHER AUTHORITIES PRESENT

Church Historian and Recorder: Joseph Fielding Smith, and the following assistants, Andrew Jensen, B. H. Roberts, A. William Lund, and Junius F. Wells.

Presidents of Stakes were well represented from the ninety-two stakes of Zion, with their counselors; patriarchs, bishops of wards

*David O. McKay, absent presiding over the European Mission.

Richard R. Lyman, absent in the interest of government service, as Consulting Engineer in the Columbia Basin Irrigation Project.

Levi Edgar Young, absent at Columbia University.

and their counselors, and numerous other prominent officers representing the quorums of the Priesthood, also general, stake, and ward officers of the auxiliary organizations of the Church.

Mission Presidents as follows were in attendance: B. H. Roberts, Eastern States; John H. Taylor, Northern States; Samuel O. Bennion, Central States; Charles A. Callis, Southern States; John M. Knight, Western States; Joseph W. McMurrin, California; Brigham S. Young, Northwestern States; Rey L. Pratt, Mexico; Joseph Quinney, Jr., Canada; and Benjamin Goddard, Bureau of Information, Temple Block, Salt Lake City.

The Tabernacle was filled to capacity and numbers were standing in the side aisles of the main floor and in the galleries.

The choir and congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints."

Elder Adam S. Bennion, superintendent of Church schools, offered the opening prayer.

A sacred solo, "Open the Temple Gates," was sung by Jessie Evans.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I rejoice again at having the opportunity of meeting with the Saints in General Conference. It is a very inspiring sight to see this large Tabernacle filled to overflowing, and people standing, at the first session.

THE RADIO

The exercises of today and throughout the conference are to be broadcasted; and it is estimated that in the neighborhood of a million people will be able to hear all that is said, provided they are listening in during the conference sessions. The radio is one of the most marvelous inventions man knows anything about. To have the voice carried for thousands of miles seems almost beyond comprehension.

LET US SERVE GOD WITH ALL MIGHT, MIND AND STRENGTH

I rejoice in the remarkable and wonderful growth of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in our day. Over a year before the Church was organized a short revelation was given through the Prophet Joseph, directed to his father. It reads as follows:

"Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.

"Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work;

"For behold the field is white already to harvest; and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perisheth not, but bringeth salvation to his soul;

"And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

"Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

"Ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

If there is any one thing more than another that I desire to impress upon the hearts of the Latter-day Saints it is that we should in very deed serve God with all our might, mind and strength, that we may keep pace with the progress of his work here upon the earth. This very audience here today, the immense auditorium filled to overflowing, testifies more eloquently than any language of mine regarding the growth of the Church of Jesus Christ. When I recall the revelations that were given to the Prophet Joseph prior to the organization of the Church foretelling the growth and the accomplishments of the work of God here upon the earth, it is one of many testimonies to me regarding the divinity of this work in which you and I are engaged.

OUTSTANDING EVENTS AND ACTIVITIES OF THE CHURCH IN THE PAST SIX MONTHS

I believe the Saints will be interested in knowing something of the progress in various ways that has taken place in the Church since we last assembled here. Within a few weeks after the April conference it fell to my lot to go East and to hold meetings in Denver, of the Western States mission, in Independence, Kansas City and St. Louis of the Central States mission, and later to visit Omaha in the Western States mission. I had the privilege of speaking in all of these places. Also meeting with and instructing our elders. I found a wonderful spirit of loyalty on the part of the Mission presidents, of the elders, and of the lady missionaries in all of these places. I rejoiced exceedingly in visiting with them. I came in contact with a number of influential men, some of whom attended our services. Several of them afterward expressed their pleasure in having heard something regarding our faith that was new to them. The great majority of mankind pay little or no attention to the message of the Latter-day Saints, but many pay a great deal of attention to the things of a detrimental character that are published against us. Today men of intelligence, men of thought, and men who are studying, in seeing the wonderful progress of the work of God here on the earth, are beginning to realize that there must be something good in it, considering the class of people that are attracted to it.

I had the pleasure of playing a game of golf in Kansas City, and learned that the title to part of the very ground upon which we were playing originally stood in the name of the Bishop of the "Mormon" Church. I also learned that a large proportion of Kansas City stands upon ground once owned by the Latter-day Saints. The title to much of it has never passed, and the only title people today have to a portion of that great city is by possessing the ground. In tracing the abstracts back they find that the title originally was in the name of the Bishop of the "Mormon" Church. We all remember with gratitude the wonderful courage and manhood of General Doniphan in saving the life of the Prophet Joseph. Part of our holdings in that section of the country—thousands of acres, as I remember it—was turned over to Doniphan as a fee for legal services. The price of those lands then was very insignificant, but I was assured that the very land turned over to General Doniphan is today worth more than ten millions of dollars.

After returning from visiting the Western and the Central States missions, in June, I went East and visited the Northern States mission, the Canadian mission and the Eastern States mission. I had the privilege for the first time of visiting Montreal, in Canada, and of attending one of the sessions of the Rotary Club in Toronto. The work in all of the missions I have visited since the last conference is progressing in a splendid way.

Since our last conference, President Anthony W. Ivins and Elder Richard R. Lyman have visited the Hawaiian Islands with members of their families. The work there is progressing splendidly. Our sugar plantations there are progressing more satisfactorily at the present time than for many years past.

New chapels are being erected in many of our missions. A site for a new chapel has been purchased on one of the principal streets in Washington, D. C., and we expect to erect a place of worship there that will be a credit to the Latter-day Saints, and worthy of that city of beautiful churches, wonderful public buildings, and palatial residences. We hope to have a building there that will be as much of a credit to us at Washington as our magnificent office building is to us here—not as expensive, of course, but in every respect worthy of the Church of Christ.

Brother James E. Talmage has been chosen to preside over the European mission. Elder David O. McKay will have been in that mission two years by the time he leaves it. Previous to his being called there, he and Brother Hugh J. Cannon spent a year in traveling around the world, visiting nearly all of the missions in the world. Therefore we felt it was only fair to him to allow him to return to his mountain home without staying the usual three years that the brethren spend in England.

We have sent considerable sums of money to the Norwegian and Danish missions for final payment on meetinghouses purchased years ago. We have purchased a fine large meetinghouse at Rotterdam. There has been erected a splendid meetinghouse at Honolulu; and others are now authorized in the Hawaiian Islands. We have secured a long lease of farming lands for the Tongan mission, not being able to purchase and get title there.

The baptisms in the missions during the past six months number 3,156, a very decided increase over the average in years past.

Two new stakes have been organized since our last conference, namely, the Grant stake, taken from the Granite stake, and the Minidoka stake, a part of the Blaine stake.

Twelve new wards have been organized during the past six months.

A large number of new meeting houses are being erected in Zion. I believe more building is going on at the present time in the various stakes of Zion than for many years past.

We have ordered a monument to be erected at the grave of Martin Harris, in Clarkston, Utah.

A new home is being provided for the Lamanites located near Cedar City, in order that they may be more comfortably situated.

Successful conventions of auxiliary organizations are in progress at the present time all over the Church.

Quite a number of seminary buildings have been erected by the Saints in various parts of the Church.

There is a large and increased attendance at the Brigham Young University and our other Church schools.

A very remarkable increase is noted in the attendance at all of our temples. The Manti temple has been overhauled, and extensive repairs made there, making it very much more comfortable and convenient than in the past. The repairs being made at the Salt Lake temple are now all completed. Rapid progress is being made in the erection of the Arizona temple.

We have decided to erect on this block a monument in honor of the Three Witnesses (perhaps we will include the Eight Witnesses), to be located in the rear of the statues of Presidents Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The design has not yet been decided upon; but we will endeavor to have something that will be as attractive and as creditable, and that will preach the wonderful message proclaimed in the Book of Mormon as effectively as the Sea Gull Monument preaches the wonderful deliverance wrought by the Lord in the days when the crickets threatened to destroy everything. Undoubtedly some of the inspirational passages of the Book of Mormon, also the fact that these three witnesses declare that an angel of God came down from heaven and laid before their eyes, that they beheld and saw the plates of the Book of Mormon, and the engravings thereon, and that the voice of the Lord commanded them that they should bear record of it, with other incidents that proclaim the divinity of the Book of Mormon, will be features of the monument.

We are pleased to note that there is an improvement in the support of our foreign newspapers. There are many faithful, diligent Latter-day Saints who, having embraced the Gospel in foreign lands at an advanced age, cannot read the English language, and it is a great comfort and blessing to them to have some of the sermons, messages, and news, regarding the work of God published in their own language. We bespeak for these papers the loyal patronage of those of foreign birth. Young men who have prospered here in the things of this world should be willing to assist in circulating at home and abroad the word of God through the papers published in the mother tongue of their parents.

We have been called upon during the past six months to part with one of our loyal stake presidents,—President Andrew Kimball. It fell to my lot to have the privilege of going to Thatcher, Arizona, and attending the funeral, at which there was a wonderful outpouring of the people, showing their respect and love for their president. It was a source of satisfaction to me to have the opportunity of paying a tribute of love and respect to him at the services.

We have to announce the death of Sister Elizabeth C. McCune, who, in connection with her husband, presented to the Church some years ago the magnificent McCune mansion on upper Main street, the name of which has been changed since the death of Sister McCune to The McCune School of Music and Art. We hope at no far distant date to have a portion of that building devoted to the fine arts in the form of beautiful paintings and sculpture. There are two magnificent pieces of sculpture there now, probably the finest in our state, which were presented with the mansion at the time it was given to us.

I believe this covers the activities of the past six months that I thought would be of interest to the people. Of course, you will realize that if I were to enter into detail regarding these activities I could occupy not only the entire time of this morning's session with interest to the Saints, but even longer.

On my way home after attending the funeral of Brother Kimball, in Arizona, I stopped for a few days in California, and the work in the California mission is progressing in a very favorable way.

THE DIVINITY OF JESUS CHRIST

There is one thing that I desire to refer to, and a part of one of the revelations that I desire to read. There are no revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants that have made such a profound impression upon my heart and my mind as the one known as The Vision, recorded in the 76th section, and the one known as Prayer and Prophecies, given in Liberty Jail, and to be found in the 121st section. I rejoice every time I read the wonderful testimony of the Prophet Joseph and Sidney Rigdon as contained in The Vision. When bishops over large churches in England announce that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God; that he was not divine, but merely a great moral teacher; when men who are ministers deny the divinity of Christ and are being tried for their lack of faith, I rejoice in reading the testimony of these two men, and never read it but my heart swells with gratitude to God:

"And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives!

"For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father—

"That by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

I rejoice that the Church of Jesus Christ is founded upon the first great vision that was enjoyed by the boy Joseph Smith over one hundred years ago. He declared that he saw two heavenly beings, whose glory and grandeur were beyond the power of man to describe and that one of them addressed him and pointed to the other and said: "This is my beloved Son, hear him." There cannot be any doubt in the heart of a Latter-day Saint regarding Jesus Christ being the Son of the Living God, because God himself introduced him to Joseph Smith. It is a fundamental truth of the Church of Jesus Christ in our day that Joseph Smith was and is and ever will be a prophet of the living God; and with Joseph Smith recognized as a prophet of God, and the testimony in our hearts of that fact, there will never be any schism, so to speak, in the Church of Christ. Any individual who does not acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, has no business to be associated with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. This Church is, as I read to you it should be, a marvelous work and a wonder. There is nothing like it in all the world, because Jesus Christ, the Son of God established it, and is the head of it; because Jesus Christ manifested himself to the Prophet and Oliver Cowdery, and to others; and because God, in answer to prayer, has given to people all over the wide world where the Gospel has gone, an individual knowledge and testimony regarding the divinity of the work in which we are engaged.

A PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSIVE COMPARISON

Never have I been more profoundly impressed with the power and blessing of God than I was when I visited Nauvoo upon my recent trip East. Three quarters of a century ago there were twenty thousand prosperous Latter-day Saints in that city, with a magnificent temple. Today there is not a single stone left of the temple where it was once erected, and the population has dwindled to about one thousand people. Men have told me that the site of the City of Nauvoo is one of the finest, if not the finest, to be found upon the great Mississippi river, yet to get there now you have to cross the Mississippi river in a little tub of a steamer, on the deck of which there are but five chairs, and as there happened to be six in our party one of us had to stand; and there are cities with thousands of inhabitants on the Mississippi and on the Missouri that have grown up since that was the great city of Illinois. When I contemplate all these things and then come home and gaze upon the Temple of God in the eastern part of this block; when I look at our office building, at the Utah Hotel, and at the magnificent bank buildings in our city; when I think of the prosperity of the Saints, with beautiful temples, not only in Utah, but in Canada and in the Hawaiian Islands, as well as one in course of construction in Arizona; when I think of all the accomplishments of the work of God, my language utterly fails me to speak in just praise of all that has been done. When I realize the condition of the place from which we were driven, the lack of prosperity and of success in that country, I thank God that we are located here in these mountains. I feel that the very persecutions and troubles through which we passed prepared us and educated us and strengthened us as a people for greater things. Perhaps the very finest residence, with one exception, to be found today in Nauvoo is the one erected by Erastus Snow. They told me that it was erected by Lorenzo Snow, but I have since been informed that the people there were mistaken, and that it was erected by Erastus Snow. One of the fine dwellings there was built with stones taken from the Temple Block.

I rejoice in the testimony of my own dear mother, also in the testimony of Aunt Emmeline B. Wells and scores of men and women who were present upon that memorable occasion, after the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph, when Sidney Rigdon endeavored to be appointed as guardian of the Church. I rejoice in the wonderful manifestation that was given to the people there, including my mother and other relatives of mine, when the mantle of Joseph Smith fell upon the Prophet Brigham Young, and he, Brigham, stood there and talked as with the voice of Joseph, his face being illumined and in appearance like unto the face of Joseph. The sheep knew the voice of the true shepherd. And from that day to this, of the hundreds who were present on that occasion, nearly every one has lived and died faithful and true to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, loyal supporters of the Prophet Brigham Young and his successors.

HOW TO EXERCISE THE POWER OF THE PRIESTHOOD

I desire to read part of the wonderful revelation given to the Prophet Joseph in Liberty Jail. Remember, though he was chained in that prison, the Lord Almighty could and did speak to him, and gave to him a revelation that I commend here today to every Latter-day Saint. I particularly commend it to every man presiding in the stakes and wards of Zion, and in the various missions throughout the world. If we exercise the power of the Priesthood of the living God as he tells us in this wonderful revelation to exercise it, then there never can be and there never will be any just complaint made against the Church of Jesus Christ, because of the use of the Priesthood that has been restored again to the earth. It is when men do not follow the teachings and the revelations given of God to us through his prophet that mistakes are made. This revelation declares that by incarcerating the Prophet Joseph men could not rob him of the inspiration of the Living God, which revealed to him these wonderful words in that prison. Starting with verse 33, I read:

"How long can rolling waters remain impure? What power shall stay the heavens? As well might man stretch forth his puny arm to stop the Missouri river in its decreed course, or to turn it up stream, as to hinder the Almighty from pouring down knowledge from heaven upon the heads of the Latter-day Saints.

"Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen. And why are they not chosen?

"Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson—

"That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness.

"That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, or vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man.

"Behold, ere he is aware, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks, to persecute the Saints, and to fight against God.

"We have learned by sad experience that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, they will immediately begin to exercise unrighteous dominion.

"Hence many are called, but few are chosen.

"No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned;

"By kindness, and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy, and without guile—

"Reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy;

"That he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death.

"Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

"The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever."

I feel that I cannot close my remarks with anything better than this wonderful revelation given to the Prophet of the living God.

GOD'S BLESSINGS INVOKED UPON THE CHURCH AND NATION

I pray God's blessings to be upon the Latter-day Saints all over the wide world. I pray for those who stand as the General Authorities of the Church. I pray for those who preside in the stakes and the wards and the branches, and in all parts of the Church, from Canada on the North to Mexico on the South, and for those who preside and labor in the various missions all over the wide world. I pray for the people of the world; not only for the Latter-day Saints, but I pray God's blessings upon every loyal, patriotic man and woman that is endeavoring to do right, and to uphold the laws of the countries where they reside. I pray God's blessings upon the President of these United States of America. I thank God for the loyalty and the patriotism of the Latter-day Saints. I thank God that we believe that the constitution of our country was given to us under the inspiration of the Living God, and that the Lord supported George Washington and the patriot fathers of this country. I pray that God will inspire us to continue loyal and true to him, to our country, and to its institutions; and that we may in very deed preach the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ by our acts; that, as we grow in years and increase in understanding, we may grow in the power and ability to live the Gospel, that our example of integrity, of honesty, of loyalty to God and country may inspire others to investigate the message of life and salvation.

CLOSING TESTIMONY

Before sitting down, I bear my testimony to you and to all the world that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind, the Creator of heaven and earth; that Joseph Smith was his prophet, the instrument in his hands of establishing again the Gospel of life and salvation. That we who have that knowledge may live the Gospel is my prayer, and I ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer and Savior. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

My brethren and sisters, I am very happy to have the privilege of again meeting with the Latter-day Saints in a General Conference. I did not have this privilege six months ago, and I have felt the loss which is sustained by every member of this Church who does not participate in the spirit and the exercises of these great gatherings.

A TESTIMONY OF JESUS

I bear witness to the testimony borne by President Grant this morning. I say with him that I know that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that Joseph Smith was the prophet of these latter days, called to restore the eternal gospel of Christ. I am happy in the possession of this truth; and I ask for nothing more than that the Lord may so help me to live, day by day throughout the years that may remain, that I may retain this testimony and be willing to bear it to all who may care to listen.

A REMARKABLE AGE OF THE WORLD

Yesterday morning, before I left my home, I picked up a paper which is circulated in this country by the hundreds of thousands of copies. I turned to the editorial page, and to my surprise saw a statement by the editor to the effect that what this great country needs today, these great United States of America, is a dose of Voltaire. I suppose he meant by that a dose of atheism. That statement has remained in my thoughts, because it seems to be another evidence of the fact that after these many centuries of light, of the gospel of Jesus Christ, many in the world, even among professed Christians, are unable or unwilling to accept the truth of the gospel, or the existence of God.

This is a marvelous age. It is clear to all who follow the events of the day, and who note the great steps of progress from month to month, that this is in many respects the most remarkable age that the world has known. The air above us, the seas, the solid earth, the whole physical universe, all seem unitedly to bow before man, to his acquired power over the natural forces of the universe. Today, man is able to do things that in days gone by were conceivably done only by God. Yet, as I read the editorial in this famous newspaper, an old thought came back to me, that the airship, the steamship, the telephone, the radio and all the other marvels of this age, are but as the clothing of the body, but as instruments to be used by man. By means of these great inventions and discoveries, great gifts of God to the people of these latter days, it is possible for the righteous man to accomplish righteousness more widely and more speedily, but it is equally true that by means of these great modern developments the wicked man may do wickedness much more easily and much more comprehensively than in the days gone by. The discoveries with which we conjure in this day have not touched the mainspring of human character, have not shaped or reshaped human conduct. Something deeper than material conquests relates itself to human conduct, to that manner of life, which in the end makes the world great or small, good or bad. A knowledge of God, and faith in his word have ever been the determining force in the making of the character of a man or a nation.

MAN HELPLESS WITHOUT GOD

If the world needs atheism, at this day, then the faith of this poor world of ours must concern itself entirely with man's own powers. Take God away from the earth and man has left only that which his own powers may produce, and he must become a worshiper of his own power. Centuries of human experience, and the events of every day, demonstrate the utter inadequacy of man's unaided power in winning human happiness. Life becomes full and rounded only as the forces beyond man are accepted and used by him. Man is helpless without God.

A GREAT INTELLECTUAL AND SPIRITUAL CONTROVERSY

Such thoughts have been brought home to us especially during the last twelve months by a great intellectual and spiritual controversy, among honest people, which has shaken this country, and which is spreading across the seas into other countries, the result of which will probably appear much more important when history is written than the great wars and political contentions of the day. The modernists who already have been discussed from this stand say that they believe in an Almighty God, but declare that they are unable to believe in the virgin birth of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. They declare themselves unable to accept as real the miracles of Christ as recorded in Holy Writ. They say that, above all things, they cannot believe that man after death may be brought into a life again, to live forever as a personal embodied being. These doubts are before them, as they say, because man is not able to understand how such things may be done.

These people, however good and sincere they may be, are engaged in an old pastime; they limit God and try to make him great only as man is great. They say in substance that God can do only that which man himself is able to do, or only that which can be understood by man. This limitation has been attempted before; it is not a new thing. It is surprising how, in this latter day, in this greatest civilization, we return, over and over, to such age-old controversies. I have no doubt that in the days of Adam men differed as do these modernists and others of today, with respect to the nature and character or the existence of God.

It seems curious to me that a man can say that he believes in a God who is the author of life, of the unfathomable mystery of life, and in the same breath can declare that he cannot believe that God is able to cause the immaculate conception of Jesus Christ. It is difficult for me to understand the mind of a man who believes in a God who has raised the bottom of the sea into mountains, and has made the mountain-tops into sea-bottoms, and yet cannot believe in the possibility of the miracles of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It is still more mysterious to me how, in this modern day, men may say that they believe in a God who has made this great earth out of eternal elements and indestructible forces, but that man, the sum of creation, the most marvelous product of God's handiwork, upon this earth, is a transitory being, to be laid down in the grave, and if he ever emerges, to be merged quiescently with the forces of the hereafter.

DANGEROUS TO LIMIT THE POWERS OF GOD

I am inclined to think, though I recognize that these seekers after truth are honest and desire to do the right thing in their seeking after truth—I always desire to give them credit for that—that there is no great difference between the modernist of today and the idol worshiper of the past. Heathen nations have set up a god to produce rain, and another to produce crops, and in a dry year of small harvests they have slapped the ears of both gods. It is dangerous to limit in our thinking the powers of God, to allow ourselves to say that God, the Maker of the heavens and the earth, the Founder of truth, is limited simply because we are limited in our understanding. It leads men to unbelief and atheism.

SOMETHING, HOWEVER, TO BE SAID FOR THE MODERNIST

Yet, brethren and sisters, I would like to say that there is something to be said for the modernist, because, after all, he has broken away from the unacceptable traditions of the past. What has the fundamentalist, his brother, to give him? Just a short time ago I met two priests of a church well known in the world, who explained to me at great length that God is a person, yes, but a person who fills the whole universe in person, and who, at the same time, in person complete and whole, is in every human heart. That is beyond my understanding. This summer I met a minister of another church well known in the world, who explained to me that God made matter out of nothing, and then, having made sufficient matter out of nothing, he proceeded to build an earth from the matter so created. I cannot understand that. A few weeks ago, a member of another Church wrote to me and said that God was in the beauty of the rose, in the melody of a song, in the tenderness of a mother's heart; and that was all there is of God. No wonder people break away from such conceptions. No wonder that we have modernists breaking away from fundamentalists. The fact of the matter is that in this day with respect to the existence and character of God the blind are leading the blind.

A FUNDAMENTAL DOCTRINE

Among the great doctrines revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith, none is greater or more fundamental, as has been explained today by the living Prophet of today, than that God is from everlasting to everlasting; so far as we can understand without beginning and without end; the Father of our spirits, who in so far as he deals with human life may be understood by us, and who understands us because we are his children; a God whose glory is intelligence, and whose work and glory is to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. There is no need for us of this Church to become fundamentalists or modernists or to set up new theories as to divinity, for God has revealed himself so clearly in these latter days that, with respect to our human life, every one of us may understand to a sufficient degree the nature of God and his relationship to the human family.

THE LORD HAS DECLARED HIMSELF IN ALL GENERATIONS

I rejoice in such truths. I rejoice to know that God in person came down to commission the boy, Joseph Smith, with prophetic power in these latter days. As President Grant has stated here today there is no doubt in our minds about the reality of the First Vision of Joseph Smith. Every religion is built upon a conception of God. The Lord, knowing this, has declared himself in all generations. The first statement in Holy Writ makes it clear that man must understand the true God and must not worship false gods nor set up gods for himself. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth"—Almighty God, not blind forces, made the earth and the heavens above. Later on, out of the thunders and lightnings of Sinai, the first commandment was: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." And on the back of the statue of Joseph Smith, in this square, you will find as a great fundamental message, that "It is the first great principle of the gospel to know for a certainty the character of God."

ALL SHALL BOW BEFORE THE ONE TRUE GOD

The people of the earth are gradually beginning to understand the truths respecting God, though they are unwilling to abide by them. I read in a recent magazine—I clipped out the verses because they seemed so applicable to our belief—a verse which reads something like this:

"We serve no God whose work is done,
Who rests within his firmament.
Our God, his labors but begun,
Toils evermore, with power unspent."

And so, the truth of this latter day work is filtering in among the nations, and filling the hearts and souls and understandings of men. After a while I have no doubt that all shall bow before the one true God, the one who made the heavens and the earth, and who has spoken throughout all these ages to his children, even if obedience is not shown him.

It is possible to know God. There are thousands in this Church, there have been hundreds of thousands, who are and have been able to bear witness to that. There are hosts of people, who, in this Church, have sacrificed all for the love of the gospel, separated from their kindred, met the hardships of pioneer life, sacrificed all worldly ambitions, and then, at the close of life, have testified fearlessly that God has been good to them, that throughout their lives, in all their sacrifices, they have been simply carrying out the great purposes of Almighty God, that they have been engaged in the cause of truth, that they know of a certainty that God lives, that he has spoken in these latter days, and that it is good to be in his work. These testimonies from the thousands who have borne them become one great shout to heaven that God may be known, and that this work is a work of truth. A knowledge of God is the need of this and of every land. To know him and to serve him is the certain way to human happiness.

WE REST UPON THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST

There is no other gathering on the face of the earth such as we have here this morning; such a great body of men and women who see alike and think alike. We rest ourselves upon truth, the simple truth, the gospel of Jesus Christ. We are willing to live by that truth, and if necessary to die for it. I am deeply grateful that I know this truth; that God, in his mercy, brought it to my mother and to me. I praise God for it every day of my life. I know that you do the same. May the Lord be with us and make us strong in his cause. May we grow in a knowledge of God and his desires with respect to us, and be willing always to sacrifice whatever may be required of us for his great cause, I ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

It is indeed a pleasure and a great privilege to be present here this morning, and to stand before this great audience and bear testimony to the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. I trust that the Spirit of the Lord will direct the few remarks which I may make.

Listening to the revelation which was read by our President this morning, and which was given by the Lord to a kinsman of mine whom the Lord gave responsibility in the early history of the Church in this dispensation, I was touched with the simplicity of the words of our Father to a great grandsire of mine—counsel and advice which is good today for the souls of men. Without referring to the whole revelation I should like to refer to one of the remarkable paragraphs in that important and wonderful revelation.

“Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.” Do you know of any advice or counsel that is not contained in those words? There is one word which may be implied but is not said—no Latter-day Saint can receive the blessings of the Lord without honesty. We must be honest with ourselves, honest with our neighbors, honest with our God, and then we are entitled to his blessings, to the confidence of our neighbors, to the confidence and fellowship of those who are around us. These words of counsel are applicable to all of us as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

In visiting among the people, as it is my privilege, I have discovered that the Lord has been very kind to us as a people. We have struggled through this year which has been and is known to us as one of the dry years, when we have not had sufficient rain and moisture for our needs in many cases; but in the kindness of the Lord conditions have been brought about which have brought us to a very happy condition, for there are none among us who are suffering to the extreme. True there have been many losses, true we have not accomplished all that we might have done; but the Lord has been merciful and I wish to acknowledge his hand, not only in behalf of myself, but in behalf of the people and of the Church, and I praise the Lord in your behalf that He has been mindful of and merciful to us as a people, as individuals and as an organized Church.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is organized for the last time. It is the kingdom of God that has been set up in the last day never more to be thrown down nor given to another people. It is that organization which was made plain to the great king of Babylon through the instrumentality of the Prophet Daniel; that in the last days the God of heaven should set up a kingdom likened unto a stone cut out of the mountains without hands, that should smite the great beast which the king saw and break it in pieces, and this stone should roll forth and fill the whole earth. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is that kingdom of God which has been set up never more to be thrown down nor given to another people. It has not come from men of earthly power or from any earthly or man-made organization. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has neither father nor mother in the earth, for it has not come out of any organization in the earth. It has come in the manner predicted, as a stone cut out of the mountain without hands, for the power, the keys, the authority and all the privileges that come to us to serve in the name of the Lord have come from heaven, through heavenly powers and heavenly messengers.

I bear testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I know with all the powers that I have to know, that these heavenly messengers did come to the Prophet Joseph Smith and did restore to the earth all the keys and powers of authority which are in the Church today, and that men are called upon to bear the Holy Priesthood which is the power to officiate in the Church for the Lord, to do his work, to bring about his marvelous work on earth in these the last days. I bear testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that the power and keys of authority to officiate in the name of the Lord for the salvation of the souls of men both for the living and for the dead are in the Church today. I have seen their marvelous power made manifest. I know that this power rests with the authorities of the Church as they are at present constituted the prophets, apostles, pastors, evangelists, teachers and other men who are called to bear this important responsibility, to bring about the mighty purposes of God in these the last days. I thank the Lord for this testimony. I know it is the truth and I praise the Lord for his kindness and his mercy in bestowing upon his children this plain truth, so that we are not in doubt. We do not wander in our minds, but we know, like little children, that we have a father, and a mother in heaven, and that we have our loved ones there. We know that if we are true to the teachings, counsels and instructions that are given unto us; that if we are honest and virtuous and faithful, and patient, and diligent, and practice all these other qualities that belong to Latter-day Saints, we shall receive the blessings of the Lord, we shall find that happy day in the hereafter when we shall be associated with our loved ones, and with the men and women whom God has honored, who have gone before us. Certain powers are in the Church today which, if we are faithful in receiving, will bind us together in families, in the links of brotherhood and fatherhood forever: we will claim a natural relationship, to our fathers and our mothers, and to our brothers and sisters, not for this life only, but for all eternity. These are the keys and the powers and the blessings that will come to us if we will only live worthy lives and be obedient to the teachings and counsels which come to us from our merciful Heavenly Father.

Now brethren and sisters, as a servant of the Lord, in humility I pray God to bless you, and say unto you that he will bless you. He will continue to bless those whom he has called to preside in this great and important work, from the President of the Church to the least and last one who is or who may be called; whether to labor at home or abroad; for this is God's work and not the work of man or men, and it will roll forth even as Daniel declared when he interpreted the great king's dream that it should in time fill the whole earth.

May God bless you in your homes, may he continue to be mindful of you in your labors, that you may be honest with him in all of the possessions and blessings that come to you, that you may remember the Lord—whether in poverty or wealth, it matters not. The Lord will require only a certain amount from each of us. Let us be true and honest and faithful to the end. I pronounce upon you, my brethren and sisters, and upon the Church, the blessings of the Lord, the blessings of Jesus Christ, for this is his Church, and his blessings will continue with his Church and with his people. I pray that his mercies may continue to attend us, and for his spirit to inspire those who speak and pray and sing, and take other parts in this conference, that we may be encouraged and built up in our faith to return to our homes and abiding places after this conference, inspired and blessed and comforted and sustained to serve God and keep his commandments, and work out his mighty purposes according to his will as it has been made known to us, and may the peace and blessing of the Almighty be upon you all, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Elder Orson F. Whitney, will be our next speaker. We all rejoice in the recovery of Brother Whitney's health. On account of being in Europe for some time, he has not had many privileges of speaking to us. He will occupy the balance of the time.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

THE MARVELOUS WORK AND WONDER

Seven hundred years before the birth of the Savior, a Prophet of God upon the Eastern hemisphere proclaimed the coming forth of a marvelous work and wonder. The reason for its coming forth was given by the Lord through that Prophet as follows:

"Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

"Therefore behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."—Isaiah 29:13, 14.

The angel Moroni, who appeared to Joseph Smith on the night of the 21st of September, one hundred and one years ago, cited this prediction, among others, as relating to the Lord's work in latter days. He identified those words of Isaiah with the movement which the world now calls "Mormonism."

FUNDAMENTAL FACTS

And what could be more wonderful, more marvelous, than the basic facts upon which "Mormonism" rests?—beginning with the appearance of the Father and the Son to a boy fourteen years of age, announcing the opening of a new Gospel dispensation; then the coming of an angel to reveal the hidden past and future of the American continents, as set forth in that ancient record, the Book of Mormon, containing also the fulness of the everlasting gospel; the coming of another angel, John the Baptist, to confer upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the Aaronic Priesthood, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; the visitation of three other heavenly messengers, the Apostles Peter, James and John, delivering the keys of the Melchizedek Priesthood, the power to bestow the Holy Ghost upon those baptized in the right manner and by the proper authority. By virtue of these priesthoods this Church was organized, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (April 6, 1830), and thus was lifted the ensign for the gathering of scattered Israel, the children of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, that they might be ready to meet their God and King, who is coming to reign literally upon the earth. Subsequently came Moses, to restore the keys of the gathering, to authorize the assembling of the House of Israel; then Elias, repeating the promise made to Abraham, that in him and in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed—a promise fulfilled in the coming of Christ through the lineage of the Hebrew patriarchs, and in the dispersion of Israel among all nations, so that the blood that believes, that has faith in the true God, might be sprinkled over the world, and that out of every nation under heaven might come in the last days some of the chosen people, to build up Zion on this goodly land and prepare the way before the glorious coming of the Lord. Finally the Prophet Elijah, who holds all the keys of the Priesthood, appears and confers upon Joseph and Oliver "the keys to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers," in order that a link might be welded between the living and the dead, between the present and the past, and a work done that will eventually unify and bring together all things in Christ, both in heaven and on earth. What could be more marvelous, more wonderful than this? And yet the wisdom of the world passes it by as a thing of naught.

WORLDLY WISDOM'S ATTITUDE

Wise and gifted men will come into the midst of God's people; they will praise the industry, the thrift, the honesty and uprightness of the Latter-day Saints; but they seem to have no conception of the more glorious features of the Lord's Work. They praise Brigham Young as a colonizer, as a builder of cities, as the founder of a commonwealth; but they know nothing at all about Brigham Young as a prophet, seer and revelator. Agriculture, mining, and other temporalities, things of earth and time, they appreciate; but they take no cognizance whatever of spiritual things, things pertaining to heaven and eternity.

HORACE GREELEY'S VISIT

Many years ago a famous and prominent personage came to Utah. It was in the days of the stage coach and the pony express, before the transcontinental railroad had crossed the country, before there was even a telegraph line between the Missouri and the Pacific. He was the founder and editor of a great newspaper—the New York Tribune. His word was more influential than that of the President of the United States. Whatever Horace Greeley said was accepted by the American people almost as the word of God. He came here and spent a week or more, had several long interviews with President Brigham Young, and after returning East wrote and published a book entitled "Across the Continent." In it he praised the "Mormon" people for their sobriety and industry. He did not believe that they were robbers and murderers, as he had been told. They were sincere and honest, he said, and had done a wonderful work in peopling the waste and redeeming the desert. But he had not a word to say concerning the glories of our religion. Why was it?

A CATHOLIC COMMENT

I bear in mind another noted visitor, a great scholar, who came here many years after the advent of the railroad. I became well acquainted with him, and we had more than one conversation together. I admired his vast erudition. He seemed to know all about law, literature, science, philosophy, and had a dozen languages at his tongue's end. He said to me one day: "You Mormons are all ignoramuses. You don't even know the strength of your own position. It is so strong that there is only one other position tenable in the whole Christian world, and that is the position of the Roman Catholic Church. The issue is between Mormonism and Catholicism. If you are right, we are wrong. If we are right, you are wrong. And that's all there is to it. These Protestant sects haven't a leg to stand on; for if we are right, we cut them off long ago as apostates; and if we are wrong, they are wrong with us, for they were part of us and came out of us. If we have the apostolic succession from St. Peter as we claim, there was no need of Joseph Smith and Mormonism; but if we have not that succession, such a man as Joseph Smith was necessary and Mormonism's position is the only consistent one. It is either the perpetuation of the gospel from ancient times, or the restoration of the gospel in latter days."

I replied: "Doctor, I agree with you in almost everything that you have said; but don't deceive yourself with the notion that we 'Mormons' do not know the strength of our own position. We know it better than you do; we know it better than any other people can know it. We have not all been to college; we cannot all speak the dead languages, and we may be ignoramuses as you say, but we know we are right, and we know that you are wrong." I was just as frank with him as he had been with me.

Now what was the position of this learned man? He could not see into the heart of "Mormonism," with all his learning, his dead and living languages, his knowledge of science, law and literature. He could not comprehend this great problem. Why? Because God Almighty had said concerning him and his class: "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid." He thought that Joseph Smith had stumbled upon something of which he did not know the true value. A greater mistake was never made, a grosser error never committed. Joseph Smith received his knowledge, his power, and wisdom from on High. He did not stumble upon it; it came by divine revelation, and he knew, better than anyone else, the strength of the "Mormon" position.

AN EPISCOPAL VIEW

Years later I formed the acquaintance of a bishop of the Episcopal Church, a very worthy and scholarly gentleman, whose untimely, accidental death in this city we all deplored. He remarked to me on one occasion: "If Joseph Smith, at the outset of his career, had made the acquaintance of the Episcopalians, he never would have sought any further for spiritual light. But instead, he came upon the Methodists, the Baptists, the Presbyterians; and their conflicting creeds and claims bewildered the boy, compelling him to look elsewhere. Now if he had only become acquainted with Episcopalianism, which has an unbroken succession of authority all down the centuries, he never would have gone to the trouble of organizing another church." Such was this wise man's opinion. "Mormonism" was to him only one more broken off fragment of the ancient Christian faith. He could not grasp the idea of its being the ancient Christian faith restored.

AN ABSURD THEORY

But I think the shallowest and vainest attempt to explain away Joseph Smith and "Mormonism," was made by a learned man who was applying for a Doctor's degree from Yale University. He wrote a thesis, as the basis for his application, taking Joseph Smith and "Mormonism" as his subject. And all that he could say concerning this marvelous work and wonder, was that a boy named Joseph Smith, being an epileptic, had fallen in a fit and imagined that he saw the Father and the Son; imagined that he beheld angels; imagined that the heavens were opened to him and that he received communications from Above.

Think of it! Here is a great Church organization which challenges the admiration of intelligent men all over the world. I wish I had time to describe it, even hastily—but you know it. This Church was once compared to the German army, in the excellence and perfection of its organization. That was when Germany had an army—but of course no comparison is possible between the work of God and the work of man. This Church is conceded to be a most superior organization, and “Mormonism,” as you all know who have studied it, is replete with doctrines of beauty and sublimity, unequaled anywhere—full of science, full of poetry, full of philosophy, full of truth. And yet this wonderful scheme of religion and this unparalleled system of government, all sprang from the disordered brain of a fourteen-year old boy who had fallen in an epileptic fit! There are some things that do not need answering; they answer themselves. This is one of them.

THE REVEALING SPIRIT

There is only one way to comprehend God and the things of God, and the Apostle Paul struck the keynote when he said:

“Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

“But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

“For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.”—1 Cor. 2:9-11.

And that is why the Spirit of God is given to every man, woman and child who joins the Church of Christ. We have received that Spirit as a gift from God, because we have done His will. Therefore we “know of the doctrine.” We have had faith, have repented of our sins, have had our sins washed away by baptism, and have received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. That is the key to the situation.

Why couldn’t Horace Greeley see what you and I see in “Mormonism?” Why couldn’t Dr. Reiner see it? Why couldn’t Bishop Spalding or Mr. Riley see it? Because they were without the Spirit that comprehends the things of God. And we, without that Spirit, would be just as short-sighted in our views, would make just as many mistakes as do other men in relation to the Lord’s work. It is not our smartness, not our native intelligence that enables us to understand these things. We have come out from the Gentile world. We have their blood in our veins. We are no more intelligent than they, naturally; but we have received something that they do not possess; that is the whole solution. The credit is not to us; it is to our Father in Heaven, who has given us this precious gift, the power to comprehend him and his purposes, and right'y interpret his word.

ST. JOHN INTERPRETED

Suppose we should open the Bible at the first chapter of St. John, and read: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God, * * * and the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory." And then read a little farther on: "No man hath seen God at any time." Who can interpret that? Evidently "the Word" means our Savior, in whom dwelt "the fulness of the Godhead bodily." He was God in the flesh, and many men saw him; and yet John says, or is made to say: "No man hath seen God at any time." Who can interpret it? Who can explain the apparent contradiction?

THE FATHER AND THE SON

True, it might be shown that when John said: "No man hath seen God at any time," he was referring, not to the Son of God, but to God the Father. This is evident from the text (1:14, 18). But even here the same difficulty arises; for Adam had seen God, Enoch had walked with him, and he had appeared to Abraham, Moses, Aaron, and others, long before "the Word was made flesh" and was called the Son of God "because of the flesh." Joseph Smith saw both the Father and the Son, but the wise world rejects his testimony, and most believers in the Bible adhere to the dead letter of John's declaration, (which may or may not have been correctly transmitted), unheeding the divine admonition: "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

A "MORMON" BOY'S WIT

One of our "Mormon" boys out on a mission was confronted with this question. He had just been preaching that the Father and the Son appeared to Joseph Smith, when a voice rang out: "No man hath seen God at any time." The boy had his wits about him. "Of course not," said he, "God is a business man—you can't see him at any time; you have to make a special appointment with him." (Laughter.) He answered a fool according to his folly, but that of course is not the explanation.

MOSES EXPLAINS

Read the Book of Moses. That mighty man of God had an experience of which Joseph Smith's was almost the exact counterpart. He wrestled with Satan, and was delivered from darkness. He saw God, and tells how he saw him, in these words:

"Now mine own eyes have beheld God; but not my natural, but my spiritual eyes, for my natural eyes could not have beheld; for I should have withered and died in his presence; but his glory was upon me; and I beheld his face, for I was transfigured before him."

THE SPIRIT SIGHT

That is what John meant when he said: "No man hath seen God at any time." And that is what Paul meant, in saying: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard." It means that no man with his natural eyes can see God in his glory. He must use his spirit eyes, the eyes with which he "walked by sight" when a spirit in the spirit world, the eyes that he saw with before coming to earth and receiving his natural eyes. In this second estate, where we "walk by faith," we are not permitted to use at all times our spirit sight. But now and then the Lord chooses one from among men, and gives him that rare privilege. The power of God comes upon such a one, transfigures him, opens his spirit eyes, and constitutes him a seer in the highest sense of the term. Such a man was Moses. Such a man was the brother of Jared, such a man was Nephi, and such a man was Joseph Smith. There have been many such men. They have seen God actually, literally, but it was with their spiritual and not with their natural eyes. "The natural man is an enemy to God;" the natural eye cannot behold him, the natural ear cannot hear him. But the spirit eye can behold him, and the spirit ear can hear him. With the Spirit of the Lord upon us, we can see and comprehend God, so far as he chooses to make himself known. This is the great differentiating feature between the Latter-day Saints and those who have not received the gift of the Holy Ghost.

God grant us the power to retain this precious gift, which comprehends all things, which explains the past, the present and the future, shows us where we came from, why we are here, and where we are going when we leave this life, making manifest the things of God, both of time and of eternity. May we keep the fire burning, the lamp lit, which the Lord has lighted within us, to lead and guide us into all truth, Amen.

President Heber J. Grant gave notice that a free concert will be held in the Tabernacle this evening, to which all are invited. An excellent program of singing has been arranged.

The congregation sang, "Do what is right."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Byron O. Colton, president of the Roosevelt stake of Zion.

The meeting adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

President Heber J. Grant announced at 2 o'clock that the choir and congregation would sing, "O say what is truth?"

After the singing, Elder Franklin S. Harris, president of the Brigham Young University, opened the meeting with prayer.

The choir and congregation sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

I am dependent this afternoon upon the Lord and the faith of the congregation for what I shall say. We had a very excellent meeting this morning. I trust that the Lord by his spirit will continue to be with us.

A CONUNDRUM

I have in my hands an article entitled "Happiness," written by Bruno Lessing. I will read a few lines of said article.

"Many a philosopher has propounded the conundrum, What is the object of life? Why have we been placed upon this planet, to struggle along for a few years and then to die? Has a beneficent Providence some scheme which we cannot fathom? This conundrum has not yet been answered."

THE ANSWER

In reply to these words I may say that the conundrum here spoken of has been answered, and that a beneficent Providence has some scheme which we are able to fathom in order to arrive at a satisfactory solution of this great and important question. "What is the object of life?" We must necessarily hark back to the pre-existent state of our spirits. I know that this will seem to be a strange doctrine to many—the pre-existence of our spirits—but the scriptures are replete with references to this important subject. We are living here now. We lived before we came here. Let me submit a scripture or two bearing upon this subject:

Hebrews 12:9: "Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?"

Numbers 16:22: "And they fell upon their faces, and said, O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?"

Ecclesiastes 12:7: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

WE WERE THE CHILDREN OF GOD IN THE SPIRIT WORLD

Now, brethren and sisters and friends, as a matter of fact, and as these scriptures which I have read, and many other scriptures, indicate, we existed before we came here and belonged to a great family of spirits in heaven. We speak of our Father in heaven. Jesus said, When you pray, say, "Our Father which art in heaven." We were his children in spirit, in heaven, and suffice it to say we also have a mother in heaven. There were parents in heaven—parents and children.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CREATION OF THE WORLD

Let me say to you that when the earth was organized and rolled into existence, the Lord had a great and glorious purpose in view, and it was that these sons and daughters in the spirit world should come down to the earth and inhabit it. Now the first great creative act in the beginning of the world indicates the importance of this subject. We read in Genesis 2: 7:

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

MAN'S CREATION

What a wonderful, marvelous statement this is. Think, my brethren and sisters, what it signifies! We learn from this passage that man could only develop into a perfect soul by taking a body. Perhaps that passage might be better understood if it were rendered in a little different way but with the same meaning—The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils his spirit, and man became a living soul. It is the spirit which is the breath of life. And so man never did develop, and never could have developed into a perfect soul without the body. And thus we begin to get an insight into the purpose of life. The Lord said in one of the revelations to Joseph Smith, the Prophet, section 88:

"And the spirit and the body are the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul."

REDEMPTION THROUGH THE GOSPEL AND THE RESURRECTION

So that we get the impression from these scriptures that when man comes into the world, as we have done, he begins almost from the first to look forward to the redemption of his soul through the resurrection. And how may this redemption be accomplished? The answer has a bearing directly upon the object and purpose of life. Surely no man can be redeemed except he will obey the commandments of God. I take it that redemption means that we are redeemed from sickness, disease, trouble, sorrow and sin; and that can only be brought about through obedience, as I said, to the commandments of God. These commandments of the Almighty are set forth in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and if men reject the gospel how can they hope to come into the Church and kingdom of God, and be saved and redeemed?

You will remember doubtless the conversation between Nicodemus and the Savior, when Nicodemus came to him privately by night, in order possibly to get further light and information. He confessed that he knew the Savior was a prophet because of the great works he had done. The Savior made what might seem to be a peculiar answer. He said: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." That was very confusing to Nicodemus. He could not comprehend such a statement. He wondered how it might be. Could a man return to the spirit world and then be born again? In answer the Savior said, amplifying his first statement: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Now, brethren and sisters, a rejection of the gospel is a bar, an absolute bar, against any man or woman entering into the kingdom of God.

The importance of the body, and we have been emphasizing that thought very considerably, is greatly emphasized by another revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, section 93:

THE PURPOSE OF MAN'S LIFE

"For man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receive a fulness of joy;

"And when separated, man cannot receive a fulness of joy.

"The elements are the tabernacle of God; yea, man is the tabernacle of God, even temples; and whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple."

Now you see how directly this passage refers to the object of life, the very purpose of life. In securing a body, we are at once put upon the line of progress that leads to exaltation and glory. We could not do this in our spirit state, but the opportunity is before us here, because the Lord tells us that the body of man is composed of element, that spirit and element inseparably connected receiveth a fulness of joy, or a fulness of happiness. Happiness is the very thing that this writer is dealing with, and that is how it is to be obtained.

THE WONDERFUL BEAUTY OF THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST

How beautiful, how wonderful, is the gospel of Jesus Christ! What marvelous light is thrown upon our lives in mortality through the scriptures that we have. The question might be asked: How is it that philosophers and wise men, many of them, reject this light, reject the principles of the gospel? The answer is: Because they are not spiritually minded. These things can only be comprehended and fully understood by the Spirit of God, and not otherwise. And so vital is this question, so important to our welfare and happiness, that the Savior delivered this tremendous charge to his apostles after the crucifixion; he said to them: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned," or condemned, which means the same. So that those who turn away from the light and who reject the gospel, be they the learned or the unlearned, men or women, they are under condemnation, and, of course, will not attain to a fulness of happiness, to complete and perfect joy. Their wings, so to speak, will be clipped and they will come short. Now is it any wonder, my brethren and sisters, that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in which is to be found the gospel in its fulness, should send it message to the ends of the earth by our elders?

OUR DUTY TO CARRY THE GOSPEL MESSAGE TO THE WORLD

It seems to me that it is our bounden duty, that the responsibility which was placed upon the apostles in early days rests now also upon the apostles of latter days and also upon the elders of Israel, to carry this message to the world; and as we have received the light freely, we are to give it to others freely. We cannot escape the responsibility.

Standing before you this afternoon, I solemnly testify that this work in which we are engaged is the Church and kingdom of God, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was and is his Prophet, and the instrument in the hands of God in founding his Church upon the earth in these latter days. This is my testimony, and I rejoice in it. I glorify the Lord, and I am striving, and I hope to be able, to live the religion which has come to me, which is so perfect in all of its principles, and in the organization of the Church. Brethren and sisters, the Lord in heaven bless you and sustain you and strengthen you for your duties, and guide you continually, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

I desire to read a portion of the 86th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the same being a communication from the Lord Jesus Christ to the Prophet Joseph Smith,—and the address is made to all the Saints and elders of the Church.

PROMISES TO BE FULFILLED IN OUR DAY

The Lord admonishes the Latter-day Saints to have faith and confidence in the former promises made by the prophets of old, and gives us an assurance that we are living in a day when these great and precious promises are to be fulfilled; and the language which I now quote is as follows:

"Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers—

"For ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God—

"Therefore your life and the Priesthood have remained, and must needs remain through you and your lineage until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.

"Therefore, blessed are ye if ye continue in my goodness, a light unto the Gentiles, and through this Priesthood, a savior unto my people Israel. The Lord hath said it."

How great and wonderful is this promise, that through this Church and this Priesthood shall be restored ultimately all that has been predicted and prophesied of concerning the great things God would do for men; and that these things are to be fulfilled and realized in our time. The Latter-day Saints are a people with a mission and a destiny, and we have not forgotten, I am sure, by the presence of this vast assembly, that we are still pursuing our destiny. We did not aspire to it, the Lord appointed it unto us, and the fulfilment of these promises surely can be and shall be realized in the Lord's own due time, and through his providing.

THE PEOPLE, PLACE AND PLAN IN THE ACCOMPLISHMENT OF THESE PROMISES

Three things seem to me to be essential in the accomplishment of these wonderful promises: The Lord must have the right kind of people to do his work; he must have them in the right place, and they must have the right plan. I said the Latter-day Saints are a people with a mission, they are entitled to that mission.

THE DESCENDANTS OF JOSEPH THE RIGHT PEOPLE OF PROMISE

I was thrilled not long ago when I read an article appearing in one of our national magazines. The author was discussing the question: "Are the Jews the Chosen People of God?" He denied them the right to claim for themselves and their posterity all the blessings pronounced upon all the sons of Jacob, but limited their blessings to their own particular line—the tribe of Judah. After tracing the history of the Jews and the several tribes of Israel the author concludes: "If we could find in the earth somewhere today the descendants of Joseph, we would find the chosen people of God," because the blessings of Joseph were so much greater than the blessings of his brethren that you will recall they despised him and were jealous of his blessings, and sold him into Egypt; but the Lord was with him and raised him up and made him mighty to become the deliverer of his father's household. I say, when I read that statement my soul thrilled with a new sensation of gratitude to God that I live to see the day when Joseph's children are being gathered again, and realize that the Latter-day Saints are of Joseph, children of his favored son, Ephraim, gathered "one of a city and two of a family," a few from the midst of the nations of the earth, whither they have been scattered, and brought to the land of Zion. The Lord has selected and picked them. They were chosen spirits before they were born. He knew them in the spirit world. He held them in reserve to come forth at the right time.

GOD HAS GATHERED THEM TO THE RIGHT PLACE

He has brought them to the right place. Joseph's blessings were to obtain above the blessings of his progenitors, even to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills. It is no chance circumstance that we are here. Notwithstanding all the drivings, the sorrows and distresses, at Nauvoo and Missouri, the difficulties in gathering the Saints from the Old World—these were but God's providences in gathering his people to the right place.

I was deeply impressed with the statement made not long since by a man who has been gathering statistics of an eminent character, wherein he calls attention to the fact that while the United States is but seven percent of the world's land, and has but six percent of the world's population, nearly one-half of the world's natural wealth is in the United States of America. This surely is a choice land above all other lands. And then, as I thought of our habitations in these mountains, I feel a confidence in the statement that taking a survey two hundred miles from this city in either direction, and circumscribing a district within that radius, there may be found more natural wealth than in any other like territory in any other portion of this choice land. We are not only in the right nation, we are in the right part of that nation.

I used to think about it while laboring as a missionary in the Northwest, for there was some thought, evidently, in the mind of the Prophet at one time that he might go to the northwest country, for he offered the services of the Latter-day Saint men to man the military posts along the old Oregon Trail. He said, "we can render this service cheaper than any one else since we expect to be in that country when we have concluded our service for the government." But the measure was defeated. You remember the discussion brought out the statement of Daniel Webster to this effect: "What do we want with this vast wilderness of shifting sands and cactus, prairie dogs, etc." He said he would not vote one dollar from the public treasury to bring the Pacific Coast one mile nearer Boston than it was at that time. And another senator said in the same discussion that he would not give a pinch of snuff for all the Rocky mountain country. And yet it was through the inspiration of the Almighty that the Prophet Joseph Smith, almost at that time, said that the Saints would continue to suffer and be driven to these mountains, and many should live to see them become a mighty people. God's providence has been over the gathering of the Latter-day Saints to this place. This is yet the place for the Latter-day Saints.

HOW TO SECURE A PERMANENCY IN THE RIGHT PLACE

A very significant thing is that as you read the history of the past, the peoples who have survived have been the owners of the soil and the tillers of the land, and the keepers of flocks. By natural inclination it is the occupation of the majority of the Latter-day Saints; indeed, it was the natural occupation of the majority of the children of Israel in ancient times, to be the tillers of the soil and the keepers of flocks. While you Latter-day Saint brethren on the farms have had a trying time, be ye patient and do not desert the very foundation of our independence in this country—the farm. Better days for you will come if you can weather the storm, and you will preserve not only for yourselves but for the Church a permanency that is essential in working out this great problem. We are in the right place, and yet while this vast wealth may be here it is not easily accessible and can only be had with much labor, much patience and persistence. I doubt if there is another section in all the world that would call forth more physical strength, greater faith, patience and endurance, with a long-range vision of waiting and laboring to reach the destiny, than in these Rocky mountains. Lofty mountains, an inspiration! Clear streams of water, health-giving! Pure air, every setting is here to develop the finest physical race that has ever graced this footstool of God. The Lord brought the Latter-day Saints to the right place, and we are engaged in the right business to make us the kind of people the Lord wants us to be.

THE RIGHT PLAN REVEALED TO GATHERED JOSEPH

And then we have the plan revealed, as you heard this morning from our President, by the visitation of no less a personage than the Lord Jesus Christ himself. It is his plan, and it contemplates a solution of every problem that now vexes this distressed world. The Lord saw the needs of this hour, 1924, more than a hundred years ago, and he provided for it a plan, and those who follow it shall survive, and those who do not accept the plan shall be shaken; for this is a time when all that can be shaken will be shaken, and that shall stand which God has planned. I said that the plan contemplates a solution of all the problems that now vex us, and I am thinking of political problems. I thought of it this morning as one of the brethren was speaking. I shall not be surprised if this shall be the last national campaign that we shall conduct in this country with the two great parties that have so long obtained here, arrayed one against the other. I tell you that the day is coming that the Prophet Joseph Smith predicted, when the Constitution shall be in peril, when it shall be necessary for the men of all parties who stand for the Constitution and law and order, to stand together, or this thing that we hold so sacred and dear, that our fathers established, cannot be preserved. Now the Latter-day Saints, by reason of the fact that they have been taught that God established the Constitution of the United States, adhere to it as earnestly and devotedly as to any other of our principles of faith and belief. By reason of the training we have received we are on the side of the Constitution, on the side of law, on the side of order. In the training and discipline that has come to us in the keeping of the Word of Wisdom, in the payment of our tithes and offerings, God was but preparing us to meet the emergencies of this hour. It is his plan, and we shall succeed if we adhere to it being led successfully through all the difficulties; and directed safely to that goal and haven, our natural heritage, the realization of all these sacred promises that have been made by all the prophets since the world began.

HOWEVER WE MUST ADHERE TO OUR STANDARDS

I tell you Latter-day Saints, however, that we need to adhere to our standards as never before in the history of this Church, because sin is rampant. Self-indulgence is the key word of the hour in the world, and I confess that I tremble and fear when I see the things that men boast of as the evidence of our high civilization, being really the very things that brought the ruin and the destruction of empires that have long since perished. I say it is a time when we need to adhere to our standards, to protect ourselves against the waves of sin and immorality that shall come in from the world. And yet I have no fear, if we shall be true to his plan for in it is our redemption and our salvation.

WE HAVE AN INSPIRED INTERPRETER FOR THE PLAN

I am grateful that we not only have the plan, but we have an inspired consulting engineer, an inspired man who can and does receive from time to time, the word of the Lord for this people in interpreting that plan, so that we never come to difficulties in understanding the plan. If we are in doubt, we know where to go, and we do receive the continual inspiration of the Lord for the government and guidance of his people. Behold, the plan is unfolding under the guidance of God's inspired servants. And each hour shall find God's provision adequate for that hour's need, if this people shall only listen to the voice of the servants of the Lord, whom he has appointed to lead and guide and interpret his plan and purpose. Through obedience I am as sure as that I live that we shall see realized and fulfilled all of these wonderful things that the Lord has promised shall come. Though exiled, as many have been, driven from their homes, and much like Joseph, if not sold into Egypt, banished into the wilderness where it was thought they might perish, yet that which happened to Joseph shall yet happen to his Saints in latter days. Into the place God has led us, under the training he has given us, under the plan he has provided, he is preparing this people to become the saviors of the whole house of Israel, not to feed them physical bread, but the bread of life, that will be more essential and necessary for the world's salvation and preservation than any other kind of bread. These things I am as sure as that I live shall come.

LET US KEEP THE GREAT VISION BEFORE US

I pray God to bless us, that we shall keep the vision of it before us and be working towards it, and see in the practical things that we have been given in each of these commandments the Lord has revealed for the government and guidance of our own lives. It is after all a bigger thing than merely yielding obedience to the Lord's wishes; for he must have had an object, and that object is to fit and prepare us to meet the emergencies of this hour, to succeed in weathering the storms, and to come through—the salt of the earth, the light of the world! The power to do it is here—not only the plan, but the power and right to execute it in the bestowal upon men of the holy Priesthood.

God bless the Priesthood and his Church for the comfort and salvation of all flesh. May God speed the day that we shall be prepared to take those steps. The Lord is waiting for this people, and for the world to bring to pass his righteous purposes, and if we shall prepare ourselves, he is ready and willing to lead us to our glorious destiny! May he grant it unto us who now live, if not in our day, in the day of our children, or our children's children—but it shall come; whether to me, whether to you, I cannot say, but it will come to those who are true to the truth! Many may fall away, lose the faith, but those who stand true and faithful shall be victorious, and they shall be the recipients of all these great things. God speed that day I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES H. HART

When Abraham Lincoln was a child, residing in the wilds of Kentucky, his prayer was: "Lord, bless father, bless mother, bless sister, bless everybody. Teach me to read, and write. Watch over Honey and make him a good dog, and, Lord, keep us all from being lost in the wilderness."

Lincoln himself, brought up under much the same circumstances as Joseph Smith the Prophet, so far as living in the wilderness was concerned, tells us that in his boyhood days there were many bears and other wild animals in the woods. No doubt he knew of his grandfather having met his death by an arrow shot by an Indian in ambush, and how his father, Thomas Lincoln, had avenged the death of his father.

It is something to have a laudable ambition to learn to read and write; but it was of the last verse, in the child's prayer, that I was going to speak—guidance in the wilderness, not only in the literal wilderness, in the woods, but also in other wildernesses in life that we encounter. The children of Israel received guidance in the wilderness, and they needed it, for we learn that although they might have dry passage across the Red Sea, although they might be guided by the pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night, and have their thirst quenched by the water which flowed from the rock, at the touch of Moses' rod; although they might be fed on manna, yet they were ready to engage in idol worship, framing the golden calf in imitation of Egyptian idolatry. Miriam, the sister of Moses, was outside of the camp of Israel seven days before she was cleansed of the leprosy which she brought upon herself by rebellion against her great law-giving brother Moses, and ten of the chosen twelve who went down to spy out the land of promise were unworthy to live, notwithstanding their training in the wilderness. The Lord has been very good to those whom he has sent into the wilderness. Abraham, who was called from Ur, of the Chaldees, into a new land, was promised blessings and received them just as his posterity were promised blessings—blessings to Jacob, meaning, I suppose, his posterity whom the Lord found in the wilderness and led in the wilderness, and guided, and who were precious to him as the apple of his eye, so the scriptures inform us.

And then there was the guidance of modern Israel in their wanderings in the wilderness. And it isn't a bad training, these wilderness-instructing experiences that men may have, that the Latter-day Saints have had—guidance as they passed from the Missouri river to Utah, guidance no doubt to the citizen soldiers called the "Mormon" Battalion in their march through the wilderness, an event being celebrated by the State of Utah just now in the erection of a suitable monument, to cost some two hundred thousand dollars to properly commemorate the march in the wilderness and the behavior of these men upon that march.

But as I said, it is not particularly of the guidance in the wilderness, the physical wilderness, that I wish to speak, although that is of importance, and we have experienced much of it, as indicated by the maps prepared by the Smithsonian Institute and exhibited in the northwest, showing the trail-blazing done by the Latter-day Saints from New York to Oregon, and also to Southern California.

There are other wildernesses, as indicated by the remarks of the brethren this morning. We have the commercial wilderness, the financial wilderness, that men are groping in, and need guidance in, for them to devise ways and means that are honorable in the sight of all men for the support and education of their families. There is the intellectual wilderness in which there is danger of men losing their bearings. When I think of Abraham Lincoln having all together only twelve months of schooling, and that scattered over a period of nine years, and then of what a wonderful English scholar and philosopher he became, I think it is a reproach to some of the present generation who have such splendid opportunities for education and who make so little use of them. It takes our young people sometimes some months, or some years, to get their bearings again after they have gone through the education which is given to them by the current system of education that prevails in our land. If our educational system is what it should be, and our home training is what it should be, how comes it then that there is such lawlessness in the United States? Some one professing a knowledge of the statistics upon the subject has designated the United States as one of the most lawless nations in the world. If we can rear such characters as the prophet Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, and Abraham Lincoln, who was born only a little over three years after the prophet was born, by proper religious instruction in the home and by divine guidance, then we may well pay greater attention to the things which will produce such men.

I think it was a great slander upon Abraham Lincoln when his partner published that Lincoln was an infidel. I think nothing could be farther from the truth. In a large work entitled The Soul of Abraham Lincoln, written by one who carefully considered the subject, proof is given that Abraham Lincoln was of a strongly religious nature. His own words as quoted by one of his biographers, Mr. Holland, are as follows:

"I know there is a God, and that he hates injustice and slavery. I see the storm coming, and I know that his hand is in it. If he has a place, a work for me—and I think he has—I believe I am ready. I am nothing, but truth is everything. I know I am right, because I know that liberty is right; for Christ teaches it, and Christ is God."

If we would have the sort of a world that the author would have, who was quoted by Brother Widtsoe this morning—a dose of atheism—we would have the sort of a world pictured by Carlyle in one of his chapters entitled, "The Everlasting No," in which he uses this language:

"Thus has the bewildered wanderer to stand, as so many have done, shouting question after question into the sibyl cave of destiny and receive no answer back but an echo. It is all a grim desert, this once fair world of his, wherein is heard only the howl of wild beasts, or the shriek of despairing, hate-filled men; and no pillar of cloud by day and no pillar of fire by night any longer guides the pilgrim * * * The whole world is like thee, sold to unbelief, their old temples of the Godhead which for long has not been rainproof, crumble down, and we ask now, 'Where is the Godhead? Our eyes never see him.'"

A doubt-filled world is the picture given, where no faith exists and where atheism prevails.

The explanation of attributing infidelity to Lincoln is given by the author of the book, The Soul of Abraham Lincoln. He suggests that it was the contention of the different denominations, many of which were mentioned this morning by Elder Whitney, that may have distracted Abraham Lincoln, just as we know at about the same time it distracted the Prophet Joseph Smith and led him to prayer and to the truth.

I am very grateful to the Lord for his guidance to the pioneers in their wanderings in the wilderness, and in their settlements in the valley, and that the great landmarks have been given to us for our educational system, and for our theological learning and religious training. We are in the happy position of being able to sail between the two extremes of the fundamentalist and the modernist, being able to sail between Scylla and Charybdis, so to speak, without striking the rock on the one hand, or being drawn into the whirlpool on the other.

May the Lord bless us and help us to appreciate all that the restoration of the gospel means to us, and all that the guidance by the Priesthood has meant to us and to our fathers, and will mean to our posterity, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER REED SMOOT

"I stand all amazed at the love Jesus offers me,
Confused at the grace that so fully he proffers me,
I tremble to know that for me he was crucified,
That for me, a sinner, he suffered, he bled and died.

"I marvel that he would descend from his throne divine,
To rescue a soul so rebellious and proud as mine;
That he should extend his great love unto such as I,
Sufficient to own, to redeem and to justify.

"I think of his hands, pierced and bleeding to pay the debt;
Such mercy, such love and devotion, can I forget?
No, no, I will praise and adore at the mercy-seat,
Until at the glorified throne I kneel at his feet.

"Oh, it is wonderful that he should care for me,
Enough to die for me!
Oh, it is wonderful, wonderful to me!"

Last Wednesday morning I had the great pleasure of speaking to the temple workers, and this song was sung by two of the sisters. Perhaps it was the surroundings, perhaps it was the sweet voices, but I never before heard it when it impressed me so; and I thought to myself how wonderful! how wonderful! And that expression may be made by any member of this Church when contemplating the work of God, beginning with the creation of the world, for it was wonderful. The great plan of the Father, the plan of life and death is all wonderful; and it seems to me that a man must have lost all devotion, all respect for power on earth or in heaven when he takes the position that there is no God, that we come to this earth by chance, that the earth was created by chance, and then that we are here the same as any other life, be it plant or animal. I cannot understand any man whose thoughts run in that channel.

Then how wonderful is the regulation of the universe, causing the seasons to come and go. Mankind can depend upon them, but man has no influence over them; all is directed by a higher Power.

I often think of the organization of the Church; how wonderful it is! It was referred to this morning as being compared with the great German army, when Germany had an army. There is no such comparison, for one is of man, the other of God. One was organized for destruction of life, the other organized for the salvation of men's souls. I feel grateful, my brethren and sisters, for the plan of life and salvation. I never forget to thank my heavenly Father that I was born a member of the Church. I never forget to thank him that that birth came through a mother and a father who have acknowledged him as the King of kings and Lord of lords, and had a testimony that "Mormonism," if you please, is his divine Church. I never forget to thank him that I was born under the holy covenant, and I know as I know I live, it has had a great influence upon me in my every walk of life. I care not what it may be, business of any name or nature, things pertaining to the gospel of Jesus Christ, I acknowledge to my heavenly Father that I have been benefited more perhaps than I am entitled to by having been born under the everlasting covenant.

What a wonderful thing is this government of ours! How blessed are we that we live under a form of government such as ours. I am one who believes that there is no other form of government in all the world in which "Mormonism," so-called, could have been established. The religious liberties granted are necessary for the people to live the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fulness. It required just such a form of government as ours. And when I see, as I think I see, the least move upon the part of men claiming to be citizens of this government to destroy the very foundations upon which it stands, to cut from the Constitution of the United States, that which gives and is the bulwark of our liberty, I feel that every man and every woman should lift their voices, if necessary cry aloud, against any such action upon the part of any clique or group of people. I thank God for America. I thank him that I was born under the Stars and Stripes. I thank him for the Constitution of the United States. I thank him for the laws and for the institutions created under the Constitution of the United States; and I shall continue to pray with all the fervor at my command to the overruling God of nations in the world to preserve the Constitution of our country, to preserve our country from those without and from those within: America, the most blessed of all lands in the world.

Brother Ballard just referred to the fact that nearly one-half of all the natural resources of the world are found in our America, held, as I have often said, in the hollow of God's hand for ages, that liberty may be planted here and a free government established, that would be an ensample to all other governments of the earth. When I see that there is the least inclination on the part of any one to destroy even a part of the Constitution of the United States, I shall bitterly oppose it. I have no reference now to the few amendments to the Constitution that have been made, they were incidental to the great document itself, and to the principles upon which it was founded. When it comes to destroying the fundamentals, then action must be taken, and the only action that can be taken, is by the people themselves. Power is in your hands, the power is with the people of the country, and I trust, as I believe with all my soul, that the opposition will never be successful, and the Constitution will remain intact in its fundamentals forever.

My brethren and sisters, of all the blessings that I have received from our heavenly Father, and they are many, and I acknowledge them, there are none so dear to me as the fact that I know that Jesus is the Christ and that God lives, the fact that I am a member of his Church, that I know it was organized by revelation, that it is a power for good in the world, that if the principles of the gospel were acknowledged and adhered to by the peoples of the world, this world of ours would be a better place for God's children to live in. "Oh, the sweet joy this sentence gives: I know that my Redeemer lives." God bless his work, God bless his people. May our heavenly Father watch over our nation, that it may have a powerful influence with all other nations of the world, making them better places for people to live in. Hasten the day when the gospel shall be preached to all the peoples of the earth. Hasten the day, O Father, when thy work will be understood by the peoples of the world, and the honest in heart, wherever they may be, will acknowledge the truth of the same. God grant it, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

If we can say that during this conference the principle of man's pre-existence has been established by scriptural proof, we can also say that the principle of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man has been proved.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST ORIGINATED IN HEAVEN

Understanding the true relationship of man to his Maker, we are better able to appreciate the scriptural reference to the love the Father has for his children. We read that, "God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." In this scripture we learn that God so loved his children that he made provision for their salvation. This is the end our Father has in view. All else is but a means to this end. The Prophet Joseph Smith has left of record this statement, "At the first organization in heaven, we were all present and saw the Savior chosen and appointed, and the plan of salvation made, and we sanctioned it." The truth of his statement is fully sustained by scriptural proof. It is clear that the gospel of Jesus Christ had its origin in heaven before the world was. "We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel."

THE RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL

The gospel has been upon the earth at different periods of the world's history. After the death of the Savior and his disciples there was a general departure from the truth, so that when Joseph Smith had his vision of the Father and the Son, he was told that the churches were all wrong and that he should join none of them. He was informed by an angel from heaven that God had a work for him to do, and that his name should be had for good and evil among all nations. By the gift and power of God unto him, Joseph Smith has given unto the world the Book of Mormon which gives an account of the former inhabitants of this American continent, and contains the fulness of the everlasting gospel as given by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. Other angels appeared to him and conferred upon him the Priesthood, with power and authority to establish the Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth, and to preach the gospel in all the world, administering the ordinances of salvation to those who are prepared to receive them. Thus the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ has been restored to earth in these last days, line upon line, and precept upon precept, in fulfillment of the holy scriptures, with authority, keys, powers, gifts and blessings, the same as were in the primitive Church.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY TO PREACH THE GOSPEL

It is our responsibility to preach this gospel of the kingdom in all the world for a witness unto all nations before the end shall come. It is the responsibility of the world to accept the message which we have for them. To them it becomes as a savor of life unto life or of death unto death. On this point I will read to you from the Book of Mormon as follows:

"Therefore, wo be unto the Gentiles if it so be that they harden their hearts against the Lamb of God. For the time cometh, saith the Lamb of God, that I will work a great and a marvelous work among the children of men; a work which shall be everlasting, either on the one hand or on the other—either to the convincing of them unto peace and life eternal, or unto the deliverance of them to the hardness of their hearts and the blindness of their minds unto their being brought down into captivity, and also into destruction, both temporally and spiritually, according to the captivity of the devil, of which I have spoken."—I Nephi 14:6, 7.

MANY LACK COURAGE TO JOIN THE CHURCH

There are thousands of people within the stakes of Zion, and in the world, who have become convinced of the truth of "Mormonism" but who, for one cause or another, have not become members of the Church.

A short time ago, I heard of a man joining the Church who had lived among our people for nearly forty years. He stated to some of his friends that he had for many years been a "Mormon" at heart. When asked why he had not earlier joined the Church, his reply was that he lacked the courage. This represents a class of which there are many. Some who believe do not join because of the cost, others because of what people would think and say, and still others because the standards of the Church are too high.

Some years ago while in England I was visiting a family of Saints, and an elderly sister was telling me how she, and her husband recently deceased, had, during his life time, entertained a great many Latter-day Saint missionaries. I asked how she accounted for the fact that under such circumstances her husband had never joined the Church. Her reply was that he had never been invited to join. I wonder if there are those among us who are Latter-day Saints at heart but are waiting for an invitation to become members. We invite all men to repent and yield obedience unto the laws and ordinances of the gospel that the atoning blood of our Savior may wash them clean and prepare them for salvation.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR BECOMING A MEMBER OF THE CHURCH

As qualifications for baptism into the Church, I will read to you a paragraph from the Doctrine and Covenants as follows:

"And again, by way of commandment to the Church concerning the manner of baptism—All those who humble themselves before God, and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the Church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into the Church."

The gospel is the law of life as lived by the Savior. It made him what he was and is, and it is designed to make us like him and to save us with him. It is the highest possible standard of life—the straight gate and the narrow way.

When the rich young man came to the Savior and asked what good thing he might do that he might have eternal life, he was told to go sell what he had, and give to the poor, and come follow him of whom it was said that he had nowhere to lay his head. We are told that the rich man went away sorrowful; and the Savior said: "A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." On another occasion the Savior made use of this expression: "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

Those who embrace the gospel have as their object the obtaining of eternal life, which is the greatest gift of God to man. No sacrifice should be considered too great in order to attain eternal life, and there is no other way to obtain it.

THE SPEAKER'S TESTIMONY

As a witness for the Lord, I testify that God the eternal Father lives, an immortal and glorified being, after whose image and likeness man is created and made, male and female, being born sons and daughters of God. He is a being having a body of flesh and bones and spirit. He has created all things through his Son Jesus Christ. The earth is his, and the fulness thereof, and all blessings, spiritual and temporal, come from him.

I also testify that Jesus Christ is the Son of God the eternal Father, that he is the first born of the Father in the spirit, and the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, that he is the Savior and Redeemer of the world, that he was scourged and crucified, and that he died and was resurrected and ascended to heaven where he sits upon the throne of the Father at his right hand in glory. I know that my Redeemer lives.

I bear testimony also that I do know that Joseph Smith, the founder of this work, was a divinely inspired prophet of God, and that those who have succeeded to the Presidency of this Church, each in his time, has been inspired of the Lord for his particular work and responsibility; that President Heber J. Grant, no less than his predecessors, is inspired of the Lord, and under his presidency the work is prospering and is becoming more and more a marvel and a wonder to the world. It is the work of God and not the work of man, and no power can stay its progress. The purposes of the Almighty will be accomplished, and all who will, shall be saved, and all honor be to the Father through his son Jesus Christ, our Lord and Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

Of the First Council of Seventy

I hope I may enjoy the favor of the Lord while I stand before you here this day. I rejoice in the testimony of the gospel that has been restored to the earth through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

When Nephi, one of the ancient prophets, began his historical record he used these words by way of introduction: "Having been born of goodly parents," and thereby he made it plain that he honored his parents—his father and his mother. He deemed it a blessing to him that he had thus been favorably born into this world. And I wonder how far the sons and daughters of Zion appreciate the wonderful advantage that has come to them by having been born of goodly parents.

In the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association they have adopted as their slogan for this year the commandment: "Honor thy father and thy mother." To what extent are the children of the Latter-day Saints obeying that commandment, that commandment which God wrote with his own finger upon the tablets of stone, and which was delivered by the prophet Moses unto the children of Israel, the descendants of Jacob, the son of Isaac who was the son of Abraham—the children of Israel, whom God loved and designated as his very own, the chosen people of God? We, who have embraced the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ are the children of Abraham. What a splendid heritage and advantage it is to come through that noble lineage.

How do we know that we are of Israel? It is the blood of Israel that recognizes the voice of the true Shepherd: "My sheep hear my voice and follow after me but a stranger they will not follow," said the Savior of old. It has been declared by the Prophets of God, it has been sealed upon our heads by the patriarchs when we received our patriarchal blessings. Our lineage has been declared by the inspiration of the Lord to his servants the Patriarchs, and that we have believed in the gospel is further evidence of that fact. Why should the believers come through that lineage? I believe with all my soul that in our pre-existent state we were chosen to come through that lineage because of our fidelity in the world before this one, in our first estate, and the advantages that have come to us, who have accepted the word of the Lord and who have received the testimony of the truth of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, have come to us because of our fidelity and faithfulness to the will of God before the foundations of this earth were laid. Abraham was among the great and mighty ones in that primeval day, when the great plan of life and salvation was first proclaimed to the children of God, the day that we read about in the scriptures, "when the stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy."

It is to that day that I now refer, when Abraham was known to God as one of the great and noble ones; and when he came upon the earth the Lord still loved him and gave him a marvelous promise, and told him that through him and his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed. We now live in a day when the descendants of that great patriarch are being gathered into the fold of Christ. We belong to one of the branches of that great family. Abraham had a son who was a son of promise, Isaac. Isaac had a son whom they called Jacob, and Jacob's name was changed to Israel, and from him came the twelve tribes of Israel. One of these tribes was the tribe of Joseph. It is through this lineage that the Latter-day Saints have come. Do we appreciate the wonderful privilege that comes to us by having been born of these goodly parents, that we have inherited from them that faith that enables us to accept the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ? No matter to what extent that posterity may have been scattered throughout the nations of the earth, it is through this lineage that the truth shall be accepted and preserved and heralded in the earth. It has been through that lineage that the scriptures have been handed down from generation to generation, that the knowledge of the true and living God has been preserved among mankind, and it is through that lineage that the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ shall be promulgated among all the nations of the earth, and every nation, kindred, tongue and people shall be blessed through the seed of Abraham in fulfilment of the promise that was made by God unto that great man. I hope it will not sound egotistical if I declare, in the language of the poet, that indeed

"We are the true-born sons of Ephraim,
Who, with us, that can compare?
We are of the royal house of Joseph,
That bright and glorious morning star."

This is our declaration, and we have been sounding it for many years past. It is written in our very souls. The House of Israel is being gathered from the nations of the earth, and we, being the children of Abraham, have a wonderful obligation resting upon us to see that all nations are blessed through our being and coming of these goodly parents. It should, however, be remembered that God is no respecter of persons and therefore the gospel must be preached to every creature and those that believe and obey it shall be saved and furthermore those who reject it, even though they may be of Israel's blood, will surely have to take the consequences.

I rejoice today that I have been born of goodly parents, that I have been born under the new and everlasting covenant. I rejoice in the work that is being accomplished by the Latter-day Saints in the building of these great temples wherein work may be performed for the living and for the dead; and while I remember those who immediately are responsible for my birth upon this earth, my heart goes back throughout the generations that have passed, and gone, until I connect and link myself up with the great household of God through Abraham his servant, and I believe with all my soul that there must be a welding link between each of us and those that have gone before until we shall indeed become members of that wonderful family that was chosen in that primeval day to come through his lineage, through the lineage of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. This is the heritage of the Latter-day Saints, and our destiny is to fulfil these obligations, to carry the gospel to all the inhabitants of the earth, that they may hear the truth, and that the honest in heart among every nation shall be gathered into the fold of Christ and brought under the new and everlasting covenant which is the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that the family may be united in that welding link that shall connect us, for without them we cannot be saved, and without us neither can they be saved; and it is essential that this work shall go on. For what man or what woman would rejoice or be happy if he could not be associated with his own kindred? What man or what woman would feel that he was enjoying a blessing in the world to come if it were not in the association of his father and his mother? What parent could possibly feel that heaven would be heaven to him unless he could be associated there with his own children? What is true of these immediate connections is true of those that have gone on before. Our fathers and our mothers would never be happy nor feel that they could be exalted and saved in the kingdom of God unless they could be associated with their fathers and their mothers. And so it will be until we connect ourselves and reunite in that one great family, the family of God, united together with that welding link under the new and everlasting covenant.

May we appreciate our heritage and the blessings that have come to us by having been born of these goodly parents, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

The audience has no doubt noticed the absence of President Charles W. Penrose. Brother Penrose was taken very sick a little over a week ago, but I am pleased to announce that he is very much better, that he intended to come here today, but we felt it was much better for him to rest today and tomorrow, and we hope that he may be with us on Sunday.

The choir and congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel, our only delight."

Benediction was pronounced by M. Howard Randall, president of the Morgan stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., Saturday.

SECOND DAY

MORNING SESSION

Promptly at 10 o'clock Saturday, October 4, 1924, President Heber J. Grant opened the meeting by announcing that the congregation would sing, "High on the mountain top."

After singing, Elder William M. Waddoups, President of the Hawaiian Temple, offered the opening prayer.

Eva Aird sang a solo entitled, "The Hour of Hallowed Peace."

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

Truly those who are assembled in this house this morning have reason to be grateful for the blessings by which we are surrounded. A more beautiful morning could hardly be desired, and the weather conditions are so delightful, that we must all feel uplifted. The privilege we have of meeting our friends from all parts of the Church is a blessing that I am sure is greatly appreciated.

OUR DUTY TO ASSIST IN PERPETUATING LIBERTY

In this day when strife is everywhere apparent, when there is contention between individuals of various parties, it is pleasing to me as a member of the Church to know that our heavenly Father is interested in us, and in our government. We are fortunate in having our agency. The Lord has blessed each of us with intellect and has offered to direct our thoughts if we will approach him in a proper manner. The mind of man is affected by good and by evil influences, and there are in the world those two powers that have been active from the beginning. Knowing that we may be directed by proper influences as members of this great Church, and as citizens of this wonderful government, surely we will not depart from the advice and counsel of our heavenly Father and follow those teachings that will lead us to destruction. Knowing that the Lord prepared this land that it might be a haven of liberty for those who dwell here, and understanding that he desires a continuation of those conditions that the builders of this republic contended for, we who are members of his Church ought, in every possible way, to assist in perpetuating that liberty that means so much for the children of men.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL LAW OF THE LAND TO BE SUPPORTED

We find in the Doctrine and Covenants that the Lord gave to his people a revelation on August 6, 1833, (Doc. and Cov. 98.) That seems to me has a bearing on conditions as they exist in our country today:

"Verily I say unto you my friends, fear not, let your hearts be comforted; yea, rejoice evermore, and in everything give thanks;

"Waiting patiently on the Lord, for your prayers have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and are recorded with this seal and testament—the Lord hath sworn and decreed that they shall be granted.

"Therefore, he giveth this promise unto you, with an immutable covenant that they shall be fulfilled; and all things wherewith you have been afflicted shall work together for your good, and to my name's glory, saith the Lord."

When that revelation was given, our people were being harassed and annoyed by those who did not accept the revelations of the Lord to us, and their lives were made almost intolerable by their fellow citizens, but they claimed the blessings of our heavenly Father, and in this revelation he assured them that their prayers had been answered, and that the fulfilment of his promise to them for their faithfulness would be certain. They at that time were living at Kirtland, Ohio, where the first temple was erected in this dispensation, to the glory of our heavenly Father. He said to them regarding the laws of the land:

"And now, verily I say unto you concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them.

"And that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me.

"Therefore, I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my Church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land;

"And as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than this cometh of evil."

In other words, if we fail to sustain the constitutional law of the land we have transgressed the will of our heavenly Father.

"I, the Lord God, make you free, therefore ye are free indeed; and the law also maketh you free.

"Nevertheless, when the wicked rule the people mourn.

"Wherefore, honest men and wise men should be sought for diligently, and good men and wise men ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these cometh of evil."

WE SHOULD NOT BE LED ASTRAY BY FALLACIES

In these days of confusion, when the Constitution of our country is assailed, by those who have no understanding of the purpose of God regarding this great country, it behooves those who do understand to consider seriously and faithfully, the benefits that will flow to us by honoring and sustaining the government that was reared under the direction of our heavenly Father.

We are a peculiar people in many ways, and in this particularly are we peculiar, in that we believe that the constitution of the United States was inspired by our heavenly Father, and he has told us that he raised up the very men who should frame the Constitution of the United States. Knowing that, we should not be led astray by the fallacies of individuals whose selfishness inclines them to attack that which our heavenly Father has prepared for the people of this land.

A DECLARATION OF BELIEF REGARDING GOVERNMENTS AND LAWS IN GENERAL

In a very early day in the Church our people promulgated their attitude with reference to the law of the land and the purpose of government. I believe I will take time this morning to read it to you. It is found in the Doc. and Cov., sec. 134; and in the History of the Church, Vol. 2, p. 247:

"A declaration of belief regarding governments and laws in general, adopted by a unanimous vote at a general assembly of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, held at Kirtland, Ohio, August 17, 1835, with the following preamble: That our belief with regard to earthly governments and laws in general may not be misinterpreted nor misunderstood, we have thought proper to present at the close of this volume our opinion concerning the same."

And this is what our people subscribed to in conference assembled:

"We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man; and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, both in making laws and administering them, for the good and safety of society.

"We believe that no government can exist in peace, except such laws are framed and held inviolate as will secure to each individual the free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property, and the protection of life.

"We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same; and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people if a republic, or the will of the sovereign.

"We believe that religion is instituted of God; and that men are amenable to him, and to him only, for the exercise of it, unless their religious opinions prompt them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; but we do not believe that human law has a right to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the conscience of men, nor dictate forms for public or private devotion; that the civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control conscience; should punish guilt, but never suppress the freedom of the soul.

"We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments; and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as in their own judgments are best calculated to secure the public interest; at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience.

"We believe that every man should be honored in his station, rulers and magistrates as such, being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror; human laws being instituted for the express purpose of regulating our interests as individuals and nations, between man and man; and divine laws given of heaven, prescribing rules on spiritual concerns, for faith and worship, both to be answered by man to his Maker.

"We believe that rulers, states, and governments have a right, and are bound to enact laws for the protection of all citizens in the free exercise of their religious belief; but we do not believe that they have a right in justice to deprive citizens of this privilege, or proscribe them in their opinions, so long as a regard and reverence are shown to the laws and such religious opinions do not justify sedition nor conspiracy.

"We believe that the commission of crime should be punished according to the nature of the offense; that murder, treason, robbery, theft, and the breach of the general peace, in all respects, should be punished according to their criminality and their tendency to evil among men, by the laws of that government in which the offense is committed; and for the public peace and tranquility all men should step forward and use their ability in bringing offenders against good laws to punishment.

"We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied.

"We believe that all religious societies have a right to deal with their members for disorderly conduct, according to the rules and regulations of such societies; provided that such dealings be for fellowship and good standing; but we do not believe that any religious society has authority to try men on the right of property or life, to take from them this world's goods, or to put them in jeopardy of either life or limb, or to inflict any physical punishment upon them. They can only excommunicate them from their society, and withdraw from them their fellowship.

"We believe that men should appeal to the civil law for redress of all wrongs and grievances, where personal abuse is inflicted or the right of property or character infringed, where such laws exist as will protect the same; but we believe that all men are justified in defending themselves, their friends, and property, and the government, from the unlawful assaults and encroachments of all persons in times of exigency, where immediate appeal cannot be made to the laws, and relief afforded.

"We believe it just to preach the gospel to the nations of the earth, and warn the righteous to save themselves from the corruption of the world; but we do not believe it right to interfere with bond-servants, neither preach the gospel to, nor baptize them contrary to the will and wish of their masters, nor to meddle with or influence them in the least to cause them to be dissatisfied with their situations in this life, thereby jeopardizing the lives of men; such interference we believe to be unlawful and unjust, and dangerous to the peace of every government allowing human beings to be held in servitude."

NO ONE A GOOD MEMBER OF THE CHURCH WHO REFUSES TO SUSTAIN THE LAW OF THE LAND

I felt that on this occasion, and at this time, when there is so much unrest in our land, that I would like to read to you what our people conceived to be their duty to the government under which they lived. We still believe that there is only one way whereby we may enjoy peace and happiness, and that is by observing the constitutional law of our land, and by sustaining that constitutional law that was inspired by our heavenly Father at the inception of this great government. There are those who are misguided in the belief that they may organize groups and take into their own hands the punishment of those who have differed from them in their ideas of religion or government. We may well understand that men who do that come in conflict with the orderly system that our heavenly Father has decreed should govern the children of men. So, as Latter-day Saints in these times of unrest we may know that no man is a faithful member of this Church, in good standing, who refuses to sustain the law of the land, and who lends himself in any way to break down that organized system of laws that has been prepared for the good of the community. The Lord directs that we seek after good men and great men, and that we pray for and sustain them in order that the laws that are enacted for our government may be such as he would be pleased to indorse. This people may go on exercising a power for the blessing of the children of men in this land that will be felt from shore to shore, and from border line to border line. I am grateful that I belong to a Church that has been directed by our heavenly Father to observe the constitutional law of the land. I am grateful that those men who have led this Church have been inspired by the Lord to teach obedience to law. I am thankful that on the eve of a great election, when we are to choose those who will preside over the destinies of the nation and the states, that we have the word of our heavenly Father that we should select good men, and honorable men, and that the franchise that we are blessed with shall be exercised in the interest of orderly government, and in the interest of the perpetuation of a system of laws that shall continue peace and contentment and satisfaction to all who dwell in this land.

THANKFUL FOR THE BLESSINGS OF LIBERTY

This is God's work that we are identified with. He has established his Church in this latter day. He has blessed us with the opportunity to seek him in prayer, and, if we are humble, he will lead us to do those things that will make for righteousness and for contentment in life. Today, let us feel as we go from this delightful conference that we will draw near unto the Lord, that we will honor him and honor the Government that he has prepared for us, under which we live and in which he have part in protecting.

This Church is our Father's work. It is the advocate of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and this government is established by the will of Jesus Christ and is a part of his plan whereby men may enjoy liberty and freedom, and where all faiths and beliefs and doctrines may enjoy liberty and be amenable to the law of the land; and where no group of individuals may array themselves against the rights and privileges of their fellows. I thank my Father in heaven for the knowledge that he loves liberty. I thank him for the blessings that he has given to us of peace and happiness in these everlasting hills. I am grateful for my companionship with men and women such as are assembled here today, and such as you represent throughout this great land. That the Lord may help us that we may be worthy of our birthright, that we may live such pure and holy lives that the adversary will have no power to tempt us, or direct us into evil paths, and that we may listen to the whisperings of that still small voice, to which all good men are entitled, and know that voice when it shall come to us, for it will point us the way of peace and happiness and eternal life, is my prayer, and that God may grant it to us all, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN WELLS

Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church

I have listened with a great deal of pleasure and appreciation to the remarks that have been made yesterday and today. They have been a source of joy to my soul, and I appreciate most sincerely this opportunity of being present to listen to the words of life, of counsel, and of advice that have been given already and will yet be given during this conference.

This vast congregation is unique. It is composed not of delegates whose expenses have been paid by organizations that they might come to attend these sessions, but is made up of Latter-day Saints who of their own free will have assembled in this great building for the purpose of worshipping God and for the purpose of being blessed and inspired by truth and a fuller understanding of the Gospel. They have assembled from places all the way between Canada and Mexico, as far southeast as Georgia, northeast up to New York and vicinity, from Chicago and from such western states as California, and from points as far west as the Hawaiian Islands. They have gathered here for the purpose of listening to words of inspiration and of being encouraged in their holy faith. So, in that respect, this gathering is unique; and I am thankful and glad that I am privileged to be one who is here.

While Brother George Albert Smith was speaking I thought to myself, "What more am I thankful for than those things which he has expressed this morning?" I am thankful, as I believe we all are, for the blessings of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; for the kind and tender mercy of our Father in heaven in giving us the privilege in these latter days of hearing and embracing the truth, as revealed from our heavenly Father to his servant the Prophet Joseph. I am thankful, and I think that we all are thankful, for this goodly land, for this land choice above all other lands, protected by two mighty oceans from Old World hatreds and feuds, this land where there can be developed the highest civilization the world has yet seen. I am thankful that the Lord has so abundantly blessed his people. Though adversity brought that Pioneer band here, he himself placed them in the center of this great country, in the valleys of these great mountain ranges, where wealth and peace and comfort prevail; and how different we find the world to be when we leave these vales and these peaceful towns and villages of the Latter-day Saints, and how glad we are to get back again. I am thankful that the Lord has reserved this land as the place in which his mighty purposes were to be brought about, that the Gospel was restored in a land where liberty prevails. These happenings were not haphazard; they did not come by chance. The Prophet Nephi saw in vision the very man who would discover this land and prepare the way for the coming of the great stream of the House of Israel into this country, which has been occupied, and is still being occupied and deve'oped, by that mighty race of Israelites scattered as they were years ago, and remaining so until the sound of the Gospel message came to them.

I am thankful, too, for the peace that prevails among us as Latter-day Saints; for the happiness and comfort which abide about us; for the well-fed and well-clothed people; for the comfortable homes and beautiful surroundings of the farms and the property which the Lord has permitted us to acquire that we might use it to his honor and glory. It was with joy, too, that I heard this morning the reading of the statement made by the Prophet Joseph concerning our rights and privileges; and I am thankful that among the fruits of the Gospel is the demonstration that people can live in harmony and in peace. While one Latter-day Saint committing a felony would be one too many, yet there is no community in this world where less crime is committed and where there is less need for courts of justice and order than in the communities where our people are thickly settled. Such are the results of obedience to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and I am indeed thankful for it.

Another thought concerning the progress and development of the work of God: The Lord has given us the light of the Gospel, and a part of the responsibility of continuing his great work rests upon us. As I said to Bishop Nibley this morning, the Lord has placed upon the Latter-day Saints three great duties. One is that they shall save themselves; another, that they shall warn the world; and the third, that they shall redeem their dead; and nearly all we do in this Church is fundamentally based on one or more of these three propositions.

I have been thinking concerning our personal salvation, the development of our spiritual life, increased devotion to duty in our wards and stakes, the higher and better family life; for after all family life is the basis of all the development of this Church. We are an aggregate of families organized into branches and wards and stakes and missions, and we need development in the home, the basis of all our growth and improvement. I would like to see scripture reading in the homes, and family prayers carefully attended to, that the spirit and idealism of the Gospel of Jesus Christ might be instilled into us in the home, for that is where we will save ourselves and our children. In this Church the Lord has placed the priesthood to act as his agents, that whatever they perform, in righteousness and under the proper direction, will be binding on this earth and in the heavens. This priesthood has been graded into various orders, each with very specific and well-defined duties, and the Lord called and appointed two of the orders of this priesthood for the very purpose of looking after the home life of the community. The Lord shows this in Section 20, that famous and wonderful revelation given a short time before the Church was organized, and he placed upon the priests and teachers these duties:

"The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, "And visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret and attend to all family duties. * * *

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them:

"And see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other, neither lying, back-biting, nor evil speaking;

"And see that the church meet together often, and also see that all members do their duty."

The Lord did not intend that it should be left entirely with the priests and teachers. In section 107, he says:

"High priests after the order of the Melchizedek Priesthood have a right to officiate in their own standing, under the direction of the presidency, in administering spiritual things, and also in the office of an elder, priest (of the Levitical order), teacher, deacon, and member."

So, it is plain that the Lord has placed some responsibility upon every Latter-day Saint holding the Priesthood, and one of the greatest of these responsibilities I have just mentioned, that of developing the spiritual life of the Latter-day Saints; and it is a privilege to be called by the bishopric of a ward to labor in the ministry over a few families, to visit with them, to teach them, as the Lord says, and to be their counselors. It is an opportunity that comes to but few. It is the only organization in the Church by which the Lord has provided that those laboring in it shall go into the homes and teach the Saints their duties. I believe, my brethren and sisters, that we should take seriously our duties in this respect, feeling the weight of responsibility and realizing that the spiritual development of this Church, the upbuilding of family life, and the guiding and training of the youth of Zion depend so largely on the twenty thousand men and boys who are laboring in the ministry as Ward Teachers.

I believe the time has come when the young men called to hold the offices of priest and teacher should accompany older men, and I believe that these older men should be responsible for the spiritual training of the boys placed in their charge. This reminds me of the incident I have heard our President tell concerning that rugged Scotchman, Hamilton G. Park, a man whom I loved and revered, for I lived in the same stake as did he and learned to know and appreciate him. President Grant was called to labor as a teacher with Brother Park, and the President has often told of the times they have gone visiting together to the homes of the Saints in the Twelfth-Thirteenth ward, of the inspiration and encouragement he has received from that staunch Latter-day Saint who never deviated from his duty, Hamilton G. Park.

That same opportunity of helping to train the youth of Zion comes to you and to me, my brethren and sisters. I believe we would be derelict in our duty if, when young boys are called to labor with us older men, we did not instil into their hearts by testimony, by good conduct, by righteous living, a love of the Gospel, and a love of truth, so that they will be able to say, as President Grant has said about Hamilton G. Park, that we have been a source of encouragement and inspiration to them.

I believe that the development of this Church in the stakes and wards will evolve largely around the home. You remember that a lawyer sent to the Lord at one time and said to him: "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" and the Lord told him: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." There must grow among the Latter-day Saints a greater love and spirit of neighborliness among us; a co-operative spirit, with a desire to help one another in commercial and in other forms of business life; a willingness to be kind and considerate and helpful to our neighbors. This spirit prevails among us to a greater degree than anywhere else in the world. Every Latter-day Saint has need for the faith and help of his neighbors. Their lives and our lives will be benefited by their good conduct and by ours.

So I appeal to my brethren and sisters that we go home with the determination that our home life shall improve where necessary; that our spiritual life shall be developed through laboring in the ministry; that we will serve the Lord with all our hearts, with all our might, with all our minds, and with all our strength, that his great work may grow, that it may never be said of us that if we had been better men and women the work of the Lord might have progressed just a little faster.

The Lord bless you and me and help us to appreciate the opportunities of today. The Lord bless us with a desire that we make the best use of today. Yesterday has gone; tomorrow we may never see. May we grasp our opportunities and make the most of them, so that our Father may say to us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The Lord bless us, and help us to keep these facts and ideals before us all the days of our lives, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

Of the First Council of Seventy, and President of the California Mission

It is a very great privilege, my brethren and sisters, to be present in this great conference of the Latter-day Saints. It is a great privilege also to have the opportunity of occupying a few moments in this session of the conference. I have rejoiced very greatly in listening to the instructions that have been imparted, and in partaking of the spirit of the testimonies that have been borne from the lips of the Lord's servants who have been called to address the people. I am happy in the work that has been allotted to me to labor as a missionary in the California mission, and I am glad to say that my companions in that mission, as a rule, are at the present time in the enjoyment of good health. They manifest an anxious desire to magnify their callings and discharge the responsibilities that have been placed upon them by virtue of their appointment as missionaries and representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The missionaries are very largely young men and young women who have not had very much experience in Church responsibility. It is, however, universal that when they come to the mission headquarters, they come with a full determination to try to play the part that may be allotted to them to the very best of their ability. They are ready and willing to go wherever they may be appointed; and it has been a source of constant wonder to note the manner in which they come to understand the principles and doctrines of the gospel, and acquire the ability to expound them. It has been a source of very great joy to me to be associated with the missionaries of the California mission, and I am sure that their hearts are touched and pricked by the power of God, and that they do believe, with just as great fervency as their fathers and mothers believe, in the truth of the restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We try to encourage men and women to believe that the Lord our God, as has been declared during these services, has manifested himself again to the children of men, that he has revealed anew the doctrines of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that he has conferred upon men, by the sending of holy angels from his presence, the authority that is necessary not only to expound understandingly, but to administer legally and properly the saving ordinances of the gospel. We try to impress upon the minds of these young missionaries that without that divine authority that was bestowed upon the head of the Prophet Joseph Smith, at the opening of this dispensation, there cannot be any salvation. Salvation is obtained through obedience to the doctrines of the gospel, and no man can teach those doctrines and administer those ordinances, except he be called of God as the Scriptures teach. We try to impress upon them the truth of the doctrine set forth by one of the old prophets when he made the statement that we must go to the law and to the testimony, and if we speak not according to that word there is no light in us. I believe, and I am satisfied my companions believe, and the Latter-day Saints who reside in the mission believe, that there has been committed to this people a great and important message, and that that message has been committed to them in fulfilment of the promises made by the Lord our God long ago. For our Father in heaven declared by the mouths of holy prophets, in ages long gone by, that in the latter days the Lord God of heaven would set his hand to accomplish a marvelous work and a wonder. He declared that truth by the mouth of the Prophet Daniel when the king's dream was interpreted, and he declared that the dream was certain and the interpretation thereof was sure. We believe therefore we are to go to the law and to the testimony to discover the will of God and the doctrines of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

While we find many people in the mission who profess to be believers in the law of God, and who apparently are quite sincere when they make such declarations, we discover that when we read from the law of the gospel and the doctrines that were taught by the Redeemer of the world and his apostles whom he commissioned to teach the inhabitants of the earth, that they do not believe, as they claim to believe, in the messages found in the holy scriptures. We believe that we place in the hands of all men the key to prove the falsity of the religion we are representing, if it be not true, from the fact that we say that it is the old gospel restored anew; and the inhabitants of the earth have in their hands the record that contains the doctrines of that gospel, as they were taught by an inspired ministry in the meridian of time. And I am happy to say that it is not the experience of the missionaries in the California mission that men come to them with the word of God in their hands, and call to their attention doctrines that are being taught that are not in harmony with the law of the Lord.

We believe and teach that there is but one gospel; and that seems at times not to be very palatable to many people with whom we come in contact. It seems popular in the feelings of men and women today to feel that there are many systems of religion which will carry them back into the presence of God, to be approved; and we do not feel that it is our privilege to delude people with any intimation that if they will continue in good living, being good citizens and good neighbors, all will be well in the life to come! We do feel that responsibility rests upon us to bear testimony to the things that the Lord our God hath wrought—and that is, the restoration of the authority to speak in the name of Jesus Christ. When we speak by that authority we teach only the doctrines that have been given by the Redeemer of the world by which men are to be saved. We feel in our hearts that, "we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." We are under obligation to our Father in heaven, and to his Church here upon the earth, to expound those doctrines and to declare to the inhabitants of the earth that there is but one gospel, and that, though we or an angel from heaven or representatives from any religious denomination on the face of the earth, preach not the doctrine and the gospel that was taught by the ancient apostles, the curse of God will be upon us. We believe, my brethren and sisters, that the beginning of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is just as it is declared by St. Mark, that the forerunner of the Lord Jesus Christ taught the beginning of that gospel, when he taught men the gospel of repentance and the gospel of baptism for the remission of sins. We believe that in this age of the world, just as in that age of the world, men reject the counsel of God against themselves, not being willing to receive the principle and ordinance, given by the Lord our God, that initiates them into the Kingdom of God and that makes them members of the Church of Christ.

You know that, in the gospel according to St. Luke, the declaration is made that the people who would not receive the ordinance of baptism, that was being administered to the people by John the Baptist, rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not thus baptized. We are trying to impress upon the minds of the people that there is necessity in this age of the world to hearken to those doctrines, and that it is of the greatest importance that they shall put away from them the follies in which men have believed and in which they are believing today, and that they shall receive the truth which has been made manifest by the revelations of the Lord our God. We are trying to convince men that the authority of which we speak has always been essential and necessary in the accomplishment of the purposes of our Father in heaven. Whenever God has had a message for the inhabitants of the earth he has raised up men who have been clothed with power from on high and who have been commissioned by the voice and commandment of God to carry to the children of men the message that the Lord has for them. God has always operated through his chosen servants, and by them he has made known his will to the peoples of the earth in all past dispensations.

We are trying to convince men and women of the truth and the fulfilment of the promise made by the Almighty through the lips of an inspired apostle regarding a great event in the latter time—for so he did promise. The angel told John, "Come up hither and I will show thee things that shall be hereafter"—not things that were transpiring then, in the meridian of time, but things of importance that would transpire in the future history of the world. So says the law of God, the law and the testimony. We invite men, whatever their religious persuasions may be, or whatever their expectations may be, to remember that if they speak not according to the law and to the testimony it is because there is no light in them, and the law and the testimony given by God through the mouth of an inspired Apostle is that in the latter times another angel should "fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." So says the law. Let who will dispute it, let who will denounce it, and oppose it, it is the law and word of God, and we are under obligation and responsibility, in this great dispensation of the fulness of times, to bear witness that God is true and that the promises that have been made by him in ancient times, through his inspired ministry, are being fulfilled; and to bear record that the very heavens and the earth may pass away but the promise of God in relation to the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the latter times cannot pass away without fulfilment.

We are joyful in bearing witness, wherever we have opportunity, that we have been made acquainted with that message, thus revealed, and that the angel, promised by the Lord our God, has come to the earth; and upon the head of the Prophet Joseph, by holy beings, the authority and power and the commandment and direction of the Lord our God were given for the establishment of the great work to which we have given our allegiance. We call men's attention to the manner in which this work was introduced by an innocent boy falling upon his knees and pleading with the Lord for information, that his soul might be saved. Who is there that can find fault with the boy appealing to God in this manner, and the answer that was given of our Father in heaven? Men do not believe it, but we not only believe, but we know, that in answer to that prayer our Father in heaven and our Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ, made answer, and made the declaration that the time had come, that was spoken of by the holy prophets, in relation to the work of the latter times. That knowledge has come into our souls. It has gladdened our hearts. It has filled us with a desire and a determination to clear our skirts of the blood of all men, and to bear witness that God has sent his hand to accomplish that work, and that the work will be accomplished. May the Lord God help us to play our part therein, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church

I am thankful this morning, my brethren and sisters, in having this opportunity of meeting with you in conference, in having fellowship with you and with these my brethren whose lives are devoted to the service of the Lord. I rejoice in the opportunity I have of laboring with you and of trying in my humble way to further the cause of the Lord. I sincerely pray that while I shall stand before you this morning he will bless and strengthen me that I may speak words of counsel and bear testimony to you of his goodness which will be acceptable unto him.

Many good things have been said to us during this conference thus far. I was thinking this morning, and I have been thinking for a number of weeks, in the few moments I have had when I could think of things other than those things which come to us in the regular course of business—I have tried to think of something that would be well to say to this congregation. I have gone home weary at night, after having had a strenuous day, and upon awaking in the morning, I have thought and read and studied, and I have been bewildered in the thought of approaching this task. Not that the task is burdensome to me, but that, as I serve, the field of service opens up so broad and appears to me so big, I wonder if I will ever be equal to it!

When Brother George Albert Smith was speaking of the government of the United States, my mind turned to the government of the Church. How well has God provided for the government of his Church, and for the training of his children. My particular duty in the Church does not take me especially to the outsiders; that is, to those who do not believe as I believe; but my labor is more particularly with the members of the Church, the Lesser Priesthood, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance, and baptism, by immersion, for the remission of sins. One of the first commandments given by God to Adam was that he be baptized and that he teach his children to be baptized. Adam asked: "Why is it that men should be baptized?" and the Lord's answer was that, "all men must repent and be baptized by immersion for the remission of sins in the name of mine Only Begotten, the only name under heaven by which man might be saved."

This preparatory gospel is the field of service in which I am called to labor, and I rejoice in it. As I labor, from day to day, I see in it great responsibility. I wonder sometimes if we who hold the Priesthood of the living God fully realize what it means to us to be so blessed. I recall that so far as we have record, this Lesser Priesthood was held anciently only by mature men. In the beginning of the Church this Priesthood was conferred upon men, but the Lord to my mind has clearly shown that it was not intended that it should be held only by mature men, but its real purpose, to my mind, is to prepare men for service in this Church. Men who enter the Church in their mature years should gain their experience through the Lesser Priesthood. Boys who are just entering into their ministry should gain their experience through this Priesthood, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel. You will recall that the keys of the ministering of angels are given to prepare for service. It is a preparatory work. This is clearly shown in section 20 of the Doctrine and Covenants, in which the Lord has defined the duties of the Priesthood. The Priest's especial duty it is to be with the Church—and I take it where the Lord said, "to be with the Church," he meant those who are faithful, those who are diligent, those who are humble and striving earnestly to keep the commandments of God. The duty of the Priest is to be with them, to preach, teach, expound, exhort and baptize, and to see that they pray vocally and in secret. The duty of the Teacher is to be with the Church; not those who are indifferent, not those who are antagonistic, but those who have faith in God and desire to help their fellowmen in their desire to learn of God and his purposes. In this office, the duty is to see that there is no iniquity in the Church, no evil speaking, no backbiting or fault-finding, but to see that the members meet together often and do their duty. The duty of the Deacon is to assist the Teacher and the Priest when—ever occasion requires. To me, my brethren and sisters, that means this: Although in the beginning this Priesthood was conferred upon mature men, to my mind it has been given for the purpose of developing young men, or boys, as they grow and begin to gain knowledge, which knowledge is only of value to them as they can make use of it through service.

So I take it, the Lord intended that in the Church, when fully established, young men should have opportunity to serve along with the older men. So it has been decided by his servants that young men might have this opportunity. The Deacons are ordained in their tender years; no fixed time in which they should be ordained. This should be measured by their ability to serve, and their desire to serve, that they may gain experience in this work, this ministry in which outward ordinances are the field of labor. They are put to work passing the sacrament, running errands, acting as messengers doing a hundred and one things they can do, to help impress upon them the importance of service, and the importance of their position in the Church. After a few years of such service, under proper guidance, they step into the next field of labor, that of the teacher, where it is their duty to see that there is no iniquity, no evil-speaking, backbiting, or fault-finding. Can you conceive of any work that might come into the life of a boy at the age of fourteen or fifteen years that will bring to him greater protection than to have a knowledge of the fact that it is his duty to help keep the Church clean spiritually and physically?

And I take it, it is his duty at this age to visit the homes of the members, for his duty is with the Church, those who sympathize with him and know something of his problems, and have a desire to help him in his struggle in life. Think what it would mean to him to enter the homes of the members of the Church to teach these things, and in return receive the blessings of the members of these households. Then, after years of service in this work, under the guiding hand of wise men, he steps into the office of Priest where he learns to preach, teach, expound and exhort, not among those who are unfriendly and who do not believe as he believes, but among those who sympathize with him, those who realize, to a certain extent, the task that is before him and those who, guided by the Spirit of God, reach out a helping hand to lift him over that rugged road and help place him firmly upon his feet in the service of God.

This is a work, my brethren and sisters, depending upon no one individual, every one who holds the Priesthood and all who hold the Priesthood combining together in service to carry on the work of the Lord. This is a wonderful opportunity we have, and I am wondering if there isn't more we can do unitedly to carry on this great work of the Lord, to see to it that the young men in the Church are better prepared for the ministry when the time shall come for them to be called to go into the world to preach to those who are unfriendly and do not believe as we believe. Let me call your attention to a parable given to us by the Savior:

"And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

"Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.

"And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants.

"And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

"Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

"Then Peter said unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or even to all?

"And the Lord said, Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his Lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?

"Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

"Of a truth I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath.

"But and if that servant say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to beat the men servants and maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken;

"The Lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

"And that servant, which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

"But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more."

I pray, my brethren and sisters, that we may be found faithful and diligent to the end, that when the time shall come for us to be called by the Master we will be found worthy of an exaltation with him. May God so bless us, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Eastern States Mission

Through President Joseph W. McMurrin you have heard a report from the shores of the Pacific. I feel myself particularly happy to be able to follow him so nearly by making something of a report of the work of the Lord from the Atlantic seaboard, so that you may hear this morning, and in this same meeting a report from the shores of the sea west and a report from the shores of the sea east of the land of Zion. I too can report that the health condition of the missionaries in the Eastern states is very fine, and also that the spiritual health of our mission is splendid. That thing we used to speak of in the army as the corps d'esprit is most excellent in the Eastern States mission. At the present time there are no doubt many more Latter-day Saints on the shores of the Pacific than there are on the shores of the Atlantic. Perhaps if our missions were to be judged as to its success by the number of baptisms, there might be considerable discouragement, for acceptance of our great latter-day message is rather slow on that tier of states that constitute the Eastern States mission of our Church. It is only proper to say, however, that the slow progress of our work is not due to any lack of effort or earnestness of purpose on the part of the missionaries who represent the work of the Lord in that place; and, in order that you may have data on which you may form your judgment as to that, I am going to read as rapidly as I may an account of a few of our activities. I did hope that I should be able to have in my hands, before I made this report, a compiled report for the last nine months, closing with September. That report, however, has not reached my hands yet, so I am going to take our report of the month of August, from which you can form some judgment as to the activities of the representatives of the Church in the Eastern States mission:

| Through the month of August we had 129 missionaries in active service. | |
| The number of hours spent in tracting, by that number of missionaries, was | 18,924 |
| Hours visiting saints, of course for purposeful labor,..... | 9,547 |
| Hours spent in attending meetings | 4,491 |
| Hours visiting investigators, teaching them the gospel at their firesides | 4,186 |
| Hours spent in gospel conversations..... | 14,659 |
| Hours devoted to study by this body of (129) missionaries | 8,443 |
| Number of families visited | 35,594 |
| Number of investigators visited | 1,890 |
| The number of gospel conversations in the month, of this body of missionaries | 28,087 |
| Number of Books of Mormon sold, for the month..... | 197 |
| Other books distributed | 527 |
| Tracts distributed | 43,105 |
| Pamphlets distributed | 26,942 |
| Hall meetings held | 394 |
| Cottage meetings held | 205 |
| Open air meetings held | 303 |
| Making a total of meetings in halls, cottages and open air, for the month of August | 902 |

Perhaps you will be disposed to agree with me that these figures represent a great volume of missionary activity.

Now I am almost loath to read the next item because the numbers are so small, but I feel that we are not responsible for the smallness of these numbers, so you must have it with the rest. Out of all this effort, and perhaps very much effort that preceded the month of August, we only had thirty baptisms. You see we have to put forth a ton of effort in order to get an ounce of results; but, thank God, we did put forth the ton of effort. And then, if we count the value of souls, as God counts them, perhaps we had great reward for our efforts. The Lord in this new dispensation of the gospel has made it known that the value of a soul is great unto God. One of the elders in an early day of the Church was told that if he should devote his whole life to the ministry, and should save only one soul, yet great would be his joy with that one soul in heaven.

During the last six months, nay during just the last month, September, we have completed and dedicated two chapels in the Eastern States mission; one in Baltimore, Maryland, and one in Fairmont, West Virginia. These two, with the chapel that was dedicated last January in Charleston, West Virginia, makes three chapels within the past two years that we have built and dedicated to the Lord in that land, at an aggregate cost of about $54,000. One third of the amount in the case of the West Virginia chapels has been raised by the subscriptions of the Saints and their friends in that land. I have been tempted to believe, that perhaps the establishment of chapels in the Eastern States mission marks progress in the development of the work of the Lord on the Atlantic seaboard of the land of Zion. It rather indicates that we are approaching that time when we shall establish permanent stations in that part of the land, when we shall carry to the people the institutions of Zion, not only the regular Church organization as expressed in branches, but our Sabbath schools, Mutual Improvement associations, Primary associations, Relief Societies and all those helps in government which can, as I believe, be made mighty agencies for reaching the lives of the people in those communities; using not only the testimony of the missionaries, but likewise the testimony of the institutions of Zion in bringing men to a knowledge of the latter-day word of God.

I believe that this note of permanency given to our work in the Eastern States mission means a return to the vision and purpose that were in the mind of the Prophet Joseph in the last conference that he held in Nauvoo, April 1844. At that time many of the Saints felt that the ideas about the establishment of Zion in Jackson county had been somewhat disrupted, and certainly postponed. The Prophet, to reestablish confidence in the minds of his people concerning Zion, and in the promises which God had made concerning Israel, enlarged their vision about Zion by calling their attention to the fact that it was not circumscribed by the lines of Jackson county, nor by the lines of the State of Missouri, but under a very burst of inspiration from God, he made known that the whole land of America, North and South, was the land of Zion; and that God's purposes concerning Zion (sometimes also called the land of Joseph), contemplated larger things than the brethren had so far dreamed of. He announced at that conference that the whole land of America—this "land choice above all other lands," was Zion; wherever the elders went, and could find those who would receive the testimony which they bore, they were at liberty to establish "stakes of Zion" through their ministry in all parts of the land; and he specifically named the city of Boston as a suitable place for a stake of Zion, and New York as a suitable place for a stake of Zion, also I think Philadelphia. President Brigham Young, following him at the conference, in his remarks declared that the prophet's announcement was a "sweepstakes" in giving this larger vision of what would constitute Zion. Well, of course, the martyrdom of the Prophet, the expatriation of the Latter-day Saints from the United States, and their journey to these mountains, postponed, for a time, the things contemplated at that time by the Prophet Joseph. Perhaps, as a community, we were to learn what we sometimes find out as individuals, namely, that the farthest way around is often the nearest way home. It was necessary that these decades, between the martyrdom of the Prophet and now, should pass. The history that we have written in our exodus to these western lands, the establishment of stakes of Zion here—and the growth of the Latter-day Saints into a great and united community, where they could accumulate means, and experience, that would enable them to take possession of their larger inheritance throughout the land of Zion, were necessary. But now, strengthened as we are, experienced as we have come to be, may we not lift our vision to comprehend the larger purpose of God in the gathering of Israel out of the world to the whole land of Zion, and the redemption of it through stakes of Zion being established east as well as west? For I do want to claim for the Eastern States that they constitute just as acceptable regions in which stakes of Zion can be established as are to be found on the Pacific shores of the land of Zion. And when we sing, "America," that great American anthem—"My country 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty, of thee I sing"—we want to have a larger vision than the State of Utah affords; or that any other state affords. We want to include in our thoughts every part of the land that is under the protecting aegis of the Constitution of the United States, which God established, by raising up inspired men to lay the true foundations of civil liberty in the world. So, too, when we speak of Zion and God's purposes with reference to the gathering of Israel, and the establishment of Zion, we want to have a larger vision than these valleys of the Rocky Mountains afford, splendid and glorious as they are to us, and dear to our affections, for they are not the whole of Zion, nor even the center of Zion; and to those who understand aright, never were thought upon as more than a resting place for Israel while preparing for greater possessions, including these. We want to remember, Latter-day Saints, that Zion, her center place, the center city of Zion, where God's house, The Temple of temples is to be erected, has not been moved out of her place. It is still where God declared it to be, near Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, in the center of the land.

The center as to these United States of America, midway between "the sea east and the sea west;" midway between our boundary line on the north and our boundary line on the south; and, strangely enough, when contemplated with reference to the old North American Continent—the land of Eden, as well as the land of Zion—contemplated with reference to the whole continent; midway, the Panama region and the far North beyond the Hudson Bay; and as already I have told you, about equal distance between the west sea and the east sea. Well, Zion has not been moved out of her place, and God's decree must be fulfilled in relation to the establishment of Zion itself, as well as the stakes of Zion. We want to keep that within the range of our vision.

I am happy to say to you that in the East, no less than in the West, we are making proclamation of this same gospel to which President Joseph McMurrin bore such splendid testimony. We had made the keynote of our ministry in the Eastern States: "The Lord hath spoken!" We open with Isaiah's text: "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth, for the Lord has spoken!" And from that starting point we, too, develop the message of the new dispensation of the gospel. Not a new gospel. We have no new God to present to the world; no new Redeemer to offer; no new plan devised for man's salvation, but "the everlasting gospel." That gospel which was formulated and agreed upon by the children of God, even before the foundations of the earth itself were laid; being that covenant of eternal life which God, who cannot lie, promised (Titus 1:2-3) before the foundation of the earth itself were laid. We are preaching this new dispensation of the old gospel; and your sons and your daughters in the east-lands, O Latter-day Saints, are faithful and true to the dispensation of that gospel committed unto them. God grant that they may continue true, and that we may be able to impress upon the hearts of the children of men that God has again spoken from heaven, and is reestablishing his Church in the earth, I pray, in the name of Jesus, Amen.

The congregation sang, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah."

President Soren M. Nielsen, of the North Sanpete stake of Zion, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

At 2 o'clock p. m., October 4, 1924, President Heber J. Grant, who presided, announced that the congregation would sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

After the singing, Elder Wayne H. Redd, President of the San Juan stake of Zion, offered the opening prayer.

Pearl Robbins sang a solo entitled, "The Song of Ruth."

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

IN A GREAT PRESENCE

I stand in a great presence. Surrounded by the First Presidency and the General Authorities of the Church, confronted by those who are appointed and set apart as administrators of the Lord's work in the stakes and wards and missions of the Church, and in the midst of other Saints of the Lord, it is not surprising that one should feel the weight of the responsibility of attempting to deliver a message which shall be compatible with the Spirit of our Father and acceptable to these men and women. I am always awed in this great building at one of our general conferences. There devolves upon one such a tremendous sense of responsibility as to make one crave more than under almost any other circumstances, the guidance and the promptings of the Holy Spirit, and I sincerely trust that that which I may say may ring true to my brethren, and with the remarks and the testimonies which have been heretofore given.

A COMPARISON

Some few years ago, through the courtesy of Brother Smoot, I had the privilege of attending the second plenary session of the great Disarmament Conference which was held in the city of Washington, where representatives of great nations of the earth met to consider plans for the limitation of the armaments and military operations. I remember distinctly that upon that occasion I was deeply impressed with the importance of the great subject to be discussed, and with the dignity of the men who came to represent the various countries. I saw such men as Balfour of England, the great ex-premier, Ex-premier Briand of France, and the notable Kato of Japan, and other dignitaries, standing in that assembly representing and speaking for their peoples; and I was rather overwhe'med with the transcendent importance of these men and the occasion. But I have since thought that as we gather together here in the semi-annual conferences of the Church, such conferences as that which I attended, and which so impressed me, had no more and greater significance and deep meaning to the people of the world than do these assemblies. Those men met to represent the nations. We meet to represent God and his work in the earth. We come together to hear the voice of his prophet and to feel the flow of his Spirit course through our beings, to stimulate us to higher endeavor in his mighty service, and to give us vision of the great work he designed we shall accomplish as his representatives here on the earth.

HERE ONLY MAY BE HEARD THE WORD OF GOD

I am aware that it always seems a highly presumptuous thing to make the statement that here only may be heard the word of God through his living oracles. In a sense it is embarrassing to make that statement, either to ourselves or to the world. We are, however, constrained to make it, because God himself hath said it, and we do but our duty in proclaiming to the children of men that here with this comparably small people is to be found the word of God, delivered to the people of the world, under the only authority existent upon the earth at this time.

A TREMENDOUS RESPONSIBILITY

When I contemplate the tremendous responsibility that devolves upon us as a people in the assertion and the statement that we so make, I tremble lest we may not measure up in highest degree to the fulness of the Lord's expectations of us. I say, I stand in a great presence, in the presence of my brethren of the Priesthood. May I not safely conclude, as well, in the presence of my living God? Is it unreasonable to think that after having caused his Church to be established and set up in the world as he has done, that he is "listening in" at these conferences, and that "listening in," he likewise gives inspiration and direction to those who undertake in his name to represent him and to speak his word to the assembled Saints?

REVERENCE FOR GOD ESSENTIAL TO THE PEACE OF MANKIND

I have long been persuaded that a definite, conscious, genuine reverence for God is essential to the peace and joy of mankind, and I know likewise that no wholesome reverence for the Lord will ever come except there be an understanding and comprehension of him. It follows, too, that there may never be a full understanding of him, his personality, his powers, his attributes, unless men live his commandments and do his will. To some, that seems to be a very paradoxical situation, not to be able to understand the Lord without keeping his commandments, and not to be able to keep his commandments unless we understand him. But it is the true condition under which we must come to a realization and testimony of his truth, his supremacy, his Fatherhood and his great and wonderful power. I do not believe that in this great country of ours which has been so lauded during this conference, there will ever be a satisfactory upholding of the Constitution, a decent conformity to laws and statutes and ordinances unless there be at the basis of all patriotism and loyalty to country, a deep-seated conscious reverence for the God of the land. It may seem to some of my fellow citizens an almost fanatic view to take that religion is so inseparably associated with the inception of this great government and its existence as to form an integral part of the loyalty and devotion of true citizens of the State; but I assert it nevertheless. I believe America to be a Christian country. I believe the principles which are set forth in her fundamental laws to be derived from, consciously, the Savior of the world. His precepts, his principles of truth and living, have been set forth by the founders and the fathers in our laws and statutes; and America, in order to continuously and satisfactorily fill her great mission as a mighty nation, must conform to those fundamental laws and principles of truth, in my humble judgment. Reverence for the Lord does not bring forth the class of men and women who today assail the fundamental laws of this land. They who are designated as the Reds, the Anarchists, those who are inimical to our established institutions, I venture, could they all be found out and analyzed, would not be men who love God and who revere his name and who acknowledge his power and his supremacy in the earth. The loyal citizens in this country, in my humble opinion, are to be found among the God-fearing, God-loving people who still trust him and honor him, who recognize his great providence in the inception and growth of this mighty country; and when reverence for God fades and gives way, loyalty, patriotism, devotion to country, will likewise vanish.

OUR COUNTRY AND OUR CHURCH COMMAND OUR ALLEGIANCE

And this is the thought that primarily I would like to give today: that our Country and our Church so command our allegiance and our whole-souled devotion that we have no time, no excess energy to devote to other and extraneous purposes which in any sense might be concluded to be, in the least degree, inimical to the interest of either Church or Country. Every Latter-day Saint finds within the Church so many opportunities for the expression of his service, his good will, and his love for his fellows that he need not go beyond the organizations and agencies of the Church to find places where he can expend his time and his energy and his money for the uplift of mankind.

I do not mean to imply that certain co-operative efforts on the part of people engaged in similar lines of endeavor are not desirable. I believe in co-operation, for the stimulation of our markets and other economic advantages. I believe in the protection of our trade and in the safeguarding of our institutions by proper kinds of co-operation; but I maintain that a man who divides his allegiance and his energy and his endeavor along many lines will usually fail to accomplish anything very significant in any one of them. I believe that the old message which has come to us for years and years past, to confine our endeavor to the spreading of the gospel, to the teaching of its principles, to the people, to the building up of our country, to the sustaining of those great institutions which have been inspired to safeguard liberty, equity, and justice in the earth, comprehends about all that any man may give to people, country or church.

I regard it as unfortunate that there should arise in the midst of the people of the country institution after institution claiming the allegiance and devotion and energy of the citizens of our country, and in some measure at least winning them away from the one true objective which, in our case, is the establishment of the Lord's work and the maintenance of principles of righteousness and justice in the world. Any man who bears the Priesthood of God has the power to serve mankind. Indeed, others who do not bear it have a power to serve mankind, but not in the same effective way. They cannot perform the ordinances, the great and helpful things so indispensable to the happiness and joy of men. But they who are endowed with this holy Priesthood, who are so favored of God as to share a portion of the power by which he himself rules the world and ministers to man are entitled to go forth in his name and do his work, and that work commands their whole thought, time, and energy, their devotion, their love and their loyalty. I am conscious of the fact when I say this, that, engaged as we are in promoting the great work of the Lord, we have numerous secular—if I may use that word—duties to perform. We are engaged in financial endeavor and enterprise. We seek to build up the country in one way and another; but every true Latter-day Saint does all this with an eye single to the glory of God, consecrating, dedicating and devoting all his time, talent and energy to the great purpose of building up the Lord's kingdom. He does that even in the accumulation of his own private means and property, because in his heart there is a disposition to devote that property and, if need be, all that comes into his possession, to the establishment of our Father's work.

AN APPEAL FOR UNDIVIDED SUPPORT

My brethren and my sisters, too, I appeal for your undivided support for the great work which finds itself in prosperous condition as reported by the President of the Church, and by the brethren who have spoken. We have reason to feel encouraged, but our safety and the eternal progress of the work depends upon our continued vigilance, upon our steadfast devotion and upon giving to this work the utmost of talent and thought and study and prayerful consideration. I know that the work will receive that kind of consideration. I have faith and confidence in my brethren. Personally, I am grateful for their association. When I contemplate the fact that my lot is cast with the men in whose midst I now stand, I raise my voice to God in thanksgiving and in gratitude for that blessed privilege. As I move about among the Presidents of Stakes, and the Bishops of Wards I ever say to myself: where else could I be thrown into such good company? where I could meet such good, honest, upright, noble men whose contact with my life lifts me up and builds me every time I meet them and go among them? God bless the men who preside in and direct the destinies of the people of the stakes and the wards, and the missions; and God let his choice blessings rest upon the man who, under God, directs the destinies of the Church. I pray for him, I uphold him, and I sustain him, and I know that God gives his word through him. I testify to this, and I appeal, my brethren and sisters, for your undivided support, your devotion, your whole-souled loyalty to the great institutions of the Church and of our beloved Country, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SEYMOUR B. YOUNG

President of the First Council of Seventy

My Brethren and Sisters: I heartily endorse the remarks that have been made at this conference. The speakers have given to the congregation ideas of helpfulness and encouragement, and with all my heart, I echo the sentiments of the last speaker in regard to the President of the Church and those associated with him.

Today we see evidence of the truth of that prophetic utterance made by the prophet Joseph Smith on the 12th day of August, 1842, on the banks of the Mississippi river, in the little town of Montrose,—that the Saints would finally be driven from city to city, from state to state, and finally from the United States into the midst of the Rocky Mountains where they would become a great people. I am sure today that this prophecy is being fulfilled; that is, the clause referring to the greatness of the people. There is no evidence of lack of loyalty to the cause of truth by many thousands and tens of thousands of Latter-day Saints. The testimonies received when the door of baptism was entered seems to have been lasting, and to have increased in power from the time of the faithful seekers after truth joining the Church until the present day.

The prophet himself desired to know of his relationship with the heavenly Father. He went to the Lord, as the scripture designated to him, and prayed for light and knowledge and for wisdom; and in response to his prayer, the Father and the Son appeared to him and gave to him knowledge of their personality; and his vision and the testimony of it has never been successfully contradicted, although for fourteen years after the call came to him as a prophet of God, he saw nothing but tribulations and trials. There were in conflict with him many leading religious men, men of influence, seemingly, with the world at large. He had all this to face. Finally, as the end drew near, his faith did not fail him, but when he bade farewell to his family and to his friends as he met them on that memorable 23rd day of June, on his way to Carthage, he exclaimed, and it was an exclamation that came from a full heart: "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter, yet I have a conscience void of offense towards God and man." We are the recipients of blessings through the evidence and call given to the Prophet Joseph Smith. We are in receipt today of all the great prospects that he predicted, and realizing that in the near future there are many more blessings for the Latter-day Saints, that we still have a controversy with the world, and that we must maintain our position as a religious body, led by the inspiration of the Lord through his prophets. All these considerations should not be taken from our minds and memories, but we should be in deep consideration how each individual can lift himself out of any slough of unbelief, of carelessness or neglect of duty, and how, at the same time, we can uplift our fellow men. The gospel has to be preached to the ends of the earth, to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, that all may hear the glorious sound that shall bring to them redemption from sin, redemption from darkness, redemption from ignorance, and place in their hearts and in their minds a knowledge of God, a knowledge of his gospel, and a realizing sense of the weight of truth that shall bring them not only salvation here in time, but salvation and exaltation in all eternity.

My brethren and sisters, I rejoice today to stand before you and bear my testimony. Joseph Smith was indeed a prophet of God; and since his day there have stood in his place prophets led and inspired by the spirit and power that characterized his leadership in the fourteen short years of his ministry as a prophet of God. I say fourteen short years, because he accomplished so much during that little time that it would have needed in some persons more than double the time to accomplish what he accomplished, excepting they were like him, inspired by the Spirit and power of God. After his call came, he devoted his life, his time, and his energy to the organization of the Priesthood and the quorums of the Priesthood, and when he saw a time approach that there was a necessity for organizing again other quorums, after the Church was organized some five years, the quorum of the Twelve Apostles and the quorum of the Seventies were chosen and ordained under the supervision and under the hands of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I look over the quorums of the priesthood and study them somewhat, and I am satisfied that he performed a perfect work in his ministry in organizing these quorums, and others of the priesthood, as has been remarked here today. The Saints are governed and directed and held together by these organized quorums, and by the power of God which attends their administration.

I testify to you today of the clean life and elegant conduct of my brethren who preside over the Church. I have known them all since they were boys, and I testify that no better men can ever live upon the face of the earth, no better Church organization has ever existed in the Church, than exists today.

May the Lord continue to bless his people and give them a desire to be more perfect and more willing and constant in their service to him and to the world at large, and I pray that the blessing of life and the blessing of health and peace may be upon all, and upon your loved ones at home, those who have come from distances; and when the conference is closed, I pray the Lord to see you safely home without accident or hurt, and the blessing of peace to rest upon us all, and the Spirit of God to move upon us in directing our labors. I ask and pray through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER JONATHAN G. KIMBALL

Of the First Council of Seventy

In the words of an old prophet: "I will say of Jehovah, he is my refuge and my fortress, my God in whom I trust." I have that feeling, that conviction burning within me. I have faith in God the eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ. I have been taught these things all my life, from my earliest childhood; and for forty years nearly, including my foreign service, I have been teaching that God is our Father, that we are the offspring of the living God; and I believe it.

I met a Gentile friend—I suppose he is my friend, he has always been friendly—a business man, the other day. He said very pleasantly to me: "Kimball, I do not believe you have got any religion. I do not think you believe what you preach." And I laughed. I learned afterwards that he was a Catholic, and I guess he judged me by himself, because I do not think he is a good Catholic, so he hasn't got any the best of me. How could he tell from the outside of a man whether he has religion, or, call it faith in God and in the gospel of Jesus Christ? That can only be discovered by the life we lead and by the spirit that is within us.

If there is anything in the world that I appreciate, it is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I have no desire to live with any other people. I occasionally go away with the consent of the brethren, but I am always anxious to come back. In March of this year I was in San Francisco, and I became lonesome and homesick. I think it was on the 6th of March that I preached to the people of the Latter-day Saint branch in San Francisco. When I finished, the presiding officer said: "Brother Kimball, if you preach another sermon like that about Utah, all the people will leave." That makes clear how much I think of Utah and her people. "I am not given to flattery, when I do not mean it, and I do not simulate an affection that I do not honestly feel."

As far as the brethren of the authorities are concerned, there has been no president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that I have known so thoroughly and well as President Heber J. Grant. I have traveled with him through the Southern States, all through the south to Mexico. It took us two months before we returned. I have slept with him. We were on very friendly terms in those days. There were not so many stakes, and we became very well acquainted. I have known President Grant and heard about him from his earliest childhood, for my mother was a very dear friend of his mother's, and I have been in their home when I was a child. My own father, Heber C. Kimball, took him as a child, and stood him on a table and said: "He will be an apostle," and it came true. Yes, I sustain President Grant with all my heart, for I realize, in part at least, what a great responsibility rests upon him.

I met a horny-handed son of toil the other day near the Church Office Building. He was a Scotchman, and said: "Brother Kimball, will you shake hands with me?" I said: "Yes, and be tickled to do it."

"Would you like to hear how I came to join the Church?"

"Yes, I would like to hear it, for I was born in the Church. I never knew anything else."

Then he told me his story. Little did that man know how he stimulated my faith just through that little friendship and testimony. As we stood there one of the brethren passed, in fact it was President Grant. My back was to him and I did not see him until after he got by. This Scotchman said: "Brother Kimball, as unbelievable as it is, I pray for that man twice every day of my life, and he did not speak to me."

"Well," I said, "he did not see you. President Grant cannot stop to shake hands with every man in all Israel and do anything else. You keep on praying, for he has a great responsibility resting upon him, for when he speaks in the name of God it is not his own word; it is the word of God. God is his dictator, and he must be guided and influenced and blessed with the Holy Spirit in order to direct this great people." We ought to pray for the brethren of the authorities, as we sustain them as prophets, seers and revelators.

Brethren and sisters, I have a conviction burning within me, sometimes, like a living fire. There are a lot of things I do not know, but I know some things. I have paid the price. I have eaten the bread of adversity. I have drunk the water of affliction, and I have found God. I have told you that before. I have found God, and he has answered my prayers. I have heard that still small Voice—we call it a Voice—spoken to me not infrequently, and whenever I have followed it I was right. So that I can say with you that I am blessed in all my ways, because the Father gives to me of his Holy Spirit to guide and direct me in every situation, if I am humble and contrite in spirit and in truth.

Brethren, when I think of this gathering, we do not call this a Round-Up. I attended a Round-Up on the Fair Grounds and almost lost my life when that grand-stand with three or four thousand people on it burned down, in ten minutes. My brother Elias and I happened to be on the topmost seat, because it was the cheapest. We were about the last to get out. I said: "Elias, the Lord is with us again. Praised be the name of the Lord." I tried not to be frightened, but you ought to have seen inside of me before I got off that stand. The Lord is with us in this gathering of the Saints. If you will stop to think for a moment of this building, it is faith-promoting. I helped to haul sand here, with other Kimball boys, every Saturday, to lay up these rock pillars. I was but a boy. I followed my father around the temple many times when I was a young boy. These buildings and grounds are faith-promoting, and it is wonderful to me the things that have been accomplished by this people, as recounted by President Grant. I enter the temple twice a week, and as I walk around it I have often wondered if President Young and Heber C. Kimball, and others of the pioneers, can picture what has been accomplished. I have been in Central Park, New York, years and years ago. I saw in this park million dollar bridges. I have been in Golden Gate Park time and time again, in San Francisco. I was in Denver a short time ago. They have twenty-four parks in that one city. But I want to tell you that to me, there is not a place on God's green earth like this place right here. I thank God that the brethren take good care of it. No cleaner, sweeter place is to be found anywhere in the world than right here. It is part of the vision that Brigham Young saw. Think of the temple! When Brigham Young struck his cane in the ground and said: "Right here we will build a temple to our God;" it was in the time of their poverty when they were so poor that father came along when the men working on the temple were soaking their bread in the stream of water. Father said: "To you it will be the sweetest bread in all your life." It took forty years to build that temple. I will never forget when it was dedicated. I was in the Southern States where they were driving us like wild animals, and we took our lives in our hands. I heard that prophet say when the temple was dedicated, as I was here on a visit: "From this time forth the hearts of the children of men will be softened towards us." I stand before you as a witness of the softening of the hearts of the people in the south. See what has been accomplished. At one time Elder Elias Kimball had five hundred and fifty elders in the south, and during his presidency he handled seventeen hundred and fifty elders, and only two died out of that great number of elders, exposed as they were. You cannot tell me that God does not answer their prayers. You cannot tell me that he does not protect us when we trust in him. I tell you, brethren, there never has been a time—I can say this as truthfully as I have ever spoken in my life—when I have had a doubt in my heart that Joseph Smith was a prophet. That thought has never crept into me. I believe in the Prophet Joseph Smith. To me he is a prophet. His prophecies have been fulfilled. He was a great architect, and God directed him, and Brigham Young came here as a great builder, and through the efforts and unity of the people, the great mission of this Church has been partly fulfilled.

Now, brethren and sisters, I pray the Lord to bless you and be with you. You are a blessed people to rally around and come together as you do to these great conferences, and your stake conferences; because I know, even if you forget all that is said, it stimulates faith, and God knows we need it. I pray the Lord to bless the authorities and everything pertaining to Zion. For the past year I have been working like a Trojan to love my enemies. I am making slow progress, but if I can live a little longer I will make it yet. The Lord bless you, which I pray for in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

President of the Central States Mission

I am very happy, my brethren and sisters, to be able to attend this conference and to partake of the Spirit of the Lord that has been manifested in each session. I earnestly pray that the Lord may direct me to say that which is best at this time.

There is no doubt in my mind concerning the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the restoration of the gospel. I know that its principles harmonize with holy writ. The great migration to the West, led by Brigham Young under the direction of the Lord, and the establishment of the people of the Lord, in this part of the earth, is pointed to as a great achievement by hundreds of thousands of people who visit our country; many often remark to me that they have never seen anything like it. It is truly a great achievement; it is something that could not be done by man alone; the Lord was at the helm, as he is today. But the great thing that appeals to me is the principles involved in this great latter-day work. While sitting in my seat during this conference I have been led to think of the many times that I have heard the principles of the gospel discussed from this stand, and of the many sermons I have read concerning the doctrines taught from the days of Joseph Smith by elders of Israel everywhere. Not only have they been preached, but they have been printed and circulated in all parts of the earth. Surely people who desire to know the truth must pay some attention to a clear exposition of principles of truth.

Before the time of the revelations to the Prophet Joseph, there was not taught, so far as I know, anything concerning the ante-mortal state of man. In fact it was repudiated and is today. Very few people believe it, yet it is in harmony with holy writ. It was one of the principles of the gospel, in the days of Adam. It was one of the principles of the gospel, in the days of Noah, and in the days of Abraham, and in the days of Christ. It has never been changed, it cannot be changed. How can men then successfully assail the Church which preaches scripture as it is taught in holy writ dating back even to Adam our Father. What are men going to do with the scripture that the Lord spoke to Jeremiah when he said:

"Before I formed thee I knew thee; and before thou camest forth

I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations."

How can men say there is no truth in the gospel as we teach it, if prophets of old have taught it? How are they going to answer the gospel that was taught by the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ? What is the answer to the principle taught by Paul, to the Corinthians, when he asked those Jews who were in a controversy concerning the resurrection of the dead—the Sadducees and the Pharisees who had become converted to the doctrines of Christ, but who evidently were discussing the resurrection, and even doubting it: "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

This doctrine also, and all the principles which the Lord revealed to Joseph, have stood the test for nearly a century of time, and there has never yet been a set of men, with all the learning that the institutions of the world have been able to give them, who have successfully assailed the principles of truth as they have been taught. Can you find anything like it in all the history of the world? Investigate the organizations of men called churches and learn if they have closely followed the scriptures. They are changing their doctrines constantly, because they have no real fountain head to deliver unto them the truth. But the monument of truth that this Church has erected as an instrument in the hands of God must certainly stand for or against the human family, or that part of them who come in contact with it.

If I were going to investigate any organization, business or otherwise, I most certainly would look at the foundation principles, the by-laws of the institution; I would investigate the strength of the institution. And the great majority of men look at material things in that way, but they appear to be blinded, so far as the investigation of the gospel is concerned. It is easy enough, evidently, to go to church and listen to the teachings of men, and take it for granted that they are true. They have not thought of having an individual testimony. They take it for granted that they are saved; they have not learned the principles which are involved in the great thing called life through which salvation is obtained.

But when men and women come in contact with the history of this great Church, not only its organization and its establishment, but the eternal part of the Church, they must give unto the Lord their allegiance sooner or later, for after all a Church that has shown a steady growth every year, a Church which has taught the same principles and believed them from the very beginning, must surely draw the sober-minded men and women of the earth, the honest in heart, toward it. That is the great mission of the Church in the earth, as the Lord established it through his servants in these the last days. There can be no question as to the validity of the doctrines of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Why is not the doctrine of baptism for the dead being taught in the great churches of the day? Why is it that men and women do not know anything about the pre-existent state of spirits? Because they are not guided by divine leadership, they are not able truly to interpret the principles of the gospel. Happy is the man or woman who becomes acquainted with the principles of the Gospel here in mortality and is able to assume the position of a child of God, enjoying free agency, with a knowledge that this is God's work, and that we can only return to him in the way in which he has ordained.

I am not at all fearful as to the success of God's work in the earth. If there is any man or set of men or individuals who question it, they need only to investigate without prejudice the gospel of Jesus Christ as recorded in the holy scripture. And the very thing which brings them into communication with these principles will lead the honest in heart into the Church of Jesus Christ. There can be no other way.

I am not fearful at all of the success of this Church; it will go on until it has finished its mission, until the honest in heart in all the world shall have heard the gospel of our Redeemer. I do not know how many will accept it in this life, I do not know how many will accept it in the spirit world, but I do earnestly believe that those who stood for the great Jehovah, and who worked faithfully with him in that great conflict with Lucifer, those who held his power and who labored under his presidency and direction, who were faithful unto the trust, and who were counted as of the chosen blood as they are counted here, will, in time, be gathered out, and those who did not and do not shall not have the privilege of knowing the Lord; it is very doubtful if they will ever have the privilege of returning unto him unless it may be through repentance as the gospel has provided.

I am not ashamed, as Paul has said, of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the power of God unto salvation. It is the power by which miracles are wrought. It is the power by which God can and does communicate to man. It is the power by which men may know the Lord and hear him and feel his presence, just as surely, and with as much certainty as they did in the day of their primeval childhood, when they walked by sight and not by faith. The work of God will prevail, truth will prevail. There is no reason why any man with sober mind should doubt the principles of the gospel taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There can be no failure to it, I care not what the world may think, or what men may think. Individuals may fail, but the Church of Jesus Christ is founded upon facts, it is founded upon revelation, and upon true principles that have been in the earth since the earth was peopled, under the direction of Adam, our Father in the flesh. And in this dispensation it is the word of God, and the Church is the organization of God. It will stand when others fail. It will be in the earth to meet the Redeemer when he comes to claim his people. I know that his Priesthood is in the earth, and that holy men are in this Church presiding over it. I know the Church has a prophet in this day, just as surely as it ever had in any dispensation of the gospel, and it will not, nor can it go astray. At times it may be hindered in its growth, but it will eventually triumph, and the principles involved in it will become the common knowledge of the honest in heart in all the world.

I pray the Lord to bless us. Israel will prosper, and the Church, through its ministry, will grow. The results of our work as elders in the earth are being felt daily. Thousands and thousands of people are being led into the waters of baptism. They are found in every part of the country, and the country is filled with honorable people who, in their hearts, desire to know the truth. It is hard to be weeded out from the convictions that have surrounded them, planted there by father and mother and a long line of progenitors, but when they hear the truth and study it, they accept it. I believe that the Lord provides for the restoration of his family according to their faith and as they prepare themselves and are qualified as a result of their faith to come into this Church, they come into it and become members of it, and begin to work for it. That is the history of it, and it shall not change till the end shall come.

I pray the Lord to bless us, in the name of Christ. Amen.

ELDER A. WILLIAM LUND

Assistant Church Historian

I hope, my brethren and sisters, that I may have the Spirit of the Lord to be with me in the few remarks that I may make this afternoon. This is the first time that I have been called upon to speak at a general conference, and I certainly feel the need of the aid of your faith and prayers, my brethren and sisters, and of the Spirit of the Lord.

I rejoice that I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I am proud of my parentage—of my father and of my mother. I am proud of the teachings that they gave to me in my youth, and I only hope and pray that I may always be faithful to the teachings of my beloved parents. I have a testimony that the gospel of Jesus Christ is true, that this is the work of God, that the men who stand at the head of this Church are men of God, that they have the Priesthood, that they are called and chosen in this day to lead God's Church, and I pray that the Lord will bless them always with health and with strength, that they may carry on this great work, the leadership of which has been given to them in this dispensation.

As a young man I have often wondered if the youth of Zion really and truthfully appreciate the wonderful privilege they have of working in the Church of God, if they really have faith in the doctrines and principles that are set forth by this wonderful Church of ours. I consider it a great privilege to work in the Church of God, and I desire always to work in it.

I have often wondered if we have the faith in the truth that is necessary for us to have, in order to stand when trials and tribulations come upon us. I wonder if I could stand if the same trials and tribulations should come upon me that have come upon those who have passed to the great beyond. When trials and persecutions were heaped upon the prophet and upon the leaders of this Church, it took faith, my brethren and sisters, to stand in those perilous times. In the times of Kirtland, in those dark days when apostles, some of them, were leaving the Church, apostatizing, because the evil one had gained power over them. Then such men as John Taylor, wonderfully brave and courageous, stood forth and testified to the people that it was through Joseph, the Prophet of God, that they had been taught the truth; it was through him that they had received the power of God to perform the ordinances of life and salvation, that he had shown them the way of eternal life, and he asked them why they were going back upon these wonderful truths. Even the man who converted John Taylor in Canada was being affected by the many things that had been said. John Taylor met him and said to him that the gospel was the same now as when he had preached it in Canada and that it did not make any difference what man might do, yet the gospel of Jesus Christ was true. Thus Brother Taylor testified to him, and that man, be it to his honor, returned again. He had not left the Church, but he returned again to his full fellowship and died a faithful member of this Church. That same man, President John Taylor, died away from home, away from the love of his dear ones. In a letter written to his children and to his friends gathered in the Gardo House on the first day of November, 1886, he pleaded with his children and with his wives to live true to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. He thanked the brethren for being present upon his birthday and celebrating that day in his honor. He gave up his life for the testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ which he knew to be true.

When the Prophet Joseph was in Carthage jail, Willard Richards and other men were there with him. On the day of the martyrdom, in talking to some of these men, the Prophet Joseph wanted them to leave Carthage jail. He knew what would be his end. It may be true, my brethren and sisters, that in the heat of battle we are willing to give up our lives for a thing that we hold dear, but this man, Joseph Smith, knew for some years previous to the time that he was martyred that he should give his life for the testimony that he had received. In a letter written to John C. Bennett in 1840, Joseph Smith, in describing Nauvoo, said to him that if their enemies would leave them there long enough Nauvoo would become one of the most beautiful cities upon the banks of the Mississippi. In a meeting held in April, 1842, in talking to the Relief Society, Joseph Smith said that he would not be with them very long. He said that the people of the world would hear his voice only for a short time. On the 6th day of August, 1842, when he uttered that wonderful prophecy concerning the people coming into these Rocky Mountains, he did not say "I will go with you," but he said: "You will go into the valleys of the Rocky Mountains." When incarcerated in Carthage jail he realized that the end was near, and he desired that his brethren should not remain with him there. He tried to get Hyrum to leave him, but that faithful brother would not go. He asked Willard Richards to go but Willard turned to him and said: "Brother Joseph, you did not ask me to cross the river with you. You did not ask me to come to Carthage—you did not ask me to come to jail with you, and do you think I would forsake you now? But I will tell you what I will do, if you are condemned to be hung for treason, I will die for you." That was the faith of that man—willing to sacrifice his life for the Prophet of the living God.

We are not called upon, brethren and sisters, to sacrifice our lives for this gospel, but are we willing to sacrifice a little of our time in our block teaching, in our High Council work, in Sunday schools and in other opportunities that are given to us to serve God? Are we willing to go into the homes of the Saints and preach unto them the gospel of Jesus Christ? Are we willing to lay our all upon the altar of God, if necessary, and if called upon to do so? I firmly believe, my brethren and sisters, that if Joseph Smith at the last moment even, had said to the people that he alone was responsible for this Church, that he alone was responsible for the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, that they would have ceased their persecutions against him and would have heralded him as one of the greatest men that had ever lived. They would have considered the Book of Mormon as the greatest piece of literature that had ever been given in the English language. I firmly believe that, my brethren and sisters. But because he was true and faithful to the testimony that God had given unto him, that he had seen God, that he had seen Jesus Christ, that angels of the living God had come to him and had given unto him the keys of the dispensations that they held, making him the prophet of the dispensation of the fulness of times, they ridiculed the Book of Mormon, they made fun of him, and finally took his life. But what an example of courage and bravery he has given to the world, dying for the testimony that he knew that the work he had founded was the work of God and not of man.

I am thoroughly converted, my brethren and sisters, to work, work in the Church of God, to do the things that are required of us; and I believe then that the Lord will bless us with health and with strength to carry on his great purposes. Men in these days in which we live have also shown themselves to be courageous to the faith that comes to them as children. My own father, when he was a boy not more than fourteen years of age, was an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ, preaching the gospel to the people in his native land, Denmark. On one occasion he went into the home of a certain rich man. This man thought a great deal of him and offered him the greatestest temptation that could be placed in the path of my beloved father—that of an education. He offered to put him in school, to educate him and to make him the heir of all he owned if he would renounce “Mormonism.” But that boy, having the faith and testimony of Jesus Christ, refused to give up the pearl of great price. He had found the truth, and he lived faithful always to that testimony that was given to him as a boy. On his death bed, the last words that he gave unto his children were that they should remain true to the gospel of Jesus Christ. I only hope we all may be true to this wonderful gospel. I know that the Priesthood of God is here upon the earth, that the keys of this Priesthood are vested in the President of this Church, Heber J. Grant. I know him to be a prophet of the living God. When I came to England as a missionary, President Grant was the President of the European mission. I was appointed to labor in the Newcastle conference. There was a certain woman living in one of the towns in that conference who was afflicted with deafness, and she desired that President Grant should administer unto her. He did not have time, because of other conference appointments, to go to the town where she resided, but he promised the elders that if they would administer to that woman that she would be healed; and I bear you my testimony that his words were fulfilled, that the elders did lay their hands upon the head of that woman and she received her hearing. These things, my brethren and sisters, are faith-promoting to me. They testify to me that the Spirit of God is with the men who are at the head of our Church. The Priesthood of God is the greatest thing that has been given to us. In it is the greatest and most glorious opportunity given to young men to exercise authority in the saving of souls. And no matter what may be said, I bear you my humble witness that these men do hold this Priesthood and are the leaders of the Church and Kingdom of God. May God bless you, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DON C. RUSHTON

Former President of the Australian Mission

My brethren and sisters, it is the greatest event of my life to be called upon to stand here before you and bear my testimony to the work of the Lord, as I have taken part in it in the different parts of the world where I have been called to labor. I feel very timid and humble today, in facing this great audience, for I have not been accustomed to meeting with so many people at one time, but I do feel very grateful to the Lord for the splendid opportunity we have had of meeting in this conference and of listening to the testimonies of those who have been chosen to lead this people.

I have been out in the land of Australia for about four years at this time, and three years some time back, laboring with an excellent people, a people who have many of the virtues and good qualities that are found among the races in the different parts of the world. They are principally from the British Isles, having gone over to Australia, a very fruitful land, a land capable of supporting many millions of the world's inhabitants; but it has not been consecrated, seemingly, by the Lord. I was listening to the testimonies of Brother Roberts and Brother McMurrin today, in explanation of the work which is being done on this continent, and of the testimony that had been given of the consecration of this land in the early days by the prophets, inspired of the Lord, and of how these prophecies have come to pass and been fulfilled, and I thought of the land of Australia. It seems that that land has no great destiny for the children of men.

There are no traditions about its early inhabitants. When Captain Cook discovered the land he found there a dark-skinned race of people. They were estranged to all other races, it seems, resembling, to some extent, the African, but yet not like them. They were different from any of the other races that he found upon the South Pacific islands, and he considered the land at that time was not inhabitable for the white man. It lay in that condition for many years, until England took charge of it, and that country began to send over their offenders to that part of the world, political transgressors. Men and women who were not in favor, altogether, of the royalty of the English government were sent over, and left in the country of Australia. It is a great continent and is as large as the United States. Our work there is greatly divided. The nearest conference we have to Sidney, the headquarters, is six hundred miles, and the farthest one away is three thousand miles, so that we have to travel six thousand miles to visit the conference in West Australia. We have about eleven hundred members of the Church in that land divided into six conferences, including the Island of Tasmania.

This great country has only a population of about seven million people. It is capable of supporting twice that many, but for some reason the people are not going there. The government of Australia is doing everything it can to induce men to come there, but they will not come in sufficient numbers; while this country of America is doing everything it can to stop them from coming here. So we observe the great difference. Australia is a fruitful land, and one where conditions are better than they are in nearly any other part of the world, but the country cannot get population sufficient to supply the demands, while America, crowded with people to some extent, cannot keep them out.

Brethren and sisters, the words and the blessings of the prophets are sure to come to pass. I was thinking of the blessings which prevailed at the time when Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau. You remember how Jacob bought Esau's birthright, and in order that he might attain to the blessings, he had to deceive his father, Isaac, but he deceived him and obtained the blessing, and that blessing came to pass. Again, when Jacob was blessing Ephraim and Manasseh, he crossed his hands when blessing those two sons, and while Joseph tried to remove his father's right hand and place it on the head of Manasseh, Jacob said, "No." All of these blessings came to pass, and while some of us think that it was not altogether fair that Jacob should obtain the blessing, yet it was pronounced upon his head by the prophet, a man authorized of God, and sent of God, and it came to pass. And so it was with Jacob when he blessed the sons of Joseph. He blessed them that they should inhabit this great land that we are in, and the Lord has sanctified it by his prophets; and so we find it today the best land, a land where everyone wishes to come, a land where everyone desires to remain, a land where those who have lived here and go away always wish to return again—in fulfilment of the prophecies which have been made and the blessings which have been given by God.

We find that the land of Australia has no great destiny, and because of that, perhaps, the people of the world are not going there. But there is a great people living there, a people who are susceptible to the gospel, a people, however, whose minds have been poisoned against the truth by the stories which are circulated, and by the falsehoods which have been told; but whenever we have opportunity to remove these falsehoods, to show the light that God has given to the world and the gospel plan, and to get men to investigate our message, we have found friends. They do not always receive the gospel. You know it requires quite an effort to receive this gospel, because one has to give up a few things of the world; but we have a great many friends in Australia, and the government is friendly towards us.

We undertook to erect a Church there a little over a year and a-half ago. When we began building, the ministers of the neighborhood in which we were going to locate the Church were very much alarmed, and they got up a huge petition among the people of the neighborhood and the ministers all over the city of Melbourne, a city of a million inhabitants, against the "Mormon" people erecting a Church in Melbourne; and so an investigation was entered into by the government. They called upon us to furnish the evidence of what we intended to do when we had that temple as they called it, erected, for they think that the Latter-day Saints do not build anything but temples. Of course, we had to produce the evidence of what we believed in, and what would take place at this building after we had succeeded in erecting it, and as a result we presented the gospel before the government of Australia, and we preached the gospel to them. They read our gospel publications, they read the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Articles of Faith, and some scientific works by some of our leaders, and those who have written the message of truth to the world in this day; and as a result they told us to go ahead and build our Church, they did not see any objections whatever. I also had the pleasure of explaining to them the fruits of our gospel wherever our people go. I asked them to investigate what had taken place in Canada where our people had gone and colonized. I asked them to investigate the conditions which prevailed at one time when the "Mormon" people lived in Mexico. I asked them the question if it should not be right and proper that we might be able to found such colonies and a people who loved liberty and who lived the laws of good government, and who upheld industry, and who lived a temperate, moral life. I asked them if Australia could be injured by a class of people of that kind, and they said: "We want that class of people." I said: "You will find them among the Latter-day Saints, and if you desire further information, come and learn what our purposes are and what our people are wanting to do for the world." So it was not difficult for them to see our position. I also told them that we had been there for forty years or more preaching the gospel, and that we had brought into their country thousands of pounds of money from our own country, for we all pay our own expenses, and we have never asked Australia for one cent of money. I asked them if there was any other set of ministers in all their land who taught the gospel and paid their own way and brought their money into that country? They said: "Why, from a business standpoint you are the most useful men and the best men we have in the country." And so they told us to go ahead and erect our Church, and we did, and we have erected two others since then, and the Lord is opening the way and removing the prejudice. We have had a hard fight with the picture films. They sent pictures all through that country maligning this people, and we had to meet them, and did meet them and succeeded in removing a great deal of the prejudice.

Time will not permit me to go on further telling you any more at this time, but I pray that the Lord will pour out his Spirit upon this people. I know that he will if we will live the gospel. I know that the prayers of these men who have been called to lead Israel are answered. I have seen it demonstrated many times. The elders that come into the field, upon whose heads the authorities of the Church have laid their hands, have those blessings fulfilled to the very letter, and the Lord is with them; The Lord is inspiring and leading and directing this great work.

Now, brethren and sisters, may the Lord continue to bless us, and bless the world that they may hear the gospel, that the predictions that this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world may soon come to pass; for the time of the end is drawing near. May the youth of Zion arise, and may they hold forth and hold up to the high standard of their noble sires. May we still hold up that great example of righteousness and industry and honesty and fidelity which they demonstrated and which has made this people what they are today, and made possible this great gathering of this conference, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I doubt very much whether President Penrose will be with us tomorrow. I feel in my heart that it will be wisdom for him not to make the attempt. We all know his marvelous and wonderful will power and his determination to be with us, but in view of his weakened condition I almost feel that it would be tempting Providence for him to be here tomorrow. He sent word that he expects to be here, but I am in hopes he will change his mind. We have him in mind as we sing this magnificent hymn. Few men in all the world have written anything finer in our day or in any other day than the many splendid hymns that Charles W. Penrose has written:

The congregation sang, "O ye mountains high."

Elder William D. Hanks, President of the Union stake of Zion, pronounced the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock Sunday morning.

THIRD DAY

MORNING SESSION

On Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, October 5, 1924, all seats in the Tabernacle were occupied and every available standing space was filled. Many were unable to gain admittance. All the aisles in the galleries and on the main floor of the building were occupied. Barratt Hall was provided with a radio, and in the Assembly Hall there was an overflow meeting at which Elder John M. Knight, president of the Western states mission, presided.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah."

The conference was opened by prayer by Elder Joseph R. Shepherd, president of the Logan Temple.

The hymn, "An angel from on high," was sung by Mrs. Mary Ellsworth and Mary Lindsay and the choir.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Parley P. Pratt has written more inspirational hymns for the Latter-day Saints to sing than any of the other of our poets; and there are few, if any, of his hymns that touch my heart more than this wonderful hymn to which we have just listened, so beautifully rendered by our sisters and the choir. It was written by inspiration, and, to my mind, if we omit the last verse, the wonderful prayer, contained in this hymn, is marred and lost. There has never been any doubt in the minds of the Latter-day Saints that Jerusalem will be rebuilt and re-established, and the prediction contained in this last verse is in prospect of being fulfilled. From the day that the British army rode into Jerusalem a change has come. We believe absolutely in the inspiration of this hymn, and that every word of this last verse will be fulfilled:

"Lo, Israel, filled with joy, shall now be gathered home,
Their wealth and means employ to build Jerusalem;
While Zion shall arise and shine,
And fill the earth with truth divine."

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

THE OLD PATHS AND THE GOOD WAY

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

"Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

"Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

"Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it."—Jer. 6:16-19.

My brethren and sisters, I stand before you this morning as Elder Stephen L. Richards said that he did, yesterday, awed in the presence of this great congregation of Latter-day Saints, and in the presence of God, our Father who, I know is here by his Spirit. I feel dependent upon him, dependent upon you, and the exercise of your faith in my behalf, to help me during the few moments of time which I expect to occupy.

THE PATHS OF THE LORD

The way, or path, to which the scripture which I have read refers, is the path, or road, in which the Lord desires, and has always desired, that his people shall walk.

THE TRAILS AND PATHS OF MEN

Roads made by men thread the world. They have many beginnings, and some of them intricate and devious windings before the end is reached. Some of them are broad and easy to follow, and converge into other like roads, along which multitudes constantly travel, multitudes who appear to be striving for the same objective, a destination which the history of the past shows but few reach. In the beginning these roads were mere trails. Men knew the direction in which they wished to travel, the destination which they desired to reach, but no one had traveled the road before them, no trail had been blazed, there were no markers to follow, and they went blindly on, often to disaster, and sometimes to death.

In their effort to reach the Pacific coast, less than one hundred years ago, people perished from thirst, when there was water in abundance near. No one had been over the road before them, and they perished in the deserts of sand, because there was no track to follow.

Today no man would attempt to reach Utah from Santa Fe by the route traveled by Cardenas more than three hundred years ago, we have learned that the Grand Canyon of the Colorado interposes an insurmountable barrier, a barrier which cannot be crossed, but know that there are other trails which make the passage of the great canyon and river possible. No party of travelers would attempt to reach the Pacific Coast by the route followed by the company of emigrants who perished in Death Valley, in 1849.

The impassable barriers, and relentless death traps have become known, the roads and trails have been charted, and the wayfarer, knowing his danger, avoids them.

The roads built by man are constructed to satisfy the demands of his environment. Over them he carries his commerce, they bring into close relationship remote communities and add greatly to his pleasure, convenience and comfort. They have become so well defined that they may be traveled with perfect safety and confidence, for from the starting point to our destination the way is plainly marked, though it take us to the other side of the world.

ONE ROAD WHICH MEN HAVE NOT DESIRED TO FOLLOW

There is one road which the great majority of mankind have never, as yet, cared to follow, notwithstanding the fact that the destination to which it leads is more desirable than any other. Since the earliest period of the existence of man, so far as we have record of his existence, the way has been plainly marked, and the destination to which the road leads well understood, but men have said, we will not walk therein.

Since the beginning of time, as we count it, men have shown by their works, that from the influences and teachings of the remote past, the conviction has prevailed that birth into this life is not the beginning of the existence of man, nor is death the end of it. The people of the world, whether civilized or savage, so far as my personal observation and study enable me to judge, have always found some outward means of expression, by which their faith in the invisible is shown. It may be by worship of the forces of nature, the sun, the moon or stars, or they may bow down to images of wood, or stone or gold. In whatever form, this worship is but the expression of faith in the intangible forces in which man believes, and to which he acknowledges his debt of allegiance and service.

PERPETUITY OF PEOPLES AND GOVERNMENT DEPENDENT ON RELIGIOUS FAITH

I know of no great nation of antiquity which did not have, in connection with its system of civil government, a code of ethics which embraced in its doctrines, and had for its purpose, the ends which we moderns seek in the various forms of religion which we believe in and practice. The perpetuity of the various forms of government which prevailed was dependent, as all governments are, entirely upon the ethical, or religious faith and practice of the people, for, if we are to judge by the history of the past, without the higher ideals of ethical life, applied in the administration of civil affairs, no nation can long survive.

The earth on which we dwell was designed by the Creator to be the home of man; and, for the benefit and blessing of his children, the Lord plainly marked the path, or way in which they should travel. He taught them that, being the Former of the universe, and Father of the spirits of all men, holding dominion over the earth, and all that pertains to it, that we, in appreciation of the blessings which we enjoy, should acknowledge our obligation to the Giver, by obedience to his will and reverence to his laws.

We know that our sojourn in this life is but transitory, that we must pass from mortality, and the Lord has taught us that by observance of certain simple laws which he has given, or by traveling in the road which he has marked out we may find our way back into his presence, where, if our conduct in mortality justifies, we will be crowned with glory, immortality, and eternal life.

We have but limited knowledge of the hand-dealing of the Lord with the ante-diluvian people, but sufficient is preserved to show that, notwithstanding the fact that he sent prophets among them, who warned them of the judgments to come, because of their transgression, they refused to listen, the result being that when the flood came they perished in their sins.

One would suppose that the dreadful experience through which these people passed would have been sufficient to have impressed the sons of Noah, who were among the survivors, that they never would have forgotten, but it was but a short time after they became established on the banks of the Euphrates and Tigris when they had so far forgotten their obligation to the Lord, their Father and deliverer, that in his anger he confounded their language and scattered them abroad on the face of the earth.

A GREAT EVENT, AND A MIGHTY PURPOSE FORETOLD

It was at this time that an event occurred which was of great importance to us, we people who are permitted to live in this, the greatest dispensation of the history of the world, in this land which is choice above all other lands. Foreseeing that the people of Babylon and Nineveh would not repent of their wickedness, and return to his service, the Lord took a small company from the great tower which was in course of construction, and under the leadership of inspired men brought them to this land which we now occupy.

That knowledge of the redemption which was to come to the human family through the infinite atonement which would be made by Jesus Christ was possessed from the beginning by the people of the world is plainly shown by the scripture, and is particularly emphasized in the revelations which have come to the Church in our day. In order that this great truth might not be lost sight of, the Lord has, at various times, and in divers places, manifested to his servants, either by dream or vision, or by personal appearance the importance and indispensable necessity of faith in it. It naturally followed that with the renewal of the old covenant, with the small body of people, whom he designed to bring to a new world, he should again make clear to them this great truth, by which their lives were to be governed, either for their blessing or condemnation, and this he did to the brother of Jared, under the following circumstances:

THE GREAT TRUTH MADE CLEAR BY REVELATION

While engaged in prayer the voice of the Lord came to him, as follows:

"Believest thou the words which I shall speak?

"And he answered; Yea, Lord, I know that thou speakest the truth, for thou art a God of truth, and canst not lie.

"And when he had spoken these words, behold the Lord showed himself to him, and said: Because thou knowest these things thou art redeemed from the fall; therefore ye are brought back into my presence; therefore I show myself unto you. Behold I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold, I am Jesus Christ. In me shall all mankind have light, and that eternally, even they who shall believe on my name; and they shall become my sons and daughters.

"And never have I showed myself unto man whom I have created, for never has man believed in me as thou hast. Seest thou that ye are created after mine own image? Yea, even all men were created in the beginning after mine own image.

"Behold, this body, which you now behold, is the body of my spirit; and man have I created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear to thee to be in the spirit will I appear unto my people in the flesh."

RESULTS OF AN ANCIENT WARNING UNHEEDED

By this we see, my brethren and sisters, that more than two thousand years before he manifested himself in the flesh Christ showed himself to this man, that a witness might be had among the people of his existence and future ministry among men. Before this people reached the American continent the Lord warned them of the consequence of disobedience, and made known the conditions upon which they were dependent, either for success or failure, after their arrival here. Let me read:

"And the Lord would not suffer that they should stop beyond the sea in the wilderness, but he would that they should come forth, even unto the land of promise, which was choice above all other lands, which the Lord God had preserved for a righteous people.

"And he had sworn in his wrath unto the brother of Jared, that whoso should possess this land of promise, from that time henceforth and forever, should serve him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fulness of his wrath should come upon them.

"And now, we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land that it is a land of promise; and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fulness of his wrath shall come upon them. And the fulness of his wrath cometh upon them when they are ripened in iniquity.

"For behold, this is a land which is choice above all other lands; wherefore he that does possess it shall serve God or shall be swept off; for it is the everlasting decree of God. And it is not until the fulness of iniquity among the children of the land, that they are swept off.

"And this cometh to you, O ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God, that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fulness come, that ye may not bring down the fulness of the wrath of God upon you as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done.

"Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ."

It is sufficient at this time to state that, notwithstanding this admonition, and the many manifestations of the power and mercy of the Lord, which were had among them, the Jaredites refused to walk in the way that the Lord had marked out, went into transgression, and finally, through war and contention, ceased to exist as a nation.

More than one thousand years after the Jaredites were led away from the tower of Babel, the Lord again brought a small colony of people from the old world, this time from Jerusalem, and established them in America, a people known, and referred to in the records which they kept, as the Nephites.

To them the Lord repeated the promise which he had made to the Jaredites: He would lead them to a choice land, which should be their inheritance, and great prosperity would attend them on one condition, namely, that they should be devoted to the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ. The doctrine of the atonement was revealed to them, and after his resurrection the Redeemer appeared, and organized his Church among them. For two hundred years after the organization of the Church the Nephite people enjoyed a great degree of peace, prosperity and happiness, but like the Jaredites before them, they refused to walk in the old paths, and when the prophets whom the Lord raised up warned them that the road in which they were traveling would lead to disaster, and that the way of the Lord was so plainly marked that a wayfarer, though a fool, need not err, they said, We will not walk therein. When the watchmen said, Hear the sound of the trumpet, which calls you back to the old way, they said, We will not listen. Disobedience resulted, as it always has, in loss of the birth-right which the Lord had given them, and the destruction of another nation which might, if obedient, have continued until the present.

MODERN DISCOVERY OF AMERICA

This brings us to another epoch, or dispensation, of greater importance to us, to the world at large, than any which has preceded it. Another period of one thousand years had elapsed. When the Lord inspired Columbus to sail away from Spain, and directed him to the shores of the New World, the first step had been taken in the opening of the greatest gospel dispensation which the world has ever known, a dispensation looked forward to by the prophets of old, in which the Lord said that he would consummate his work, and prune his vineyard for the last time, when the wheat was to be garnered, and the tares bound in bundles, and burned.

By natural means, as the Lord always operates for the accomplishment of his purposes, means so simple that the thoughtless and unbelieving do not see the manifestation of his power, he brought the Puritans from the old world to New England, the Dutch to New York, the English Cavaliers to Virginia and the French to New Orleans, a combination of races which, paradoxical as it may appear, was just calculated to give us the composite America who made the United States of America what it is, the greatest nation of the world today.

Inspired men have been raised up, who have given us our form of government, and the code of laws by which we are controlled, the best ever evolved by man, so far as we are able to judge. The Lord has strengthened the arms of the patriots who have defended us against the assaults of all those who have come up against us, and delivered us until today, from those who would have torn us asunder. Against all opposition, I sometimes think almost against ourselves, the Lord has brought us to our present condition, until this nation, like a city set on a hill, has become the light of the world.

ARE WE TO PROFIT BY PAST EXPERIENCES?

I have gone hastily over the history of the past, which brings us to the present, to us the most important period of the world's history, because it is our day, the day in which the conduct of world affairs, with which we are directly associated has been entrusted to us, when we are to prove whether or not we are to benefit by the experiences of the past, avoiding the pitfalls into which our predecessors have fallen, and profiting by the markers which they have placed along the road which leads to happiness and success, while we avoid those which the experience of the past teach us inevitably lead to disappointment and failure.

ALL INSTITUTIONS AND INTERESTS DEPENDENT ON THE STABILITY OF GOVERNMENT

The welfare of the Church, and every other interest and institution of our country is dependent upon the stability of our civil government, by which our every interest is controlled. There is nothing which we call our own, not even our lives, which is not subject to its demands. However much we may resist or say we will not, it compels submission.

Our government can be no better than its citizenship, since the men who frame and execute the laws are chosen from among the body of the people, and consequently reflect the character of the majority of the electorate.

IT IS TIME WE TAKE NOTE OF THE SIGNBOARDS OF HISTORY

Has the time come when it is worth while that we pause and carefully examine ourselves, when we should take note of the sign boards which history has placed along the road which we are traveling? Is it worth while to inquire whither this road leads? To listen to the pleadings of those who have gone over it before, and know the death traps which are scattered all along the way, or shall we go blindly on ignoring the experiences of the past, until chaos shall come to us as it has come to those who have occupied this choice land before?

I have gone back over the road which leads to Babylon and Nineveh, to Thebes and Memphis, to Tyre and Sidon, to Greece and Rome, and all along the way have seen these words of warning blazed in the tree-trunks, and cut into the face of the rocks—Beware of lack of faith in a living God. Beware of selfishness, of personal ambition, of pride, of love of power and dominion, of disregard for the honor of men, and the virtue of women, for the end of this road is disappointment and death.

I believe that every soul present desires the perpetuity of our government. It would be a source of sorrow to know that there is a person here who is not willing to give his all that this desired end may be achieved. If this is to be accomplished we must avoid the road which those who have gone before have followed. I fear, as I contemplate our present condition, that some of the paths in which we are walking, if we continue to follow them, will lead us into the broad road from which few turn back, once they have entered into it.

OUR NEGLECTS AND SERIOUS TRANSGRESSIONS

Our reverence toward our Father and God is not manifested in our lives as it should be. Instead of honoring his holy name, as we should, we openly and unblushingly profane it, notwithstanding the fact that he has told us that we should not take his name in vain, and that he who does so will not be found guiltless.

We are told that only the simple minded and uninformed believe in or practice the doctrine of prayer, and this world-old command of the Lord, this principle which opens the gates of heaven, and brings us into communion with the Father, through his Only Begotten Son, has been almost entirely eliminated from the American home, and is no longer regarded as a necessary, or even proper part of our public school system.

We loudly acclaim our devotion to, and love for American ideals, and pose as patriotic, law-abiding citizens, while the very men who enact our laws, and are appointed to enforce them, too often violate the law, and the trust reposed in them, as if they were exempt from that which they require others to obey. Our trusted agents who have the management of our public affairs, too often prove themselves to be rouges and swindlers by uniting with the men whom they profess to detect and prosecute, to rob us of that which they are employed to protect.

Men, profound in their knowledge of the law, too often use their great learning, not to uphold and magnify the law, but to pervert it, and find means by which we may avoid its just requirements. Self confessed criminals, guilty of the most heinous crimes, premediated in their execution, are turned loose upon defenseless, law-abiding communities, to continue their criminal practices upon those whom the law is designed to protect.

IN THESE TRANSGRESSIONS WE ARE TRAVELING THE BLAZED TRAILS TO DEATH

We are rapidly converting the Sabbath day, which should be observed as a day of rest and devotion, into one of pleasure, rather than worship. Are we becoming lovers of pleasure, rather than lovers of God? If so, we are traveling in one of those blazed trails which lead to death, rather than life.

GOD HAS REVEALED HIS WAY; WILL WE WALK THEREIN?

I bear this witness: That in the age in which we live the Lord has again revealed himself to man. He has again marked the road in which we should walk. It is the old way, and the voice of the prophets of the Lord has been heard calling upon the people to walk in it for nearly one hundred years. The sound of the trumpet has been heard, but men have said, We will not walk in the road marked out, neither will we listen to the sound of the trumpet which calls us back from the broad road which we are following.

GOD'S PATH, DECREE AND WILL REVEALED. WILL THE PEOPLE HEARKEN?

The decree of the Almighty regarding this land is in force today, as it was in the days of the Jaredites, and the Nephites. It is an everlasting decree, and we, as other peoples who have occupied this choice land, must be governed by it or suffer the consequence. Let me conclude my remarks by reading briefly from the Book of Mormon. This is the scripture of the American continent, the destiny of this land is outlined in it as in no other book. The road, or way, is plainly marked, no one need err who will follow the blazed trail. It is a straight and narrow way, but easy to follow, notwithstanding the many cross roads which intercept it. All of the danger points have been charted, and the way of safety plainly shown.

The man who sealed up this record, and through whom it came to us, said:

"And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth—that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief.

"And wo be unto the children of men if this be the case. * * * I exhort you to remember these things; for the time speedily cometh that ye shall know that I lie not, for ye shall see me at the bar of God; And the Lord God will say unto you: Did I not declare my words unto you, which were written by this man, like as one crying from the dead, yea, even as one speaking out of the dust? * * * And God shall show unto you, that that which I have written is true.

"And again I would exhort you that you would come unto Christ, and lay held upon every good gift, and touch not the evil gift, nor the unclean thing. * * *

"And now I bid you all farewell. I soon go to rest in the paradise of God, until my spirit and body shall again reunite, and I am brought forth triumphant through the air, to meet you before the pleasing bar of the great Jehovah, the Eternal Judge of both quick and dead. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES W. NIBLEY

My brethren and sisters, I suppose one could never grow old enough, at least I never expect to, to get entirely over stage fright. This is the third day that I have been sitting before this congregation, not knowing at what hour I might be called upon; and when one has gone through that experience for two or three days the stage fright becomes accentuated.

It is recorded of Thomas Carlyle, who could not do his thinking if there were any great noise about, that he had a neighbor, a lady, who kept some chickens; and the crowing of the roosters was a source of annoyance to him. He sent a kind letter to his neighbor and offered to buy the chickens so that he might kill them. She refused to let him have them, and said: "Besides I don't see why they bother you. The roosters crow only at stated intervals." He replied: "Yes, madam, that is true; but you don't know what I suffer waiting for them to crow."

I am indeed awed in the presence of this great multitude. My soul is subdued before this wonderful gathering, this splendid congregation, composed of men and women who are among the choicest of the earth. To stand before you and try to counsel, advise, or instruct is a responsibility which makes one feel his own insignificance. Except I have the Spirit of the Lord to assist me, I can be of little service in this position. I pray, therefore, for your sympathy and faith, and for the assistance of that same Spirit which has been given to the speakers of this conference up to the present.

I listened with deep interest to President Grant's report of the various activities and work of the Church—its growth and all its splendid affairs of which we heard in the opening of our conference. The building of temples and their maintenance and operation take a substantial part of the means of the Church. Here we maintain the Temple and these beautiful grounds. I hope you will not fail to walk around this block and see if you can get out of it a thrill such as has come to me during the last week, as I have looked upon its beauty and have thought of the pleasure that it must afford to the visitors within our gates. All this is kept up at the expense of the Church, and it costs a good deal of money. The free organ recitals, given every day to the strangers—and to those of our home people, as well, who choose to go—are paid for by the Church; as also is the care of the organ, the upkeep of this building and these grounds, and it all costs quite a sum of money.

Then, there are further expenditures for the building and meeting-houses, as the President called to our attention, and as Brother Rushton from Australia told us yesterday. They are spending considerable means for this purpose down in Australia; and we were also told by President Grant of large sums of money being spent for the building of places of worship in Sweden, in Norway, in Rotterdam, and in the cities of the eastern part of the United States. President Roberts told us of the chapels that have been built in Baltimore, and at other places in his mission; and, indeed, over all the face of the earth—in practically all of the civilized world, we may say—these activities of the Church are being conducted, and it takes a large, a very large, amount to carry them on.

Where does all this money come from? It is the tithes you pay, and I pay, that the people of this Church contribute year by year. I am in a position to announce to you, and I feel it my duty to do so, that the means you pay, the money you contribute as tithing, all that comes into the hands of the Trustee-in-Trust, is expended in a judicious, wise, and righteous way; and only in the interests, the best interests, of the building up of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I am in a position to know this, and I testify of it to you this morning.

My brethren and sisters, the question I want to put to you, and to myself also, is this: Have you and I done our share in this respect? Are we doing our full duty in assisting in the building up of this work? Are we helping to keep missionaries in the field? Is it our means that help to extend this work in the wonderful way that it is being extended? If not, then this spiritual power, this force, has not yet gripped you and me sufficiently to make us know that our duty is to pay our tithes—the full amount the Lord requires—and to do it when the means come into our hands; not to wait until the end of the year, because then we may not have it. It is true that we are instructed to make settlement annually, paying one-tenth of our interest, and we should see that it is paid annually, and make our settlement annually; but the time for us to pay our tithes and to contribute to this work, to help it grow and to be partakers in it, not only in words, but in deeds as well, is when we have the money in our hands, when it comes to us. I know that I was brought up strictly in respect to this matter, for my good old mother did not wait until she made ten pounds of butter before one pound of it was paid to the bishop. We had no money in those early days, but we gave butter, eggs, potatoes, wheat and hay—all that the earth produced. She did not wait until she got ten pounds before she paid one. No, she paid it from among the first, to get the tithing debt off her hands. If there were a dozen eggs, or two dozen, or five dozen, the tithing, and a little more than the tithing, went to the bishop at once. So I say, that this is a good example for me, and a good example for you. When the means come into our hands, let us pay our tithing then and not wait, perhaps until the means have been dissipated.

This Church, with its varied activities, tends to build up the communities in this country. Our Chamber of Commerce, in Salt Lake City, is asking for seventy-five thousand dollars in donations—what for? To advertise Utah. And what is the purpose of advertising Utah? To bring settlers here to make homes and to build up the communities. Well, that is a good thing. I contribute to that, as do many of you who live here. But this Church has two thousand missionaries, or about that number, in the field all the time, who are preaching this gospel, the gospel of Jesus Christ, and who are winning souls to it. While they do not encourage those people to come immediately to Utah, or to this country, yet, as soon as these converts hear about the Temple of the Lord, as soon as the Spirit of the Lord and the spirit of this work get into their hearts, the spirit of gathering is there, and you cannot hold them back, whether they are in Germany, or Switzerland, or Norway, or in the United States, or wherever they are. They want to come to Zion, and our difficulty is to keep them from coming too quickly. Now, if it is a good thing for the country and for the city that we spend money to bring people here, isn't this Church one of the best institutions for the merchant, for the business man, and for other interests? For the people that we bring here are of a class who want to build and own their own homes, and who do that very thing. In a little while they are established on the land, and they make the best of citizens.

It is safe to say that the means we spend every year in beautifying this block contribute more to the renown and glory of Salt Lake City than almost all the money that is spent elsewhere; and this money is contributed by you Latter-day Saints; it comes from your tithes; and it is good advertising; it is good work. We should not be ridiculed for it; we should rather be commended for it and blessed for it. This conference gathering every six months brings thousands of people here. I wonder whether that is not a good thing for the merchants and the business interests of this city. I wonder how these merchants would like to have our conferences suspended for a time. You would hear something other than criticism if this were done. You would hear a plaint and a wail go up; so I point out to you, and to the people of this State, and to our friends who are not of our faith, that the activities in which we are engaged make for the building up of the communities, and are a good business proposition in the line of material advancement and the betterment of communities, apart from the spiritual benefits which we know we receive. All this wealth of means which you contribute to the Church is expended, as I have said, in the building up of the community. This is truly American.

I rejoice this morning with all my heart that I am a member of the Church—this American Church that owes no allegiance to any foreign power or potentate, the only real American Church worthy of the name. It is American through and through. It was established by true-blooded Americans of Pilgrim stock, the best Americans from Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and the surrounding New England states. Such men were the founders of our Church. It is American in ideals, American in thought, American in every activity connected with it, American in its desire to bless and benefit the people. There is not any other church that can claim anything like that. This is verified by the men who sit here on this stand, President Grant, George Albert Smith and others, and by those who came before them—President Ivins, Elder Smoot and the Clawsons and Whitneys, Richards and Lymans—all sons of the American Revolution and leaders of this people. They are of the truest blooded American stock that can be found in this nation. I would like to have these things pointed out, and to let the world know that we are doing some good, that we are building up the country, and that the money which comes in as tithes is being righteously and properly expended for the advancement of the Kingdom of God.

Again I say, have I done my share? Have you done your share? You alone can answer your part of that question. Some of us have not. I doubt if I have. We can do a little better; we can do a little more. We haven't done quite enough, for this is a great and good work. Check up on yourselves and see where you stand. This work cannot be conducted merely by preaching. It takes means to do all these things that the President has pointed out and that I am trying to rehearse to you, and there are so many, many more, and it takes means to do them all. The thought I want to leave with you is this: Have we done our full share? If not, why can't we try to do it? for the work is just beginning. In all truth, I can say that in its growth and development it has scarcely started yet. Let me read from the Book of Mormon. In chapter 14 of I Nephi, which I shall not take time to read through, there is a reference to the very hymn we sang, written by Parley P. Pratt. When you go home read this 14th chapter of I Nephi. Among other things that the angel of Lord showed unto Nephi was this:

"And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld the power of the Lamb of God, that it descended upon the saints of the Church of the Lamb, and upon the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth; and they were armed with righteousness and with power of God in great glory."

Scattered everywhere is this people, building churches, as has been pointed out, in the East, in the West, and on the Islands of the Sea. It means permanency for the Saints. There will be branches of the Church throughout the world. In 1906 I had the pleasure of visiting the Old Country, in company with our late beloved President Joseph F. Smith. In the city of Bern, in Switzerland, we held a Priesthood meeting one night, at which the power of God was richly and truly manifest. President Serge F. Ballif was there and is a witness to what I say. Joseph F. Smith said: "Not only will we have churches here, but in this land of Europe we will have temples of the Lord built here and there, all over the land." That was his prediction. I believe it. I believe in this vision of Nephi; that he saw our people scattered in small communities all over the face of the earth. The Church of God is permanent. We must build these churches. I have said all along that this Church can spend its money to no better advantage than in building meeting-houses in which the people may gather together and worship, for this establishes the Church and lends permanency to its operations.

I see that my time has expired. The Lord bless you, brethren and sisters, bless this work, bless his servants, and may we open our hearts and say in our heart of hearts, in our very soul: "Yes, I will do my share, my full share. I must not miss the opportunity. This work is too good, it is too great. The Lord has made me a partaker of it, and now shall I be miserly and withhold my assistance?"

I think it is Brother Golden Kimball who tells the story of his father's owning a beautiful horse. Tithing was paid with horses, cattle, sheep, and everything obtainable in those days. The horse Brother Kimball had was a very fine one, and he said to the boys: "I believe I will turn that horse in for tithing; pay it to Bishop Hunter." The next morning one of the boys paraded the beautiful animal around and wanted to keep it, but President Kimball said: "See here, you take that horse right down and pay it in for tithing, before my heart puckers up."

Now let us do our share willingly and loyally, before our hearts pucker up. God bless you. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

President Charles W. Penrose is hearing everything that is going on here this morning, a radio having been installed in his room, and he is thoroughly enjoying the morning service.

Brother David O. McKay, in Europe, is well and happy but slightly disappointed that he is soon to return home. He is thoroughly enjoying his missionary work, and I am sure that he would really like to remain there until Spring.

You have probably heard of the great Columbia Basin Irrigation Project, the largest contemplated by the United States, up to date. Brother Richard R. Lyman has been requested, by the government officials, to be present there as one of the consulting engineers, hence his absence from this conference. He wrote that he would get excused, if possible, but we wired him that we did not care to disappoint his associates, and that he was at liberty to remain. He is with us today in spirit, and it is a source of sincere regret to him that he is not present.

One of the most remarkable and splendid hymns that we have is this:

"School thy feelings, O my brother,
Train thy warm impulsive soul."

This hymn was written by President Charles W. Penrose, at a time when he was falsely accused by his brethren, after laboring in the British mission for ten long years without purse or scrip. Upon completing his mission, as I understand it, and when he was about to go home, these false reports or accusations were made against him, and, as he has told me, the Lord gave to him that night, for his own consolation, the thoughts of this very wonderful poem. I shall not take time to read, or for us to sing, the entire hymn, but I will ask the choir and congregation to arise and sing the first verse: and when you go home be sure and read it all. Be sure and get it into your hearts. Be sure and make it a part of your lives, and this conference will not have been in vain, even if you have heard nothing else or received no other lesson here. It was the favorite hymn of President Francis M. Lyman, and he lived his life in perfect accord with the teachings of his favorite hymn:

School thy feelings, O my brother,
Train thy warm, impulsive soul;
Do not its emotions smother,
But let wisdom's voice control.

School thy feelings; there is power
In the cool, collected mind;
Passion shatters reason's tower,
Makes the clearest vision blind.

School thy feelings; condemnation
Never pass on friend or foe,
Though the tide of accusation
Like a flood of truth may flow.

Hear defense before deciding,
And a ray of light may gleam,
Showing thee what filth is hiding
Underneath the shallow stream.

Should affliction's acrid vial
Burst o'er thy unsheltered head,
School thy feelings to the trial,
Half its bitterness hath fled.

Art thou falsely, basely slandered?
Does the world begin to frown?
Gauge thy wrath by wisdom's standard,
Keep thy rising anger down.

Rest thyself on this assurance:
 Time's a friend to innocence.
 And that patient, calm endurance
 Wins respect and aids defense.

Noblest minds have finest feelings
 Quiv'ring strings a breath can move,
 And the Gospel's sweet revealings
 Tune them with the key of love.

Hearts so sensitively moulded,
 Strongly fortified should be,
 Trained to firmness, and enfolded
 In a calm tranquility.

Wound not wilfully another;
 Conquer haste with reason's might;
 School thy feelings, sister, brother,
 Train them in the path of right.

The choir and congregation sang, "School thy feelings, O my brother."

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

"For he taught them as one having authority and not as the scribes."

THE WORDS OF THE BRETHREN RING TRUE

I have listened with great interest to the remarks that have been made by my brethren at the various sessions of this conference. I know that their words have rung true, that they have been accompanied with power, with authority, that they have penetrated the hearts of the people, and that we have gone from this building at the close of each service rejoicing, and bearing witness, one to another, that the truth has been declared; and, I believe, with the determination of making it more thoroughly a part of our lives when we depart from this conference. Truly we have heard the word of the Lord, and it has been spoken in power. The counsel, the advice, the instruction have been given unto us in authority. There has been no discordant note, no uncertain sound, but everything that has been said has been said with the conviction of the truth, and we rejoice.

THE TRUTH GROWS BRIGHTER WITH USE

Yet nothing has been said that is new. There has been no new revelation, no presentation of something that we did not understand, nothing that we have not previously been taught, and which had previously found a place in our hearts, for the truth endures forever. It is always new, it grows brighter with use. We love it the more we come in contact with it, which is not the case with falsehood.

In one of the revelations given in the early days of the Church, the Lord said, speaking of one of the ordinances of the gospel; that he revealed "a new and an everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning." Those words are very significant. It is new because truth does not grow old, and yet was from the beginning, and hence must endure through all time, and through eternity; for that which is true must remain.

COMMOTION AND UNREST IN THE WORLD

Throughout the world today, as we have already been informed by a number of the speakers, there is commotion and a spirit of unrest; and the people, many of them, feel that it is something to their credit to hold radical views, to consider themselves to be progressive, and to make attack upon things that have stood and have endured throughout the ages. This tendency is not alone found in the political world. It is found in the world of education, of religion, of government, of business and everywhere. Men are departing from the well-worn paths, no matter how good they are, and feel that conservatism is a reproach; that it is the duty of man to do away with that which is old, or which has been established, and find something that is new. We stand practically alone in the world, yes, absolutely alone in the world, representing the truth of the living God, declaring to all men the principles of eternal truth which do not change. The gospel of Jesus Christ is not new in the sense in which the world looks upon things as being new, for it has endured through the ages, not merely since the days of the advent of the Son of God, but from the beginning of the world, for the plan of salvation was prepared for the benefit of man, and declared unto him in the beginning. These principles do not change, they cannot change, they must endure immutably through all time.

The Christian world may be divided into two camps, one bitterly opposing the other; one calling itself the progressive or modernist division, the other calling itself the fundamentalist division. They may think they are founded upon the truth of the gospel as it has been established. But we stand for the revelations of God as they have been revealed in this dispensation, known as the dispensation of the fulness of times, unchangeable, immutable, enduring forever, because they are eternal.

AN ABIDING KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST BRINGS PEACE

If there is any one thing that brings joy and peace and satisfaction to the heart of man, beyond anything else that I know of, it is the abiding testimony which I have, and which you have, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. That is a truth that cannot be changed. Men may attack it; they may ridicule it; they may declare that he is not the Redeemer of the world, that his mission was not true, or that its purpose, through the shedding of his blood, was not to grant unto all men the remission of sins on condition of their repentance. They may refuse to believe in the resurrection from the dead, or even that Christ himself came forth, as the Scriptures declare, after he had been put to death by his enemies; nevertheless the truth remains. He did die for the sins of the world, he did bring to pass redemption from death, he did grant unto men the opportunity of repentance, and remission of sins through their belief and acceptance of the principles of the gospel, and of his mission. These truths are fundamental, they shall endure; they cannot be destroyed no matter what men may say or think. Furthermore, the mission of Jesus Christ teaches us that there was a time when man departed from the truth, when transgression came into the world, and man, through his agency sinned, or violated a law, which brought death upon the world. For Christ came to atone for sin, to bring again the restitution of life, of peace, of happiness, through the things which he suffered. Now anything which is contrary to that is not true.

THE ATONEMENT OF CHRIST FUNDAMENTAL

I bear witness to that which was said by President Grant at the opening session of this conference, that there is no place in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the man who does not accept, without reservation, the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ, who does not believe that his mission in this world was to redeem, to restore, to grant again unto man the privilege, through his faith, through his repentance, and his worthiness, the opportunity of coming back again into the presence of God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ. If there are within the Church those who have these so-called modernist tendencies, who deny the miracles of Christ, the miracles of the scriptures, the doctrines known as the gospel of Jesus Christ, who cannot accept him as the Redeemer of the world, then they should repent of their sins, for it is within the power, and it is the privilege of each individual member of this Church to know the truth for himself, through the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost. There need be no doubt, no uncertainty, in regard to this matter. The Lord has taught us these principles in modern revelation. He declared them while in his ministry upon the earth.

JESUS DECLARED HIMSELF TO BE THE SON OF GOD

I know that there are those who make the statement that Christ did not declare himself to be the Son of God during his ministry. To the contrary, that was the claim he made from the beginning of his ministry, and which has been repeated in the revelations that have come unto us in this dispensation, one of which I shall read:

"Hearken and listen to the voice of him who, is from all eternity to all eternity, the Great I Am, even Jesus Christ—

"The light and the life of the world; a light which shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not;

"The same which came in the meridian of time unto mine own, and nine own received me not;

"But to as many as received me, gave I power to become my sons; and even so will I give unto as many as will receive me, power to become my sons.

"And verily, verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth my gospel receiveth me; and he that receiveth not my gospel receiveth not me.

"And this is my gospel—repentance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which showeth all things, and teacheth the peaceable things of the kingdom."

TESTIMONY THAT JESUS IS THE CHRIST, THE SON OF GOD

Those words are true, absolutely true. I bear witness of this fact because I know it; you know it; and so we stand firmly planted on the rock of truth, bearing witness that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and that through him comes redemption from death, which passes upon all men irrespective of their belief or their unbelief, their acceptance or their rejection of his mission, and also through him comes redemption to man from sin on condition of his repentance, and endurance to the end.

May we be faithful and true in the discharge of every duty and to the truth which God has revealed unto us, and endure in righteousness to the end, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I failed to mention in my opening address that the following presidents of stakes have been appointed during the past six months:

James A. Christensen, North Sevier stake.

Harry L. Payne, St. Joseph stake.

Albert H. Belliston, Juab stake.

I also forgot to mention the fact that we have established, since our last conference, a French mission with Russell H. Blood as the president. I take it for granted that he is a son of Henry H. Blood—I do not know it, but his signature resembles Henry's writing.

I also failed to mention that we now have a total of wards, stakes, missions, conferences and branches, of 1,959, or 41 lacking of 2,000.

Announcements were made by President Heber J. Grant that the Sunday School Union would hold their semi-annual conference in the Tabernacle this evening at 7 o'clock; also that a special Priesthood meeting would be held on Monday morning at 10 o'clock in the Assembly Hall.

An anthem, "The Almighty," was sung by Jessie Williams and the choir.

Elder George A. Little, president of the Oquirrh stake, offered the closing prayer, and the conference adjourned until 2 p. m.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 o'clock a. m., Sunday, October 5, 1924.

Elder John M. Knight, president of the Western States mission, presided.

Music and singing were furnished by the Seventeenth ward choir, of the Salt Lake stake of Zion, Hyrum J. Christensen, chorister; Tracy Y. Cannon, organist.

The choir and congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints."

Prayer was offered by Elder David R. Lyon, bishop of the Ensign ward, Ensign stake.

The choir sang, "He died, the great Redeemer died."

ELDER JOHN Q. ADAMS

Former President of the Samoan Mission

My dear brethren and sisters, if I display just a little unusual nervousness this morning, it is due to a combination of circumstances over which I possibly have no control. I have yet to meet with the individual who feels as much at home here in this position as he does in his own home. Also in eight and a-half years of missionary experience in the Islands, I had three opportunities of addressing an audience in my own language. Then, coming to this meeting, we had the sad duty of bearing a half-dead lady to St. Mark's hospital, and left one gentleman with the spark of life just flickering between this world and the next, the result of an accident when a large car went into the ditch. Imagine the condition of a person in this frame of mind, who has these conflicting emotions.

I have one thought and hope and desire in my mind, and that is that I may still retain a sufficient portion of the Spirit of God that what few moments I shall occupy, and what few words I express, I may leave you a testimony that I know that above all things and beyond all things the gospel of Jesus Christ and its accompanying spirit supersedes everything in the world. In order that I should feel entirely at home now, I should desire that this house should be transferred into a Samoan house—for that is where I spent the eight best years of my life—with you sitting on the floor; that before each one of you should be a Bible, a Book of Mormon, and Songs of Zion, in the native tongue, after the order of a mounted piece of artillery. If I should refer to a passage of Scripture, you would not give me time to find that in my own Bible, but the first person to find it would read it for me. The people always have the Word of God at their fingers' tips. In the fractional part of a second the audience can find any passage of scripture in the Bible. It is not often that we can find cobwebs upon the books that we have down there, for people are using them all the time.

I do not know that I should refer to any statistics this morning, or give you any report that bears very much on figures; those things we get enough of in the daily walks of life. But the mission is progressing under the able direction of President Butler. If I could bring to you the spirit of the mission field, so that you can feel the spirit that your sons and daughters possess who have gone out from your roofs to take the gospel out, I should feel satisfied with my effort. They are probably gathered together at this hour in conference. I am wondering if you know the conditions of those people attending their conference session today. The way you came here, there were hardly any of you who did not come thirty miles an hour in an automobile or on the interurban, overflowing with convenience and comfort; but possibly half the congregation there will have walked between 75 and 100 miles to attend conference, on the largest island of the group. They take a couple of baskets woven from the leaf of the cocoanut tree; in those baskets are their clothes for conference, possibly a little food—because some of those lava stretches are 30 or 40 miles in extent, with no houses or drinking water. In tramping over those rough lava trails for three or four days, carrying their clothing, books, etc., they reach conference, and when they reach conference they feel in their hearts that they have come for something, and after they have left conference, they feel they have attained that objective, and back they go over those rough trails to their homes, carrying the spirit of the gospel; partaking of the influence of the gospel, having been fed the bread of life, and all keyed up and prepared to run another six months.

You and I, with all of these modern conveniences and luxuries, possibly get a little careless, and do not realize and appreciate what God has given us. I think we hardly appreciate the gospel as our own people out in the world do. It is not a difficult matter there for us to get 90%, of our 3,000 membership in the Samoan mission, to attend to their duties. If we do not have well up toward 90% in attendance at Priesthood or Relief Society meetings, or other auxiliary organizations, and Sabbath meetings and Sunday schools, we feel that we are slipping; we begin to look at what is wrong—if it is with us or with them. Here we do not find the percentage nearly so large. I want to bear you my testimony that the more we do in this Church, and the greater the inconveniences that God puts us to, the more we appreciate it in the end. It is not the young man who is left a legacy of a million dollars who appreciates the meaning of that; it is his father, who accumulated that fortune by the sweat of his brow. And just so it is in a spiritual way. You and I will have to get in and work, before we get a full appreciation of what the gospel means.

The thought strikes me that I should read a little clipping this morning, that I think is almost prophetic. When we left for the mission field five years ago, this had just been published in one of the newspapers. One of the most noted correspondents, William T. Ellis, received an assignment from some big newspaper syndicate to go to the Near East and ascertain the conditions that obtained there at the completion of the War. He met with all the notables in a military and governmental way, and these few paragraphs are what he has written with reference to that:

"It was but a few days ago that the sultan of Turkey, himself the accepted spiritual head of 200,000,000 Moslems throughout the world, told me of his yearning for a prophet to come from God to lead aright the stumbling feet of the world. In this he was but one of a dozen with whom I have conversed since leaving New York harbor—a much decorated British general in a high administrative post confessing himself baffled unless there shall arise a great spiritual leader for the race; Venizelos, the one man who is Greece's greatest asset, speaking wistfully of a spiritual rebirth; another, a romantic figure from the desert, a hero and a champion, talking not of battles, but of whence and how we may expect a new interpreter of the Eternal; another a powerful and wealthy business man with whom I dined in Paris, freely declaring that the social tangle of the times cannot be unraveled unless there shall come a clear Voice calling to the spirits of men, 'This is the way, walk ye in it;' others, American officers in France, ripened by their own great deeds musing upon the possibility of a Personality who may merge the distracted and divergent minds of men into one common purpose of good will; still another himself a soldier saint, troubled in soul, because in his America there had arisen no great spiritual leader to call in prophet tones the nation back to God."

Never heard of Joseph Smith, I presume; had never heard that there are prophets in this day and age, as once on a time!

"It would be less than honest journalism, did I fail to report that amid the welter and turbulence and discordance of world politics which is my present assignment, I find among thoughtful men of every creed and country a decided note of spiritual wistfulness and expectancy. We are too serious now for the mercenary and mechanical methods of a noisy evangelist, uttering only safe and remunerative sensationalism; we want a man from some Patmos who can say, 'Thus saith the Lord.'"

Wonderful! Nothing more prophetic within the lids of the Bible than what was uttered by that man, in ascertaining the ideas, hopes, and aims, and ideals of the great thinking men of the world at the present time; conversed with the Sultan of Turkey; conversed with men high in government circles in different nations of Europe, and high in different walks of life in other avenues, and came to this conclusion: that unless a man comes who can say, "Thus saith the Lord," we will still be groping in the darkness!

We have such a man, we have such an office, such power, and such authority. We have one who is able to say, "Thus saith the Lord." The proposition before the small, limited force of missionaries in this age is to get that message before the people. In doing so, various experiences come to them. It is a difficult task. You recollect that the Savior—Deity himself—dwelling upon the earth here in the flesh, ministering for something like three years among the children of men, only succeeded in bringing to the light a few in number. The vast, untold millions did not hearken to his message. And so it is in this dispensation.

But those whom the gospel reaches are transformed, in some fashion, so that the world recognizes there is a difference. They can tell a "Mormon" boy and girl in the Samoan Islands as far as they can see them, we are told. One fine evening, seventeen years ago, a group of "Mormon" boys and girls from our school village, at Mapu Saga, with President William A. Moody leading, went into the harbor of Pago Pago in a row boat. Tied to the wharf of the American Naval Station, there lay a United States gunboat. President Moody was struck with the spirit of inspiration and said to the boys and girls, "When we get under the stern of this vessel, begin singing the song, 'One day nearer home,' and we will see what effect it has." As these boys' and girls' voices rang out over the placid waters of the harbor, officers and men came to the rail of their vessel and peered down. They ascertained that it was the "Mormon" boys and girls coming down from our school village up the coast. We had scarcely reached our conference headquarters at the head of the harbor when a man from the ship, sent by its captain, who is usually a man high in American naval circles, came and said, "Will you see that these boys and girls come on our ship and sing tomorrow?" We had seventy-five boys and girls who were walking down the coast, in addition to the rest, and we seized that opportunity, and President Moody and others of us were taken into the officers' quarters and dined with them as the boys and girls gave a program in English. Without exception they were clean and pure, externally and internally, and the effect upon those men was almost electrical. And numbers of those men, who remain three and four years, time and again bore testimony in this fashion, "We don't know your boys' and girls' names, but as far as we can see the faces of those boys and girls we know that they are 'Mormons.' Their faces fairly shine with a different sort of intellectual expression."

What effect does this gospel have upon people, when we purify ourselves, when we strive like the Saints out in the world? There is a wonderful transformation comes over them. We have in the Hawaiian Islands, where Brother E. Wesley Smith labored, a colony of Samoan Saints, numbering more than sixty. By the way, Brother Smith and I, although I feel that we have always known each other, never met until a short time ago; nor Brother Knight and I. We were laboring out in the mission field and became acquainted through correspondence. In the Hawaiian mission field now, there is a man from Samoa, with his wife and seven children. Upon the completion of the temple at Laie, our people seemed to be seized with an intense desire to accumulate enough of this world's goods to go to the temple, and we called some of our men and women there. We said to this man, Aulelio, "It is 2,500 miles, which is a long ways off, but if you can secure enough to go there, go and take your wife, and go as soon as you desire. This man had labored as a missionary for twenty years, without pay, something that people of the world cannot realize or appreciate. Of course, he could not accumulate much, but through the blessings of God, he was able to sell his home and sell his rolls of matting that he used for chairs and bedding, and everything in the world they owned, four or five head of cattle, and ducks and chickens, and managed to scrape together $600 or $700, took the entire amount to buy their passage, and they are now in Laie, working for the salvation of the vast numbers of Samoans who have preceded them to the other side of the veil. Would you and I do that? Until the time comes that we would, we will never be in the position of the Saints of the world. It is a difficult thing for me, twelve miles north, to come here and do work in the temple. But if we had to travel 2,500 miles, and sell all that we have in the world, so that when we returned home we would have no roof over our heads, no worldly possessions whatever, as if we were just born into the world, but our faith so ripened and we should know God so thoroughly—if we were in possession of that spirit, then we should be in the position that these people are. Do not wonder why 90% attend their duties; do not wonder why, when the elders return from the mission field, they have a little different spirit than before they went, or after they have been home a few months.

I bear you my testimony in conclusion that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the one true system through which you and I shall or may attain to perfection, or at least as near to it as our heavenly Father demands of us, because he has said that we should be perfect as he is perfect. It is the only medium through which we can attain to everlasting happiness.

I shall refer you, last, to a gentleman who went out to the South Sea Islands on board a pleasure yacht two years ago, just to show you what the conception of the world is of "Mormonism." This gentleman is a man who has made millions in the steel industry, who at the conclusion of his life, in that avenue, has gone down to California and spends the winters cruising out on his own yacht in the south Pacific. He came to our mission headquarters one morning. We were astonished at first. We had in our keeping a Samoan lady of royal birth. She had once been a favorite in the family of the renowned Scotch author, Robert Louis Stevenson, who searched the world over to spend his last days in a place of absolute quiet and peace, where he might write as he desired. He passed away in the early nineties just back of Apia, and his body now rests on the top of Vaea Mountain, on his own beloved estate. This lady, Laulii, was one of the reigning belles of the islands then. In her later years she and her husband went to Frisco and were there for twenty-one years. She was received in exclusive society circles there, and was the author of a book dealing with her island people. Upon returning to Samoa her husband died, and half a dozen years ago she joined the "Mormon" Church. Sometime later she was stricken with an insidious complication of diseases, one of the afflictions being cancer, and we took her into "Mormon" Mission Headquarters, and my wife was ministering to her in our little humble home for several months, as she hovered between life and death. This gentleman in question was hunting her. He had letters of introduction to her from Mrs. Field of New York, a daughter of Robert Louis Stevenson, and herself had lived in the island with her noted father. He was told at the wharf that Laulii was up at "Mormon" headquarters. To make a long story short, as he left our little porch he drew a cigarette case from his pocket and said, "Mr. Adams, there is no need of offering you this, because I know you people don't partake of this." I said, "You haven't had much to do with us—" to which he replied, "Three or four weeks ago we were in Tahiti, and we came across two or three of your elders there, and we were in port in one of the diminutive island lagoons. While we were there a vessel came in and after being in port a few days, there were something like $7,000 that they had squeezed out of these natives in this one small village, and away the vessel went to another island, and so it goes from one island to another upon which that church in question is established. You 'Mormon' people, instead of taking money away from these islanders, as this other organization has done, sustain yourselves, do not draw any salary from your Church; and upon offering those elders in Tahiti tobacco, they refused it; and wherever I meet a 'Mormon' elder I shall not insult him by offering him tobacco." And he further said, "Mr. Adams, will you please tell me something concerning your work, what there is about your Church that seems to distinguish it from all others? I shall always advocate it, and wherever I go in the future, and 'Mormonism' is the topic, and the people are pelting you with epithets, I will say that in 'Mormonism' I have discovered the true Spirit of Christ, more nearly than in any other church organization on earth."

This man had turned in disgust from all the churches, knowing that they did not exhibit the Spirit of Christ. He left us and went down to the Tongan Islands, and thence on to Fiji. We received a very fine letter from him, when he got to California, and the result is that they are going to erect a monument to this good woman. She had later passed away in our home. Think of it! He said that he had discovered in the "Mormon" Church more nearly the Spirit of Christ than in any other church of his experience. Well, we know that. My testimony is to that effect, and I leave it with you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ISAAC P. THUNELL

Former President of the Swedish Mission, and Bishop of the Wasatch ward, Granite stake

My dear brethren and sisters, I hope and pray that I may have an interest in your faith and prayers, that the Spirit of the Lord will direct my remarks as it has done the remarks of Elder Adams.

We will transfer our thoughts from the extreme tropical climate to a northern climate, in which I have been laboring. It was very difficult to get into Sweden on my recent last mission, owing to the fact that there were technicalities regarding the signing of passports. After being refused passport visas at Chicago, New York, and Washington, we decided to go on to England and try there. President McKay took us down to the office of the Swedish Consul, at which place, after no difficulty whatever, we received our passports and continued our journey to Sweden. After arriving in Sweden we felt that everything was all right and we would be permitted to fill our missions without further hindrance; but, to our surprise, after having been there only a few days we were politely informed that our passport visas had been cancelled and that not only we but all the elders in Sweden were to leave at once. How sad and heavy-hearted we felt at this news. But we had faith in our heavenly Father, and we believed that he would assist and help us in every way; so we used every means possible to obtain the proper signatures to our passports. It was of no avail. I personally petitioned three times to the King of Sweden in order to get a pass endorsed but the third time my pass was returned, and I was told by the chief of police, or rather his representative, that our presence was not wanted longer. Still we did not feel that we could give up, and we used every means possible to remain in that country. We employed the services of an attorney, and when we explained what we had done, he said, "Gentlemen, there is nothing else to do but for you to leave this country and go back to your homes." We were glad that we had used every means that even he could employ, though we still thought there was one more way, and that was to rely on the Lord. We called a fast. By this time two or three weeks had passed, and the word had gone to England and America that we were finding it difficult to remain in the Old country. I am sure that the prayers to the Lord from you people were answered in blessings to us. We felt your prayers and your faith. I bear testimony to you today that it was through the faith and prayers of our brethren and sisters, both at home and abroad, and through the blessings of our heavenly Father that the hearts of the officials of that government were softened to some extent, so that we were permitted to remain and complete our missions.

This was in fulfilment of a prophecy and blessing pronounced upon our heads when we left for our mission field. President George F. Richards gave me a blessing in which it was promised that I should go to Sweden, perform an honorable mission, and after having completed that mission, return to my home. I never stressed the promise so much, until I had been in the mission field nearly two years. Then I thought of my blessing, and that part in particular which pertained to my staying there until my mission was completed and fulfilled. Truly I thanked God for a prophet and for prophets, whom we have in the Church to lead, guide, and direct us.

The Swedish mission is in a flourishing condition, considering the shortage of missionaries. We had but nineteen missionaries in a country that has about six millions of people. The elders were united, they were good men of various occupations in life; men who had come into the field, leaving their homes, families, and their all to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. They found joy and pleasure in their labors. We found many friends in that good country; so many that we could not fill the appointments with the few elders at hand. We went into the Arctic Circle, the country of the midnight sun, where we were met with open arms by both Saints and non-members. Many opened their doors and asked us to be guests in their home. We were pleased to bear our testimonies to them and tell them of the revealed gospel of Jesus Christ.

I am impressed to tell you of a letter I received. It contained, in brief, the following account. A certain man, who lived near the Arctic Circle, had been reading in Revelations, the 14th chapter, 6th and 7th verses, where it speaks of an angel that should come to the earth with the everlasting gospel. He had taken this to heart and was ready to receive the message of that angel. But where to find him or anything regarding the visitation of angels to the earth, he did not know. So he went to a neighboring town and visited every book store, asked the clerks of the book stores for any book that would tell him of the visitation of angels to the earth. Of course they could not, but he persisted: "I must find something that will give me light on this subject." In an old second-hand store he asked concerning the ministration of angels coming to earth in these days. He was told that those days are past. But just as he was leaving the clerk said, "Just a moment; I believe I can give you some information regarding this. I have seen a book with the picture of an angel printed on its front page," referring to the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants in which a representation of the Angel Moroni is found in the Swedish editions. After making some inquiries they finally obtained our headquarter's address at Stockholm. The letter of inquiry, in part, told this story: "Please send one of your representatives, a missionary, to my home as soon as possible, because I want to hear of this angel, I want to hear of the gospel of Jesus Christ, because I am sick both in body and mind but more concerned about my spiritual welfare than that of my body." You can imagine the thrill that came to us when we read this letter, and how we longed to get there and preach the gospel to this man. I sent President Mathias Erickson, who was on his third mission in Sweden, a noble man and a wonderful defender of the gospel of Jesus Christ, to visit this man. When he arrived he was received by the man and his wife with open arms. He remained with them some days, and had the privilege of baptizing the man into the Church and confirming him a member. And today he is a happy man.

Brethren and sisters, the people are strong, stalwart, kind and good-hearted. Every one of us missionaries are more than grateful for the kindnesses shown to us. Among them are many of the blood of Israel, and I am proud to have been born in that country, and thankful to God that the elders visited my parents and that they received the gospel. The gospel is being extensively preached everywhere in that country. I had the privilege of filling a mission there in 1907-8-9, and the interest is greater now than then. A wave of spirituality has come over the people, and they are longing to hear more of religion. New sects are arising and new churches are springing up. But we need not go astray, for we have a prophet to lead and guide us aright.

While in Sweden I read a pamphlet published by a certain association, telling of a meeting held in Gothenburg, at which about 300 Lutheran priests attended, and the substance of this pamphlet was that one of the Lutheran priests got up and said, "Ladies and gentlemen (for there were a few ladies present also, as guests of these men), we are assembled to discuss the vital things of our religion, but I want to tell you that we are each and every one of us hypocrites. We cannot follow Christ if we follow the rituals of our Church." And then he went on to enumerate what they had to teach, what they had to pray for, whether they wished to do so or not. He said, "No matter how obnoxious we may seem to the public and the people, no matter how much they hate our doctrine or what we teach, we cannot change it, nor can we change our positions as did the Savior of mankind. If the people did not treat him kindly in one place, he would move to another and teach the people there. But we are planted down in one parish and cannot move, even if we want to. The religion that we are teaching is inadequate."

One of the leading ministers of that country stood openly in a meeting and said that he did not believe in God. "There is no living God," he said. And his ideas conform to the modern ideas of today that Jesus Christ is not the Son of God but the son of Joseph. That was his thought, and he expressed it openly, and yet on Sunday he preached the doctrines and creed of the Church.

I attended a meeting where an atheist spoke. "Can religion save the world? Religion has not made any progress in the last two thousand years; it has not made people better." A discussion was held after, and I had the privilege of saying a few words. I said, "Yes, religion can save the world, if it is a religion revealed from God our heavenly Father, founded upon truth, founded upon revelation. It can save the world both spiritually and materially. I related the message of the restored gospel to the Latter-day Saints and I was proud to bear my testimony that this message had brought people from all over the world in unity together; and that though from different nations, and different tongues, they were welded together in one Church, where unity existed. A majority of these people own their own homes, and spiritually, financially and materially the gospel of Jesus Christ is saving them. We are blessed with all of these things.

We know that the gospel of Jesus Christ will persist. I fully agree with President Grant in what he said in his opening speech, that a marvelous work and a wonder has been brought to the world. It is a saving gospel—the true Church of Christ.

I have often thought and wondered, brethren and sisters, how Job felt when the Lord spoke to him from the whirlwind; and John the Revelator, on the Isle of Patmos, when he heard the voice of the Savior. It pierced him, through body and soul, you might say. I had a thrilling experience yesterday, standing in the store in which I am employed, listening to the conference sermons through the radio. All at once I heard a prophet's voice, one that we all know, President Heber J. Grant call out my name, saying that if Elder Isaac P. Thunnell and Elder A. William Lund are in the audience, they will please come to the stand. There was a thrill went through me, and it made me think, and I have thought a great deal about that ever since. We have been told, brethren and sisters, that a still small voice will dictate to us what we should do and what we should not do; we have been told that if we live perfectly, this voice will not fail us. Sometimes we do not live as perfectly as we should do, and therefore we lose the spirit and communication with this voice. We must place ourselves in harmony with the Lord, because he can and will give us inspiration if we seek for it.

This is a marvelous work and a wonder that the Lord has begun upon the earth, and I am willing with you, brethren and sisters, to work with all my might for the furtherance of this great work in the earth. I have often thought about the vision of Isaiah, who saw in vision the tops of the mountains, the everlasting hills, where the House of the Lord should be established. I have said to myself, how wonderful it must have been for him to look into the future! I have come to the conclusion that the Lord kept this spot of earth for the Latter-day Saints, that they might here in peace and plenty rejoice together with one another over the blessings that he had prepared for them. For centuries the Lord has caused the rains and snows to fall in the mountains so that the most precious soil from the hills would be washed down into the valleys. Our cities are built in the shadow of the hills, whence the rich soil has been washed down for centuries. The Lord knew where to send us. He prepared this land for centuries before we came here. Let us appreciate our blessings to the full.

I bear my testimony that I know the restored gospel is true. I have had many testimonies through the Spirit of the Lord of its divinity. I am willing with you to go forward from this day on to help to further the work of the Lord in the world. I ask the blessings of the Lord upon each and every one of us, that we may live by the inspiration of his Spirit and enjoy its blessings at home even as we did in the mission field, and we shall, if we live for it, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER E. WESLEY SMITH

Former President of the Hawaiian Mission

Thus far, during conference, I have been thrilled, and I would that the preceding speakers had continued on in their splendid endeavor to give us those thoughts that are faith-promoting. I feel rather weak in standing here. It is my desire, however, to be blessed with the Spirit of God, that I may be able to speak forth words pleasing and beneficial to all present. We have listened attentively to the previous speakers concerning the good people of far-off Samoa, and the splendid Saints in the land of Sweden, now may I bring you back again to the land of the Pacific, to Hawaii, the land of my birth. I naturally feel a love for the good people in the "Paradise of the Pacific." It has been my good fortune to spend practically a third of my life in the mission field, the happiest time and the most blessed in my life.

I desire to give just a brief report of four years' work there while I presided over that mission, that you may know your sons and daughters called to the mission field under the inspiration of God are bringing forth good fruit into the fold of Christ, that his work is growing and being magnified among the people. In harmony with President Adam's statement, "Mormonism" is printing itself upon the good people throughout the world. "By your fruits you shall be known." We can preach with far greater power through example—the way we live and act—than we can by word of mouth.

Dr. Sullivan, an anthropologist of renown in the United States Government service, having spent many years in America, and in Mexico among the Indians, visited in the Hawaiian Islands, studying the people, under the direction of the Pauahi Museum, trying to learn where the Polynesian peoples came from, spending $50,000 a year in research work along this line. I had the privilege of going with Dr. Sullivan around the islands. He paid our people a splendid compliment. Starting out on his journey, he wrote to me saying, "I am unable to get the information from the natives that I desire; they seem to be timid about giving it." Other ministers had served with him, but they did not understand the natives, not knowing their language, and thus I went with him and some of the elders. They were not timid in the least; knowing that it was the desire of the elders of the Church that they give this information, they were free and open, did not hesitate, and he marveled about the influence the "Mormon" elders had over the natives. He said, "The moment I go into a home here, I can tell whether they belong to your Church or not." "How can you tell?" I asked. He said, "Because they seem to be superior; their home life is better, there is a sweeter atmosphere there. You people have been very wise, going among this glorious race, selecting the choicest of the people; for I find that the choicest people in the land of Hawaii belong to your Church."

"Mormonism" made them thus; it was not the work of the elders, but the inspiration of God that filled their souls. The principles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is what has magnified the people, both there and in Samoa and the rest of the world.

Oftimes I have read of how the gospel should be preached, how it should be declared, from the housetops. I could not understand it. In my mind I pictured standing upon some building and crying out to the people. But who could hear! until the invention of the wireless? Soon after my return from the Hawaiian mission, I labored here upon the temple block, meeting with the tourists, a delightful work, I assure you. I had the privilege of attending a service in the Tabernacle that was radioed out at the time of President Harding's visit here, and in relating this to the tourists' to show how, if we were in tune we may hear, one woman spoke up and said, "I heard that message away off in Louisiana;" another heard it in California; another in Mexico. A third party said, "We were out motoring that night, and returned too late to get that message, though we had a radio instrument in our home," consequently they missed it. A young man, several days later—a marine passing through from California made this statement—"We heard the choir sing, we heard the organ, and the remarks of President Harding, down in the waters of Japan." He said, "I had the privilege of being stationed with the Pacific Squadron, and on board our vessel we heard that message clearly, and how happy I am this day to stand in this building near this great organ and testify to you that I heard that clearly away down in the waters of Japan!" The Prophet Joseph Smith as a boy, being in tune, like unto the delicate instrument of the radio, and thus under that influence, went out into the woods to pray, and communed with God; the heavens were opened and he conversed with Deity. If man is able to communicate through the radio crying out from the house tops and having his voice go round the world several times in a second, then it is not impossible, truly, for God to speak to his children when he deems it wise and necessary.

In the Book of Mormon the parable of the fig tree conveys a beautiful thought. I love to read it, for it is full of the inspiration of Nephi. Inspired through the revelation or vision given to his father, Lehi, he desired to understand the things that his father had seen, believing that the Lord was able to make them known unto him—he sat pondering in his heart and was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, into an exceeding high mountain, and there was revealed unto him the workings of God, the coming forth of the gospel of Jesus Christ again to the Prophet Joseph Smith. In that vision he saw the people gathered in the tops of the mountains; he saw the missionaries going out in the isles of the Pacific to gather in again the fruits of those tender branches that had been taken away from the mother tree, from the colony of Nephi, and planted out in the land where they could not be molested, where they could not have intercourse with other people, where the true blood of Israel could be preserved. And thus we find, out in the Pacific islands, the Polynesian people, the true blood of Israel coursing through their veins.

The civilization of the Hawaiians before the advent of the whites had reached a high degree, considering the limited opportunities; and when the missionaries came, the people as a whole threw off idolatry and accepted Christianity. Today, in education, in virtue, in cleanliness, the Hawaiians compare favorably with many peoples of both the old and new world, while in hospitality no people are their superiors. They recognized the voice of the shepherds. Today it is impossible to find a Hawaiian who is not a staunch Christian, though they do not all belong to our Church, to our faith. The missionaries laboring in the islands during the four years, I was there accomplished a most splendid work—and I am delighted to say the elders now are doing even a better work. There are approximately 13,000 Saints in the mission, twelve organized conferences, over fifty Sunday schools fully organized; also Mutual Improvement organizations, Relief Societies, and Primaries. This will give you an idea of how favorably the Hawaiian mission compares with some of the largest stakes in the Church. During the four years we baptized 1,438, blessed 1,387 children, and ordained 457 to the Priesthood. The last year I was there we had 2,426 tithing payers.

The traditions of the islands are beautiful and in harmony with the scripture. We find the Hawaiian people today educated; I doubt if you can find any that cannot read or write, and they love the scriptures. Like unto the Samoans, they are very apt in finding scriptural passages and in memorizing the word of the Lord. Time will not permit me to go into detail much, but I would like to read just a little extract taken from the history written by King Kalakaua, showing forth some of the beliefs in the creation, the flood, and Abraham, showing how they have in that tradition carried on, from father to son, and so on down for generations, the history of their forefathers, proving in one way the origin of this glorious people. In this book King Kalakaua states:

"A trinity of gods exists, named Kane, Ku, and Lono. These created the heavens and the earth, the sun, moon, and stars. From their spittle they created a host of ministering angels. In creating man, Kane formed his body out of red clay mixed with spittle while Lono formed his head out of whitish clay brought from the four quarters of the earth. Then the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils and he became a living soul, and was called Kumuhonua (meaning the foundation of the earth). Afterwards from his ribs a woman was created called Keola-Kuhonua. The pair was placed in a beautiful paradise called Paliuli. Among the angels was one, Kanaloa, the Lucifer, who, when man was created demanded adoration from him. This was refused by Kane, whereupon Kanaloa resolved to create a man himself, who would worship him. He formed a being in the exact image of Kumuhonua, but was unable to breathe life into him. Repeated attempts bringing failure, he rebelled, and resolved to destroy the man created by Kane. In the form of a Moo, or lizzard, he crept into the garden of Paliuli and there caused Kumuhonua and his wife to do something which angered the gods, and they were driven out. The story of Cain and Abel is also found among the Hawaiians in the three sons of Kumuhonua, one of whom, Laka, slew his younger brother."

The Hawaiians, in their tradition of the flood said that,

"Nuu at the command of the Gods built a boat and with his wife and three sons entered therein, taking with them a male and female of every living creature. When the waters subsided the gods came and released Nuu and his family, who on leaving the boat found that they had rested on a mountain overlooking a beautiful valley. Nuu offered sacrifice to the moon mistaking it for Kane. Kane became angry because of this and descended upon a rainbow and there reprimanded Nuu, and Nuu repented of this, and in token to show that his repentant spirit had been accepted and he had been forgiven, Kane placed the rainbow in the skies as a token."

A man by the name of Ku Pule, representing Abraham, is also related by this king:

"He was ten generations removed from Nuu. He went to the South with his wife and slave woman, Abu. Here he established the practice of circumcision, and was the grandfather of Kuni-lau-a-mano, whose twelve children became the heads of twelve tribes, from one of which the Menehune, or Hawaiians sprang."

Now we know through the tradition, and through history given to us in the Book of Mormon, that the generations of Lehi came forth from the loins of Joseph through Manasseh and Ephraim. The tradition speaks of how they traveled to the promised land under the influence of God, how they peopled this land, grew to be a marvelous race, and then, as is recorded in the 63d chapter of Alma, some of the people entered one of the boats built by Hagoth, traversed out and were lost in the mighty deep—according to the historians' record in the Book of Mormon, but not so in harmony with the traditions of the Hawaiian people, which are that God in his mercy planted that tender branch out in the Pacific Islands. And now he is bringing them back again, and they are producing fruit that is gladdening his soul.

I know that the gospel of Jesus Christ is true. My whole being is thrilled with this testimony, and how happy I am that I have been blessed with goodly parents, and that thus far in my life I have been able to walk in that straight and narrow path. I sincerely trust and hope that the influence of heaven may be upon me, that I may continue in God's service, that I may be magnified in his good works, that I may keep the faith as long as I am permitted to live upon the earth. I know that the Prophet Joseph was called of God through inspiration, that he was in tune with the Spirit of God, and I know that all who have been chosen to lead his great work have been inspired by that same spirit. May God's choicest blessings be upon President Heber J. Grant, his counselors, and all associated with them, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

President of the Northern States Mission

You will remember that when Joseph Smith, the prophet of God, went unto his heavenly Father to inquire as to which church was right, that the Son of God, speaking to him, told him that none of the churches were right, and that all the creeds were an abomination in the sight of God. I was talking to a man the other day, and he said, "Why, on the face of the thing, your church is wrong, because God is not speaking to his people, his sons and daughters upon the earth, and condemning them and placing them in a position where they are declared all wrong in the sight of God."

I am wondering how many of us, the Latter-day Saints, are trying to minimize the importance of that message. It is rather a hard saying, I will admit; but it is the word of God, the eternal Father, in these latter days, declaring that only the Church that he organized is the Church and kingdom of God. God is merciful to his people, to his sons and to his daughters, and he would give every one an opportunity of coming back into his Kingdom; and his relation to his people has always been one of kindness, and sympathy toward his children. "Peace on earth, good will to men," is the message of God, the eternal Father, unto his children upon the earth. "Go ye out into the world and preach the gospel of Jesus Christ," is the message to his servants, that all mankind might see and understand this gospel of Jesus Christ. He has also told us to go out and contend against no one, but preach the gospel of Jesus Christ and him crucified. That is the kind of message, that God has for his sons and his daughters; but when it comes to the churches of the world, God has placed his mark, and told us that only the Church of God is right, and all of the others wrong. In all sympathy, in all kindness, and recognizing the sincerity of the people of the world, the fact stands out, that there is only one Lord, one faith, and one baptism.

A member of the Church rather wanted to minimize that great message of God to Joseph Smith; he said, if God had only said it in a little more gentle way; if he had only made some kind of an explanation, so that it might have included all the world, it would not have made us so unpopular in this world today. Do you want popularity? Do you want to stand out and be loved and pushed along by men who feel that you, with all the rest, are right and can get back into the Kingdom of God, following only the way that they may desire to follow? We enjoy being loved; we want to be popular because of our honesty, our good will, our fellowship for the good things that are done by the people of the Church, but when it comes to being popular, as far as the gospel of Jesus Christ is concerned, I hope and trust that the men and women, the boys and girls, will stand out for the faith of their fathers and feel in their hearts that God, in his mercy, in order that his children may be saved, has given us the gospel of Jesus Christ; and that it is by it, and by it only, that men shall enter into the Kingdom of God the eternal Father, whether they belong to this Church or any other church, but all must come into this Church, embrace this gospel of Jesus Christ; and all the men and women who belong to it must live lives of usefulness and of righteousness, and serve God through all the days of their lives, if they would enter into the celestial kingdom of God.

Why minimize the gospel of Jesus Christ? Why try to put away some of the things that are so essential to the salvation of mankind? Why, a man, a brother of the Church, told us a while ago that in some churches they have the gift of healing, and, said he, "Surely God is placing the stamp of approval upon that church, because people are being healed; and God through their faith is healing them." No church that is founded only on the gift of healing, is Christ's church, and God will not recognize any church except the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The same man said, "Other churches have the gift of tongues, and surely God puts his mark of approval upon these churches, because of the speaking in tongues." No church can stand with only the gift of tongues as a foundation. God will not give any church as a church the gift of tongues, or faith, or healing, and stamp or mark it with his approval, as being his Church, or a part of his Church in these latter days. O, there are good people, men and women of faith, who, because of their faith, receive blessings at the hands of God, for some special purpose, for some reason, but as a church, never so long as the Church of God stands; for if he does, then we who represent God's Church are on the wrong road and cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, in the way we are going, but will have to find some other way. I admire men and women who stand out and believe in the truthfulness of the Church of Jesus Christ to the exclusion of all others, at the same time recognizing the good lives and the good works of all the children of our eternal Father.

May the Lord bless us and guide us and help us to understand the gospel of Jesus Christ, and to play fair with it. Let us not excuse it, let us not minimize what we have. We have nothing to be ashamed of, but, all in all we have something to be grateful for and thankful for, that God in his mercy, through his Spirit, has enabled us to see and understand the gospel which has been given unto us in these the latter days. And may the Lord bless us, he'p us, and be with us, in this our life upon the earth, that it may be lived worthily, that eventually we may find a welcome in God's kingdom, I humbly ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

President of the Western States Mission

I have been very much impressed, my brethren and sisters, with the reports and testimonies borne in our hearing this day. You have listened to men who have labored in the South Seas and to one who labored in the land of eternal snow. Their testimony is to this effect, that the gospel message has found lodgment in the hearts of the people and that there is no controversy among them with respect to the fundamentals of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Reference has been made to the wonderful progress that is going on in the world; our transportation facilities, our development in the arts and sciences, and our modern means of communication; the radio being especially mentioned.

It was my good fortune during the summer months to speak twice over the radio broadcasting station of the W O A W, at Omaha. Upon the first day of June I had the pleasure of speaking, and as a result of that service, received letters from eight different states from people who had "listened in." I wish the time would permit me to tell you of some of the messages that were sent to us. One man in Wisconsin, after greetings of a personal nature, had this to say: "I listened to your discourse. It was a regular old fundamental sermon." Then he made the remarkable statement, to which I call your attention. Said he, "I am a student of science. I believe in evolution. There is no such thing as supernaturalism. There is no such a thing as the beginning of nature. There is no such a place as heaven, no such a place as hell. God is not a personal being. Jesus Christ is not a real character. Christian theology is not true. Education is, the only salvation for this world. Yet I respect every man who does right."

I was not surprised in receiving such a message, because almost daily we come in contact with men and women who entertain such views—that Christian theology is not true, that Jesus Christ is not a real character. My observation has convinced me that many of our modern preachers are responsible for this condition. As Elder Taylor has pointed out, they are not teaching the word of God. They have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. The Lord declared, as he has stated, that their creeds were an abomination in his sight. I do not wonder that thinking men are withdrawing themselves from these creeds and long established notions and are seeking inspiration from another source.

I have in my hand a clipping taken from the Denver Post. It purports to be an account or a report of an article written by Mr. Rupert Hughes, who is a magazine writer of some note in this country. He gives his reasons why he has left the Church. Says he, "I quit going to church because I came to believe that that which is preached in the churches is mainly untrue, or unimportant, or tiresome, or hostile to genuine progress and in general not worth while. Staying away from the church puts me with such an enormous majority that it carries no distinction. Nowhere does the increase of Christianity keep pace with the population. Recently in New York a pastor read the Apostles' Creed to a large congregation, and asked everybody who believed it to stand up. Not one present arose." How different with the Latter-day Saints! Were I to read the articles of our faith and ask all who believed them to stand up, this vast audience would arise to a man.

One thing that impresses me is this thought, the Latter-day Saints must be forever the champions of the divinity of Christ's mission, and ever be his chief defender in the world. I have little patience with agnostic Christians, who accept a salary for preaching to please their congregations, and who do not believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ's mission, and who are doing all in their power to eradicate belief in him from the minds and hearts of the people who look to them for guidance. You go among them and propound the same question that Jesus of Nazareth asked of the Jews in his day, "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" and I am sure that you will be astounded at the number and the uncertainty of the answers that you will receive from them. One will say to you, "He is a prophet sent of God." Another will say, "He is the ideally perfect character." Another will tell you that he is the greatest of all moral teachers. But you press them for something more definite; ask them, "Is he divine? Was he God? Is he God?" and they will tell you, some of them, "We do not know," "We cannot tell," "We cannot concern ourselves with difficult theological questions." Some of them more honest than the rest will tell you outright, "No he is not God; he is not the Son of God, and he never claimed to be, in any of his well attested sayings." They will tell you that he was a man in every sense of the word, with not only a human body but with human intellect and will, and that he bore the same relationship to the human family that you and I bear to that family.

They tell you that Christ never claimed to be the Son of the living God. Did he? It would take a long time to point out the many evidences that are contained in the synoptic gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. Some one will tell you if you quote the gospel of St. John that that is not well authenticated; that it cannot be considered as historically true. Let me read to you a definite message of the Savior:

"And the high priest arose and said unto him, Answerest thou nothing? What is it which these witness against thee? But Jesus held his peace, and answered nothing. And the high priest answered and said unto him, * * * * Tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God? Jesus said unto him, Thou hast said: * * * * Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven, Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses? * * * * Ye have heard his blasphemy; what think ye? They answered and said, He is guilty of death."

Blasphemy was the final indictment against the Christ. He was either a blasphemer or the Son of God; take your choice. It matters not what we think, nor what we believe about him.

I believe it to be a matter of measureless importance that we know who Jesus Christ is. He declared in that wonderful prayer, recorded in the 17th chapter of John, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." It is life eternal to know him, and he was particular to impress that message upon his immediate followers.

As he walked in the streets of Cæsarea Philippi, he abruptly turned to his disciples and said to them, "Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias; or one of the prophets." Then he turned to his disciples and said, "But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." He had told them before that no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

I see the time has expired. Just one of the thoughts that comes to me I would like to express, and that is this: The Lord told the Prophet Joseph that the creeds of men were an abomination in his sight, that they taught for doctrine the commandments of men, that they had a form of godliness but denied the power thereof, and I want to bear my testimony to you that that is the reason the world is in its present condition; they do not know the Christ, because they have denied the only power by which they might know him. Revelation, so far as they are concerned, ceased generations ago, and the light of truth has not come into their lives; else they would know, as they know they live, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Redeemer of the world. You will remember the words of the Apostle Paul, writing to the Corinthian Saints, "I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." The Latter-day Saints are entitled to that blessing; it has been conferred upon them by the laying on of hands. The light of truth has come into their lives, and they are enabled to bear witness in sincerity and in truth that God lives, and that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

Now, in conclusion, let me say that men may temporize, they may equivocate, they may argue, they may explain away the divinity of Christ's mission, but so long as time endures, the Church established by the Master, in the day and age in which we live, and which bears the name of the Son of God, will champion his cause and will be the defender of his name, and his mission in the earth.

God grant unto us power to appreciate the blessings of the gospel that have come into our lives. He has spoken from the heavens and revealed anew the plan of salvation, and blessed is that man and thrice blessed that woman into whose life there has come faith in these glorious principles, for it brings peace to the soul that surpasseth understanding, it removes doubt, fear, and anxiety, and brings a satisfaction that cannot be measured in words.

May God add his blessings, may he sanctify unto us this service; and give us power to keep his commandments, which the old prophet declared was the whole duty of man, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang, "The Song of the Redeemed," Jean Robinson, Naoma Thomas, E. Jenkinson and Harold W. Langton in the quartette parts. Benediction was pronounced by Elder Lafayette T. Holbrook.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING

A second overflow meeting was held in the Assembly Hall at 2 o'clock p. m., Sunday, October 5, 1924.

Elder Charles A. Callis, president of the Southern States mission, presided.

The Seventeenth ward choir, of the Salt Lake stake of Zion, again furnished the singing.

The choir and congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

Prayer was offered by Elder Frank Croft.

A soprano solo by Barbara Evans Atwood was sung, entitled, "I Know That my Redeemer Liveth."

ELDER HILTON A. ROBERTSON

Former President of the Japanese Mission

My dear brothers and sisters, it is with a great deal of pleasure and gratitude in my heart that I am able to be present at this conference today, this being the first time that I have had the opportunity of attending a general conference in Salt Lake City for three years and a-half. While I am happy to be here today and have the opportunity (which I know it is) of speaking to you, it came as rather a surprise to me.

I have had the privilege, together with my wife, of spending three years and a half in the land of the rising sun, Japan. In that time I have spent some of the most happy days of my life. I have gained a stronger testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ than I ever had before. It is worth more to me than all in this world, and I am happy to make any sacrifice which is necessary for the furtherance of such a cause throughout the world, be it in Japan or any place in the world.

I thought it might be well, inasmuch as the Japanese mission has closed, to give a report of the work which has been done there during the past three years and a-half and to tell of some of my experiences, through the earthquake, which happened a little over a year ago. I have only fifteen minutes, so I will rush through hurriedly and explain some of the conditions which are there.

The Japan mission, as you know, was opened about twenty-three years ago, in 1901. In that length of time there have been eighty-eight missionaries spend from two to eleven years. Brother Stimpson, formerly president of the Japan mission, as I understand, has spent eleven years in that land—at that time about one-third of the years of his life. Brother Alma O. Taylor, who, together with the first missionaries to that land—President Grant, Brother Horace Ensign, Brother Louis Kelch, spent, if I remember right, something like nine years in that land, and translated the Book of Mormon into the Japanese language. We have had 137 baptisms in that length of time. Some of these members have apostatized from the Church, some of them have been cut off, and many of them have been indifferent to the message which the missionaries have revealed to them. The missionaries were united in feeling that the Japanese had had a fair chance of hearing the gospel, under the limited number of elders which we had present. The First Presidency felt that inasmuch as the people were anxious, in other parts of the world, that it might be more feasible to withdraw the missionaries from that land and take them to other parts, where the people were better prepared to receive the message of truth.

Not all of those people who accepted the gospel have gone back on it; we have at least a dozen Saints who could be called such. Those people are very desirous of continuing with the work. Their hearts are in it, just as yours and mine are. They want to see the work progress. They want to do all they possibly can. But you can realize, as did the missionaries in that land, that the thousands of dollars which were being expended could be better utilized in other lands, and the missionaries must be withdrawn until that people is better prepared to receive the gospel. I hope that some time in the future the people of that land will prepare themselves to accept the gospel, the road, the only path to life and salvation.

We are told in the Doctrine and Covenants that after the testimony of the servants of God, earthquakes, pestilence, and disease, etc., will follow, and I bear testimony to you folks, to the brethren and sisters assembled here today, that those things have taken place in that land; I have seen them. On the first day of September, at two minutes to 12 o'clock noon, it seemed that the gates of hell had swung open on the central part of the Island of Japan. Within ten minutes after the elements had shaken that land, fifty-four fires broke out. Within twenty minutes, seventy-six fires were burning, and within forty-one, eighty-eight fires were burning. Some of those fires continued for nearly a week.

The people, in fleeing from the flames, came to the steel bridges spanning the rivers and canals, which cut through the heart of the city of Tokyo. These bridges were destroyed by the intense flames. People tried to make their escape in every direction, but the flames came; the heat, which was driven by a terrific wind, made them frantic, and thousands of them jumped into the rivers; they rained into the rivers and were swallowed up. There was one spot which was held for army purposes, about fifteen acres. This was vacant, and the policemen on duty directed those people to go in there for protection. They took with them many of their belongings which they considered precious. These caught fire. After the flames had gone down, the actual count was 32,843 bodies; so crowded were they in that position that many of them were still standing.

The City of Yokohama, which has a population of about 600,000, was entirely destroyed. Buildings by the thousands were wiped out.

I was not in Tokyo at the time of the earthquake. I was in the southern cities. We had just held conference in a city in the northern part. Our elders were returning home from that conference to their assigned fields of labor. When we reached Tokyo from the north, going to the south, on the 29th day of August, we left on the 30th day of August for the southern city. On the first day of September the earthquake came. Had we been one day slower in getting to our destination, no doubt we would have been in the earthquake. Our missionaries were protected. In all this disaster, which covered thousands of square miles, not one of our Saints, not one of our investigators, not one of our missionaries was injured. Our Church building in the city of Tokyo was still intact. Plaster and some of the tile from the roof had been shaken off, but other than this our mission property was safe and we were supplied with food. This to me was a great testimony. God will protect those who keep holy his law.

While some of those people have not done as they should, in keeping wholly the laws of God, I realize that he is thoughtful of them, and knows what their hearts are. It is hard to live the gospel in a foreign land such as the Japanese are living in. Those people are not bad at heart; we have friends there whom we hold just as dear as any we have in this land, educated people, men who are holding high positions, who care nothing for our gospel, yet were kind to us. In all our missionary work we were not mistreated. If you went to the door of a Japanese home, if they did not want your tract they would politely tell you so. We received no persecution. We were allowed the privilege of standing on the street to explain the gospel—on street corners, where as high as one or two hundred people would gather to hear the message, but we were not molested in the least. If any one undertook to disturb the meeting, he was hissed out. And so the missionaries who are returning from that land, although the gospel is not being preached there now, hold many of the Saints and friends in high esteem, and we hope that the time will speedily come when those people will wake up and realize the condition which they are in. They are prospering financially, and that is where their hearts are turned. We hope and pray that those people will realize the position they are in before it is too late, that they will turn to the gospel message.

I am happy and pleased to be affiliated with the Church of Jesus Christ. To put it as our late President Woodrow Wilson said, "I would sooner be engaged in a cause that I know will some day triumph, than be engaged in a cause which will some day fail." And this, I feel, is our position, that although our numbers are few today, we shall see the time when truth will triumph throughout the world, and that we must stand, as Bishop Nibley said this morning, as guides along the highways to protect those tourists who are seeking for truth, who will be apt to accept our message. I hope that we will not only go as guides, but also be tourists and be willing to take guidance from those who understand the road better than we, who have seen or are able to see into the future farther than we, who have studied the future and know what disregard for the laws of God will do for our people.

I trust that the Latter-day Saints may realize the strength of their position and ever be found willing and ready and doing his will, and this is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH QUINNEY Jr.

President of the Canadian Mission

My dear brethren and sisters: I humbly pray that during the short time I shall be upon my feet I may be in possession of a portion of the Spirit of our heavenly Father and at the same time have your sustaining faith and prayers. I appreciate fully the great responsibility that rests upon one who is called upon to occupy a place of this kind. This responsibility is being felt by me more deeply as I proclaim the message of truth to the nations of the earth. My testimony is becoming stronger as I meet people and have the opportunity of explaining to them, to the best of my ability, what this great gospel of Jesus Christ means. Indeed, it means the development of the finest and best there is in the human soul. It means, when properly understood, to know God, which is eternal life, and eternal life is the greatest of all gifts of God to man. I am glad to say that in the Canadian mission we have a corps of young men and women who are equipping themselves well in defending, proclaiming, and teaching the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ. Fathers and mothers who may be present here today will be pleased to know that there is not a single one, either elder or sister missionary, but what is measuring up to the great responsibility that has been vouchsafed to them in carrying this message of truth to those who are honest in heart. Their attitude is splendid and their testimony convincing, and in many instances, penetrating.

Our mission extends from Newfoundland, on the east, to the province of Saskatchewan on the west, a distance of about thirty-four hundred miles, and when one travels over that distance four times a year it requires practically all of his time; however, my joy has come in witnessing the development and growth of our young people, knowing, as they do, that they are dealing with the greatest and most powerful thing in the world, for this gospel of the Christ deals with the souls of men. I believe that there is no thought that is so sacred and great as a thought of God, and when we concentrate upon this thought there must of necessity radiate from us the spirit of inspiration, of truth and love, all of which gives us a bigger realization of the great power which belongs to this organization.

The outstanding feature, I may say, of our mission, this year, was the visit of President Heber J. Grant, Elders George Albert Smith, James E. Talmage of the Council of the Twelve, Bishop David A. Smith, Levi Edgar Young, of the First Council of Seventy, and Sisters Robinson and Taylor, of the Relief Society organization. We have been blessed beyond measure in having President Grant and these leaders with us. They left their impress upon the people of that land. I particularly call to mind the impressions that were made upon the people who had gathered together to hear President Grant and his party. They are still talking of it. President Grant took for one of his subjects the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. After his discourse we were unable to supply the number who wanted to receive this sacred volume. I believe that had we had twice the number of Books of Mormon at the meeting we could have easily disposed of them. The visit of these leaders of the Church was an epoch in the history of the Canadian mission.

We are meeting with some success among the people of that country. They are a law-abiding people. If you were there today you would see the absence of moving picture shows, the absence of moving trains (except those that cross the continent) on Sunday—they observe the Sabbath day, they recognize law and the execution of it, they are a fine race of people, and I am glad that I have the opportunity of laboring among them, bearing witness of the divinity of this work as it has come to us through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I never tire of hearing this testimony because I believe that to know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God is the basis upon which we can build a firm and a substantial testimony that will bring us in close touch with God through his Holy Spirit, that it may continue to grow and develop within us. To have a testimony of the truth of Joseph Smith's vision is to know that God lives, and when that testimony is born under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, there will be a power and a conviction connected with it that will bring souls to Christ, and bringing souls to Christ is our most wonderful privilege.

In reading the statement made by Josiah Quincy concerning the Prophet Joseph Smith, I am impressed with the wonderful spirit in which it is written. It is outstanding and full of power:

"It is by no means improbable that some future text book for the use of generations yet unborn will contain a question something like this, What historical American has exerted the most powerful influence over the destinies of his countrymen? And it is by no means impossible that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written, Joseph Smith the 'Mormon' prophet. And the reply, absurd as it doubtless seems to most men now living, may be an obvious commonplace to their descendants. History deals in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this. The man who established a religion in this period of free debate, who was and is today accepted by hundreds of thousands as a direct emissary from the Most High, such a rare human being is not to be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets. * * * The most vital questions Americans are asking each other today have to do with this man and what he has left us."

I have wondered as I have studied this statement why it was that Mr. Quincy was so impressed to write this "pen portrait" of the Prophet Joseph Smith, along with those of other great Americans. I have wondered why it was that he was so impressed with the Prophet Joseph Smith, and why it was that he could not be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets. One must be in sympathy with the same feelings that Mr. Quincy had in order to appreciate fully the statements that he was inspired to make concerning this prophet of God. I believe that you will with me conclude that this was an unusual statement for him to make, but let us not forget he had been in company with a prophet of God—one who had seen and talked with God and the Christ and, subsequently, other heavenly beings. No doubt when the prophet unfolded to Mr. Quincy these powerful truths he left him with an extraordinary feeling that he had been in the presence of an unusual being, and his judgment was, that in future years this prophet would in all probability be a greater influence on his countrymen than any other American.

This is a significant thing, a wonderful statement when we think of it. But when we know that the origin of this great latter-day work had its beginning with this great manifestation, to say nothing of the many truths that Joseph Smith subsequently introduced into the world, we indeed have something that is worth while—something we can contemplate seriously as Mr. Quincy contemplated seriously years after the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Men who have communed with God in the ages of the world, or at least in different periods of the world's history, stand today, and we reverence them, as prophets and are actuated in our lives by their teachings, and so I believe that, as the time comes and goes, the name of this man Joseph Smith, together with the great work that he accomplished under God will influence men throughout the civilizations of the world, and mankind everywhere will be able to see and feel this work as it is unfolded to them, because it is the pure gospel plan of our Lord Jesus Christ.

There was another statement made, concerning the Prophet Joseph Smith, by Governor Ford. It will be remembered that when Governor Ford wrote the history of Illinois he devoted considerable space to the history of the "Mormon" people. There is a great contrast in spirit at least between the statement made by Josiah Quincy and that of Governor Ford, respecting the Prophet Joseph Smith. Indeed, they are not comparable. Mr. Quincy wrote his statement because he was actuated by the spirit of admiration, a spirit that caused him to see in the Prophet Joseph Smith an instrument establishing a wonderful truth that had been revealed to him, indeed, he seemed to be overawed. Upon the other hand, Governor Ford wrote his history, that part of it, at least, connected with the Prophet Joseph Smith, with a spirit of fear, contemplating, as he did, what might happen in future generations. Here is Governor Ford's statement:

"It is to be feared that in the course of a century, some gifted man like Paul, some splendid orator, who will be able by his eloquence to attract crowds of the thousands who are ever ready to hear and be carried away by the 'sounding brass and the tinkling cymbal' of sparkling oratory, may command a hearing, may succeed in bringing a new light into this modern Mohamedanism, and make the name of the martyred Joseph ring as loud and stir the souls of men as much as the mighty name of Christ, itself."

I say that the statements of these two men are not comparable. It will be observed that there seemed to have been a spirit of remorse come over Governor Ford in writing this remarkable statement. He, too, knew that he had been in the presence of an unusual being or he would not have written this seemingly prophetic statement.

It must, inevitably be that this prophet of God will arise out of the mists triumphantly and will be recognized as the great instrument through which God operated in establishing the restored gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the dispensation of the fulness of time.

I know, as I proclaim this gospel message to the nations of the earth with the spirit of humility, that I can feel the divinity of it. It sinks into the hearts of men and women, and as a result, a few of them at least, are accepting this great and mighty work that has come into the world in this dispensation for the salvation of the human race.

I remember most distinctly hearing one of our stalwart converts say, "When I heard the message of Joseph Smith the Prophet it was the most beautiful thing that I had ever heard in all of my life. It appealed to me, and as I investigated, day after day for a number of years, and as this gospel was unfolded to me, I could see that it was necessary for such a personage as Joseph Smith to be chosen of God in this day and time in carrying out God's divine purposes. I felt that the time had come for the fulfilment of that prophecy made by John the Revelator, "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell upon the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." I really felt that there should be a man to which this message should be delivered, one who would be authorized to establish God's great purposes upon the earth. Truth is mighty. No truth can pass away. No truth can perish; though generations disappear, it finds its way to the pedestal where it belongs, and sheds its rays throughout all of the world.

I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, beyond my power to say, that I have been counted worthy to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ to the nations of the earth. I rejoice that I have a testimony of this work burning within my soul, that I know that God lives and that Jesus Christ is his Only Begotten Son, the author of our salvation, the institutor of the plan whereby you and I can come back, by yielding obedience to the principles that are in that plan, into the presence of God, our eternal Father, to enjoy immortality and eternal life.

I do humbly pray with all of my soul that God will strengthen us in this land, that he will unite his people in the bonds of love and affection that we may have our lives preserved in order to perpetuate, to the best of our ability, this great and beautiful work. God grant that he will lead and direct us by the light and power of his Spirit, which Spirit is truth and love and which is the thing that brings into our souls eternal joy. May we stand firm and true to the covenants we have made, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang the anthem, "Cast thy burdens upon the Lord."

ELDER BRIGHAM S. YOUNG

President of the Northwestern States Mission

While I shall stand before you, brethren and sisters and friends, I hope I may be rid of the man-fearing spirit, and that I may be guided in what I shall say by the spirit of the brethren who have preceded me in this meeting, and the great spirit of this conference. The mightiest thing in all the world, brethren and sisters, is a testimony of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We, your brethren, in our weakness have been appointed to take charge of the work in the various missions of the world, and you have sent to us from your households the dearest possessions of your hearts, your sons and your daughters. And we, the presidents of missions, are endeavoring to implant in the hearts of those boys and girls that most precious thing in all the world, a testimony of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and your sons and daughters are receptive to that testimony. They come to us sometimes almost ignorant, in their knowledge of the things of the gospel, and I say it to the shame of the households from which they come; sometimes they come to us from households where the Word of Wisdom is not observed; they come to us from households where family prayers are not engaged in; they come to us from households of men and women who know the gospel is true, but fail in their duty and attendance upon it, and when your boys and girls come home to you they will be a reproach to you if you have failed in observing the duties that have given them that testimony which burns in their hearts like a living flame, if you have failed in the things they have been taught in the mission fields. We may think, brethren and sisters, that it is a light thing to have a testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ, but it is not so. You have been given a responsibility; this people, bears upon its shoulders the burden of proclaiming the message of salvation to all the world. Is that a light thing? Let us look into our own souls, let us study the thing that has been given to us, let us remember we must account for these talents—and a testimony is one of the most precious of them; God has given you the talent of a testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ and you must render account for your possession of it. Are you bearing it in the earth? If you are not, woe to you when you shall be arraigned before the bar of God, for he will not hold you guiltless for the great heritage that has descended to you from your fathers and that God has given you that you may keep it bright, that you may increase it, that you may render to him ten-fold, and if this responsibility shall be neglected, brethren and sisters, woe be unto us.

Your boys and girls are laboring faithfully in the mission field. They have the spirit of their mission. They are endeavoring to search out the honest. They go from door to door. They are met with rebuffs and insults; sometimes they are turned away with violence, but that makes no difference, they continue with a smile upon their lips, and light in their hearts, and a prayer to God that he will help them to be successful where hitherto they have failed. When they come to us in the missions, they find themselves confronted with this great question, "Is or is this not what it purports to be? Is this the gospel of Jesus Christ, or is it a myth that has been woven from the vain imaginations of men?" And they learn, because they have had the seed planted in their hearts and it springs into being in the soil in which it has been planted, and by the watering, the rains and the suns, the clouds, and the storms; that seed germinates and bears fruit in the work those boys and girls are performing, and they are a rebuke in some instances to the households from which they came. They learn that the authority to administer the ordinances of this gospel is in the Church. They learn that God has delegated again to men the authority to speak in his name. They learn that these men who occupy positions of prominence and leadership in this Church are veritably the leaders of the Church of the living God, that these are his prophets, that these are his inspired servants, and you will hear them plead in the most beautiful of prayers that God will strengthen, keep in health, and bless always the prophet of God, Heber J. Grant. My heart is softened, it is melted beyond description to hear the wonderful, the beautiful, the touching, illuminating, melting testimonies of these boys and girls. They learn, that as compared with the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, these other institutions called churches are merely houses of cards, that to touch is to see them crumble. They learn just as the scriptures teach us, that the gospel of Jesus Christ always has, always will have in it the authority to administer in the ordinances of God. They read in the scripture that on a certain occasion the Lord said to his disciples, "Who do men say that I am?" and some said, "O, they say you are one of the prophets; some say you are John the Baptist, risen from the dead." "Peter, who sayest thou that I am?" "I say thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Blessed art thou, Peter, flesh and blood hath not revealed that unto thee but my Father which is in heaven; and I will give unto you, Peter, the keys of the kingdom, that whatsoever thou bindest on earth shall be bound in heaven and whatsoever thou loosest on earth shall be loosed in heaven. If these churches which profess to be the churches of the Lord Jesus Christ, are the Church of Christ, where is this authority that one time existed in the Church of Christ? These boys and girls call their attention to this significant and overpowering fact: If you have, and are the Church of Jesus Christ, where is its authority? The Lord said to Peter, Whatsoever thou bindest on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou loosest on earth shall be loosed in heaven; your priests, your ministers, your pastors who officiate in your pulpits and churches, when they marry a couple, say, I pronounce you man and wife until death do you part, and under that contract, that association ceases when the grave opens its portals to either the husband or the wife, but if they had the power that Peter possessed, why should death separate men and women, husbands and wives, fathers and mothers, parents and children? If they have the gospel of Jesus Christ, they have the right to bind on the earth and it will be bound in heaven. Why don't you exercise your authority, if you have it? You say you are the Church of Jesus Christ; where is this authority that Christ gave Peter? Why do you say that death separates and forever terminates? So far as we know, according to the scriptures at least, these obligations that are formed by men and women in the marriage contract—the most important contract in all the earth! That is what your boys and girls are learning. They are learning that the authority to administer in the ordinances of the Lord Jesus Christ for his Church is here in the earth. They testify of it. It is borne in upon their souls, and they know that God has again spoken to the world.

We do not depend alone upon the testimony of these boys and girls to convince us that this is the Church of Jesus Christ. The world itself is bearing testimony to this fact. I met a man the other day in Portland, a learned doctor, a man who had been educated in the universities of Germany. He said to me, after learning that I was a "Mormon," "Mr. Young, I want to say to you that the Church of Jesus Christ is one of the greatest churches in the world; in the East we have Mohammedanism, and Buddhism. I, myself," said he, "am a Theosophist. In the West we have the great Roman Catholic church and the 'Mormon' Church. These are the great churches of the world, and sometime the 'Mormon' Church is going to occupy a place in the world that the world has not yet accorded it." That comes from a man who is a student of religion, although not a member of our Church, not a believer in the truth as we teach it or as it has been revealed, but an observer who sees things, a man of vision, a thinker, a philosopher, a deep student of the affairs of men.

A short time ago I attended a lecture in Portland of a great judge, who came from the East, the chief criminal judge of Chicago. He was lecturing on crime and its effect on American society. He deprecated the fact that we are having in America so few families. He referred with great pride to one of the kings of his former country (for he was a Norwegian) who had a family of twenty-five sons, another one had a family of eighteen sons; another had a family of fifteen sons. "We have no such families," he said, "in this day; we have no such domestic conditions as existed in those days; husbands and wives today are not what they were then, when men and women understood not only the necessity but the great joy of having families." That was among the themes that he developed in the subject which he treated. At the close of his address, and he had been introduced very eloquently and exhaustively by one of Portland's chief attorneys, I made my way to the rostrum, and as soon as I could get his attention with one hand I presented my card, with the the other the opportunity for him to shake hands with me. He grasped my hand with his right hand, and took my card with his left hand, and holding it up, he read, "Brigham S. Young." O, and he read it aloud. And you could see the bobbed hair and the skull caps just raise, for their ears pricked up as high as they would go. "Brigham Young?"

"Yes, sir."

"Any relation to the great Brigham Young of Utah?"

"Yes, sir; I have the honor to be one of his grandsons."

"Do you know," said he, "Mr. Young, that science is proving that the product of the 'Mormon' families in Utah are among the soundest people we have in America?"

I said, "Thank you, judge."

I am glad and thankful and meekly grateful that I have had the opportunity of going into the world with your boys and girls. Blessed be the parents that have borne such boys and girls! And the opportunity to labor with those young men and women has been the most glorious thing in all my life, and I am grateful to God for the opportunity that he has given me to proclaim his word in the world in the company of such blessed souls as you have sent us. Live up to the standards of these missionaries, brethren and sisters, for it is a high standard, an exalted standard, and if you measure up to their excellence you will be discharging the duties of Latter-day Saints and you will not have buried the talent that God has given you, but you will present it to him glorious and beautiful when you shall stand before the bar of God.

And that we may be faithful, that we may sense these responsibilities, that we may measure up to these boys and girls of ours, I humbly ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

A duet, "An angel from on high," was sung by Jean Robinson and Hyrum J. Christensen and the choir.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

President of the Southern States Mission

I desire, my brethren and sisters, to enjoy a portion of the Spirit of the Lord while I speak to you. In the Book of Mormon the great truth is declared that when a man speaketh by the power of the Holy Ghost, by that power are his words carried into the hearts of the children of men, and without that power the preacher is as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

When President Heber J. Grant, some few years ago, was in a great southern city, a minister invited him to speak to his congregation in his church. The President accepted the invitation, and at the close of his remarks the minister said, "Mr. Grant, I wish that I had your earnestness, your faith, and your testimony." It seemed to me that that minister voiced the yearning that is in the souls of millions of world-weary people—the yearning to know for themselves that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God. This testimony:

"Doth not spring from earthly soil,
Nor from its wisdom grow;
'Tis not evoked by students' toil
Though years hath crowned with snow."

This living, personal testimony of the Holy Ghost comes through obedience, through faith, repentance, and baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. Then upon the converted soul is bestowed the Holy Ghost, which gives that soul a personal testimony that this is the work of God, and against which testimony the Savior said the gates of hell shall never prevail. This people are not prieststridden; they are not led around by priests who aspire simply to be leaders. This people have the testimony of the Holy Ghost, and as the sheep know the voice of the shepherd, so we know that these God-given leaders are led by divine revelation, and when they speak, the spirit within us answers to the spirit within them, and we rejoice in having the counsel and instructions of our spiritual overseers.

The poet, Parley P. Pratt, said in one of his hymns:

"The morning breaks, the shadows flee;
Lo! Zion's standard is unfurled.
The dawning of a brighter day
Majestic rises on the world.

The clouds of error disappear
Before the rays of truth divine."

The prophet Isaiah predicted the dawning of a brighter day. He declared that the time would come when people "shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." I know that the gospel of Jesus Christ was sent into the world to prepare the way for the glorious second coming of the Son of God. I know it is the mission of this Church to preach the gospel to prepare the way of the Redeemer of Israel to come and reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. And I bear my humble testimony to you that this gospel is spreading abroad, that the hearts of the children of men are being prepared for the millennial dawn, and the glorious advent of the Son of God will come in the due time of the Father, for the signs to precede his coming are in the earth.

A few months ago I was in Norfolk, Virginia. I went through the navy yards accompanied by an officer who had joined the Church. I saw a mighty battleship that had never been completed, and yet workmen were taking it to pieces. That battleship had cost several millions of dollars, but when President Harding called the disarmament conference and a limitation of armament was agreed upon, this majestic man of war was doomed to destruction. Huge pieces of steel were lifted out of the battleship, and that steel was bought by a company to be used in the manufacture of agricultural implements and tools of husbandry. Really, brethren and sisters, I could not help but feel that that was a beginning of the fulfilment of the prophecy that swords should be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. The poet Tennyson, in one of his poems said:

"For I dipped into the future,
Far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world,
And all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens fill with commerce,
Argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight,
Dropping down with costly bales;

* * * And there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies
Grappling in the central blue."

A few weeks ago near Athens, Georgia, ten thousand people assembled to witness a remarkable demonstration. The United States senators from Georgia, the governor of the state, and other state officials were there. And what was this demonstration? It was a demonstration that "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than War." Over the cotton fields, acres and acres of cotton fields, there flew airplanes, machines that had been built for the purposes of destruction, and these airplanes did rain a "ghastly dew" over the cotton fields; they dusted calcium arsenate, a deadly poison, to destroy the boll weevil which has cost the farmers so much, by destroying and bringing about a shortage of the cotton crop. And so the Lord is inclining the hearts of his sons to invent machines to assist in the noble art of agriculture.

Brethren and sisters, the Prophet Joseph Smith was raised up by the Lord as the herald of Christ's second coming, to preach the everlasting gospel. In one of our hymns we read these lines;

"We through the Holy Ghost
Can witness better things."

What better things do the Latter-day Saints witness? First of all, we witness the restoration of the glorious gospel for the salvation of the children of men. We, by the Holy Ghost, know that that restoration hath taken place. By the same power we know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, that upon him was bestowed the holy Melchizedek Priesthood, and because of this we witness the salvation of the dead in the sacred temples which dot this intermountain country. By the same power we know the glories of the resurrection, that when Jesus comes in his glory the righteous dead are going to be resurrected and the glorious millennium will be inaugurated. These are some of the better things we witness through the Holy Ghost. But far above all these things—because these things are dependent on the Savior—we know that Jesus is the Christ. Let the world say what they will—that Jesus is not divine, that his blood did not atone for the sins of mankind, that he did not bring about the resurrection; we know, we witness, we testify by the power of the Holy Ghost that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, the Redeemer of mankind, and the author of our eternal salvation. Who would not be a Latter-day Saint? "To whom shall we go?" said Peter, "thou hast the words of eternal life." The words of eternal life are in the glorious gospel and the power to officiate for the living and for the dead, thank God, is held by the men who lead and guide this people.

A few months ago I was in a town in Kentucky, attending a conference. One of our brethren held a position at the waterworks of that city. I said to him, "I would like to go through the plant and see how you purify this water."

"Come along," he said.

I saw the great settling vats, into which the muddy water of the Ohio river was poured, and I saw a vat containing muddy water and another vat containing clear water.

"Now," I said, "Brother, I can see that this water is clear, but a hundred Ohio cities empty their filth into this river; though the water be clear, there may be germs in it. How do you kill the germs?"

"Come and see," he replied, and so I went into a great underground chamber and saw the huge pipes which conveyed the water to the city mains, and at distances of about four or five feet I beheld doors which opened into cavities in these great pipes. He opened one of the doors, and a flood of light came out. He said, "This light is the ultra-violet ray, a powerful, penetrating light. When the water passes over this light, the germs are killed and the water is rendered fit and pure to drink." What a lesson! When men and women are baptized, they receive the Holy Ghost, and this sanctifying baptism of the Holy Ghost, that baptism likened unto fire, does cleanse the soul; it kills the germs of sin, it makes people who love God and keep his commandments fit subjects to enter into the kingdom of heaven; for I testify and declare unto you that this gospel is pure, that it purifies those who live it, and without the gospel no man can ever be pure and enter into the kingdom of God. "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." So, through faith, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the blood of Jesus Christ sanctifies us and saves us, makes us fellow-citizens in the household of God. The Lord be praised.

Centuries ago Elisha said to the Lord, "I pray thee let a double portion of thy Spirit to be upon me." This is the Spirit that gives vision, the Spirit that shows the things of God unto man. And so, Latter-day Saints, with you, I fervently and humbly pray, "Lord, give us a double portion of thy Spirit, in the name of Jesus Christ," Amen.

The authorities were presented as in the Tabernacle and unanimously sustained.

The choir sang the anthem, "The Restored Gospel."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder W. H. Branch, of the Summit stake of Zion.

CLOSING SESSION

The closing session of the conference was held in the Tabernacle on Sunday afternoon, October 5, 1924, at 2 o'clock.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir sang Evan Stephen's anthem entitled, "Hosannah," which was first sung at the dedication of the Salt Lake temple. The congregation joined in singing the verses of the hymn, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning," included in the anthem.

President Grant announced that the Barratt Hall had been connected by radio and would accommodate a large number of people.

The invocation was offered by Elder Thomas E. McKay, president of the Ogden stake of Zion.

A male quartette sang, "The Lord's Prayer." The members of the quartette were: August and Henry Glissmeyer, Cannon Lund and Hyrum Christianson.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

We have a message from the radio operator in President Penrose's room. President Penrose heard all of the proceedings this morning, most of it as perfectly as if he were here on the stand. He was very grateful in listening to one verse of his own remarkable and wonderful song, "School thy feelings," and tears of gratitude filled his eyes, while listening to this, that he could enjoy the spirit and inspiration of our meeting almost as perfectly as if he had been here upon the stand. Certainly, one of the most marvelous, if not the most marvelous, inventions to date is radio.

President Penrose wishes the Saints to know that his testimony is as profound and strong as it was when he first embraced the gospel, in 1850.

Brother George Albert Smith has visited President Penrose, during the intermission, and brings this message from him. He wishes to bear his testimony to this audience that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer and Savior of the world of mankind, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, that his successors are servants of the Lord, and that his Church is divine and led by inspiration. He is grateful for membership therein. He sends love and greetings to all Israel.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

PROGRESS AND SPIRIT OF MISSIONARY WORK

In the front row of chairs facing this great stand, with its series of pulpits, I see a body of men each of whom has been called to a very responsible position in the Church. They are the presidents of missions. We have been privileged to hear from a few of them, as also from two others, they being members of the First Council of the Seventy, as well as mission presidents for the time being. These men are the directing officers in the army of missionaries laboring in the world. The report you have heard from them, and such as you hear from conference to conference, and the many individual reports you receive from your sons, your daughters, your husbands, who are members of this army, bear witness to you that the missionary work is progressing as well as it ever has been progressing and possibly better than in any earlier time.

The vicissitudes of the recent years of warfare have brought many people to a state of reflection. Many who have been careless and indifferent have been led to consider what this life means in relation to the life that lies beyond. Many whose ears have been dull are now listening intently for the radio message that shall satisfy them; and it comes sometimes in a very unexpected way, and by unlooked for means. This, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, would not, could not be what it is were it not for our missionary system. Nearly, or quite two thousand missionaries are now in the field, as you were told this morning, and many are going and some few returning. I may say continuously. Scarcely a week passes unmarked by the setting apart of a new company of missionaries, who go out commissioned to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ in the nations of the earth.

I am well aware of the fact that some people take a little umbrage at what they think is presumption on our part in sending missionaries amongst them. They think that we should labor as some of the churches of the day labor, amongst the semi-civilized people of heathen nations, who have not come yet to recognize a knowledge of the Lord and Savior of men. We send our missionaries not only to such, but also to those who count themselves enlightened Christians. Our missionaries go with a message, not with a command. They go in the spirit of persuasion, asking only a hearing, a respectful hearing; for they have something of worth to present. Our missionary system would scarcely be justified had we nothing definite to present, nothing more than minor differences in ritual or creed such as distinguishes some of the great denominations of the day. I would not blame people becoming impatient over such relative trifles; but we have something that can be found amongst no other people upon the face of the earth. This is no instance of group egotism, it is a solemn fact.

We proclaim not only that Jesus Christ is the foreordained and actual Savior of the race; not only that, but we proclaim that no ordinance of salvation can be authoritatively administered except under his commission, and that that commission is definite and personal. Hence these men, young, middle aged, sometimes aged, and in smaller number these women, go out to the world with a proclamation that in this day and age, strictly in accordance with the predictions of ancient prophets and with the word of the Lord Christ himself, while he was in the flesh, he has again spoken, and is speaking from the heavens, directing the affairs of the Church that bears his name, the name given by him, not taken by any human assumption, but conferred and bestowed authoritatively. We do not send missionaries out to assail or attack members of other churches, or the sects and denominations as organized bodies. We send them out to preach the positive doctrine of the restored gospel, which is the doctrine of the ancient gospel, speaking thus of the gospel according to the period of its preaching upon the earth. We are remarkable as a people for this missionary work.

TWO CHARACTERISTIC FEATURES OF THE CHURCH

There comes to my mind at the moment a conversation between a bishop of one of the big churches of the day and myself, dating a few years back. He had given some study to the plan of organization and operation of this Church, and said to me: "There are two features characterizing your Church that I would very much like to see introduced into ours." I said to him: "Bishop, I know what they are, but I should like to have the pleasure of hearing you specify them." In the same spirit of good will and fellowship he retorted: "Well now, honor bright, I will tell you whether you are right or wrong if you will tell me which two I have in mind." I said: "They are our missionary system and our tithing system." "You are right." "Well now bishop, why don't you introduce them into your church if you are so desirous of having them as features of your organization?" "Well," he said, "frankly speaking, I don't know. I can see some difficulties, but they are small, I think they could be removed. Yet beyond these there appears to me to be some great obstacle." "Surely," said I, "there is. May I express my opinion as to the reason why your great church has not introduced these features?"

THE TITHING SYSTEM

"You cannot introduce and operate the tithing system successfully, for the tithe is holy, and none but men who bear the holy Priesthood in fact and not by name only can touch it. The handling of the tithe has been provided for in the law revealed from the heavens. It was so in the days of ancient Israel. It is so today, and, Bishop, from what you have already admitted in our conversation—which to me has been very interesting—you know that you haven't a single priest or even a Levite in your church who can touch the tithe with authority." Well, we passed on to the other feature:

THE WONDERFUL MISSIONARY SYSTEM OF THE CHURCH

"Why can't we have your missionary system?"

"Because, bishop, if you tried to introduce it the first thing you would do would be to make up a salary schedule, so much for the presiding officers and so much for the traveling ministers; and in the second place the men and women of your church would not respond if you called them. You know that."

I went on and addressed him as I am speaking now to you: Do you think for a moment that the thousands and thousands of young missionaries, who have gone out and come home filled with the spirit of their work, would ever have put their energy into that labor if they were working for wage, such wage as men count in the terms that bankers use? Do you think it for a moment? We take our young men and young women from comfortable up-to-date homes, provided with the conveniences of modern life, and send them out, perhaps into the woods of the south where they have to put up with what would be called rather rough fare, and rather inadequate accommodations. They smile at it all and rejoice in the experience and work all the harder. I know it, I have been amongst them. I have been with every one of these worthy men to whom I have referred, in their respective fields, I have traveled with many of them throughout the length and breadth of their missions. I have met the elders in little branches and conferences, and on their individual circuits; have met them in the woods, have met them in the mountains, have met them in the towns and on the highways and the byways. I have felt of their spirit, and I find there a spirit that no man can ever develop from the incentive of money wage.

Our missionary system is operated as the Lord has directed. These men and women go out trusting in the Lord, and beside those who go out, I pray you forget not those who remain at home, those worthy fathers, those honorable, God-loving mothers and brothers and sisters too, who are working, working hard, that they may make up the deficiency in means required by their sons and daughters or other relatives in the mission field. For, be it remembered, our missionaries accept anything that is offered them as they may need—a meal, a coat, a pair of shoes, lodging—any one who offers such in time of need finds his offering accepted, and a blessing left with him. But not all are willing so to help; and there is a deficit in every case, and that is made up by the sending of means from home. Do you know, that, reckoning the earning capacity of our missionaries at a very low figure, and considering what that means for one to three years in the field, and considering also the means they spend in traveling to their fields of labor and in traveling within their fields, that the sum will total up above the million dollar mark every year? They do this because they have the spirit of their calling resting upon them. They go out with this definite message to the people, and you can give a missionary no greater joy than to listen to him attentively while he states his message, and then discuss it with him in a friendly spirit. You will find that he does not try to force it upon you. But why am I talking to you, in the second person, you Latter-day Saints? You know the missionary does not try to force the gospel upon those people out in the world; he tries to present it to them for their consideration ever praying that the Lord will bear witness in the heart of his hearer or hearers as to whether he is telling the truth or not.

These missionaries come home after having been brought in contact with members of practically all the great religious denominations of the world, firmer, if possible, in the truth and in their conviction of testimony than they were when they set out. They have had every opportunity for comparison, every facility for discriminating judgment; and they come home rejoicing in the sure knowledge that has been with them, as a companion by day and by night, all the time they have been in the field. Is it not a wonderful work? And it will not cease as long as there are souls willing to accept the message. We are using the press, and the press is a mighty missionary, but this individual labor will continue. I have heard the remark made by a few—it is so insignificant that perhaps I should not stop to refer to it—by the few who are a little out of harmony with the system, that we have outgrown our missionary work, and will have to bring about a revolution and supplant it by something better and more up-to-date. What is better, what is more up-to-date than the method of a man approaching another with the truth, and bearing witness to it in all solemnity? And yet with all humility, earnest in his testimony, merely asking the other man to listen, the humble missionary continues his labor, for our missionaries have a little of the spirit of the fabled ancient mariner, they are not at peace unless they can get somebody to listen to that which they have to tell them, because they know the value of their message. Do you not remember when Andrew recognized the Christ at the beginning of our Lord's ministry in the flesh, how the man tore himself away from that blessed presence and rushed off to find his brother Peter to tell him of what he had heard? it was so joyous, something so nearly unbelievable. We have found the Messiah; come and see for yourself, come and listen. Then the gentle Philip heard and he went off to find Nathanael. You know him, do you not—that Israelite without guile? He was impressed with Philip's words, and the Lord addressed him by name. Philip and Nathanael wondered about it. Then read again about that woman at Jacob's well in Samaria. The testimony the Christ bore to her, that he was the Messiah sank into her heart, and she hastened back to the village and told the people; and they came out, a great flock of them to see and to hear. What of Lehi and his vision, in which he found himself plucking fruit from a beautiful tree by a stream. He found the fruit to be delicious, and more than merely good in taste; and his first thought was for his wife and children. In the vision he saw them at a distance, and he beckoned to them, he shouted out to them to come and partake. So are the missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints crying to the nations: Oh, come and partake! This is the bread of eternal life.

The Lord has declared that in this day and age his servants are sent out by him, and that he will hold the world accountable for the message which they deliver. In the very first section of this volume of modern revelation, the book of Doctrine and Covenants, we read: "And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples whom I have chosen in these last days." That means our missionaries, and those who preside over them to direct them in their labors; and the Lord continues: "And they shall go forth and none shall stay them; for I the Lord have commanded them." None have been able yet to permanently stay the voice of the missionary who has gone forth with the word of God. True, mobs have quieted them for a moment, but they have been able to raise their voices again. Disturbances have been only local.

"Behold," saith the Lord, "this is mine authority and the authority of my servants," and so on in that first section. Read for yourselves.

May the Lord continue to set his seal of blessing and approval upon the labor of the missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

President of the Mexican Mission

I sense very keenly, my brethren and sisters, my weakness in standing before you this afternoon, and I sincerely pray that the Spirit of the Lord will guide and assist me in the few remarks I shall make to you upon this occasion. Truly, this is a wonderful occasion, and this is a wonderful sight to look upon the thousands of faces of Latter-day Saints who are gathered, who have come for the one purpose of being built up in their faith, testimonies, and knowledge of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I come to you, my brethren and sisters, as one of those whom Elder Talmage has been speaking about, who are engaged in missionary work among our Father's children in the world who are yet in darkness and who have not yet a knowledge of the saving principles of the gospel restored in this day and age in which we live. I thank the Lord, from the bottom of my heart, that I have been deemed worthy of this call, and the greatest desire of my life is to continue to labor zealously in the Lord's work, in the service of his children, with a desire to bring a knowledge of him, to as many as may be, of those children who are now in the world hungering and thirsting for the word of the Lord; for truly that prophetic utterance of Amos the Prophet is in this day being fulfilled. Men are going to and fro upon the earth seeking for the word of the Lord, and, in many instances, have not been able to find it.

I bring to you a message from the mission in Mexico, and I rejoice to say that since the day that temporarily we had to withdraw our mission and the missionary labor from the interior of Mexico, I found upon a recent visit there that the mission is now in better condition than it has been since that withdrawal. Our missionaries are free to go and to come in every part of that country to which we have been able to extend our mission work, and we are not persecuted, we are not harrassed in our labors, but freely we are permitted to go forth among the people and teach the principles of the gospel, and many are being brought to a knowledge of the truth. We have listened to reports of the missionary work that is being done in the East and in the West, and in the North, and now I report to you the work that is being done in the Southern part of our country, and also in the great republic that lies to the south of us, among the people who are descendants of father Lehi, known as Lamanites; and I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, that the day has come when the gospel has been brought to them. I rejoice more, each day of my life, in the fact that the Lord has brought forth their record and that we know who they are, and that we are not in darkness as to their origin, and that he has given a mighty promise of redemption unto those people who are of his covenant, whom he loves; and that through the gospel of Jesus Christ which has been restored to us.

Not many days ago, in the city of Mexico, one of our elders came to me and said of a certain man who was at one time an educator in Salt Lake City, and who is now excavating in the ruins that are being unearthed under the great lava flow that has come down from the volcano of Ajusco, and who is delving into the antiquities of Mexico; that in conversation with our elder he said: "Young man, I have not proved yet that the Mexican people or the Indians of America have not come to this country from Jerusalem. I have not proved that they are not Israelites."

My brethren and sisters, since the day the Book of Mormon came forth, men inspired from no good source have sought to overthrow the Lord's work, they have sought to bring to naught his purposes; they have sought to make out that Joseph Smith was a fallen prophet; they have ridiculed the Book of Mormon and its contents, and that is going on even yet today. And this man insinuated to our young missionary that although he had not yet proved that the Lamanites were not of Israel, he hoped some day that he would be able to do so. If you will read First Nephi 15, you will read there that the Lord revealed to his prophets and to us, through this book, that the Lamanites are of Israel, and if you will read in Second Nephi 30, you will find that the Lord revealed that this book should be restored unto the Gentile people, and that many should believe the words of the book that should be written, and that it should be taken back to the descendants of those who wrote it, and by that means they should come to a knowledge of the fact that they were of Israel, that they are of the covenant people of the Lord. And I tell you that nothing in all this wide world will ever disprove that fact, and everything that has been uncovered in the great excavations that have been made in that land to the South of us tends rather to confirm the fact, than to bring anything to bear that would deny the fact, that this is the truth. And so it is, my brethren and sisters, with everything that has been brought forth in this day and age in which we live concerning the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It is true; ridicule, denial, and persecution will not disprove the truthfulness of the gospel that has been restored to us. I feel it more keenly today than ever in my life. I rejoice in the fact that the elders who come into the field, and the lady missionaries, the few that come into our field, are imbued with this spirit. They come with faith, they come with a desire to serve, and they come with a strong testimony that the restored gospel is true, and although men ridicule them and ridicule their teachings, they become stronger in their faith and stronger in their testimony, and the spirit of the gospel permeates their teachings, and many are being gathered out from among the people of the world, by believing these wonderful testimonies and messages that are being preached in the world.

I rejoice to be able to report to you that the health of the missionaries in our field is good, and that we enjoy our labors in every sense of the word. It has been said to us, in this conference, my brethren and sisters, that we, among the Gentile nations, who have been gathered out by the gospel, are of Israel, that we are descendants of Joseph, through Ephraim his son: this is true. I rejoice in this fact, that we have in the country where we labor, and in Central America, farther south, and in South America, in all those great countries, blood relatives of ours; for all of those people, I bear you my testimony, are likewise of Joseph of the House of Israel. They are of Manasseh, likewise of Ephraim, for there is a sprinkling of that blood also in the Lamanite race that inhabits America to the south of us. We have heard that the lands of North and South America are the lands of Zion. Therefore, I contend that whatever we do, whether it be here, among those of us who are gathered out, one of a city and two of a family, or whether it be there, where there are nations of the blood of Israel—wherever we labor for their redemption, we are laboring for the establishment and redemption of Zion.

I pray that the blessings of the Lord may go with us, as I pray that they may go with the missionaries who go to all the nations of the earth; and I beg of you, my brethren and sisters, compassion and sympathy for the down-trodden children of our Father in heaven who are in those lands. They are laboring under a curse pronounced upon their fathers because of their iniquity; but I rejoice not in that phase of it, but in the fact that the Lord has promised that through the establishment of the gospel in these latter days, the curse should be removed and they should be redeemed and become again his delightful people. I look forward to that time with great anticipation, and if the Lord should require it at my hands, I am willing to continue my humble labors the rest of my life in striving to redeem and build up and bring joy and happiness that only a knowledge of the gospel can bring to the people of that land.

The Lord bless you, and bless all in his service, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

All over the Church today, at this hour, from Canada on the North to Mexico on the South, with the exception of the immediate vicinity of Salt Lake City, fast meetings are being held in all the wards and branches, and men and women are testifying as to their knowledge, individually, regarding the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. These testimonies, as a rule, occupy only a minute or two or three, very seldom more than five minutes, and a great many people in each of these meetings pour out their hearts in gratitude and thanksgiving to God for the knowledge they have, individually, of the divinity of this work. I shall call a half dozen men to the stand and ask them to bear their testimonies regarding the divinity of this work, speaking not to exceed five minutes, each one.

We will start with Canada on the North, Brother Hugh B. Brown; and Brother Joseph C. Bentley on the South, from Mexico; Brother Winslow Farr Smith, of this city; Brother Edward C. Rich of Idaho, and Brother Robert I. Burton of Ogden.

ELDER HUGH B. BROWN

President of the Lethbridge Stake of Zion

It is quite fitting that I should speak immediately after President Pratt, he having represented the Mexican mission, I representing the stake of Zion farthest North. The Lethbridge stake comprises that section of this great country, from a few miles north of the international boundary line, including the North Pole.

I appreciate the privilege of bearing my testimony to the truth of this great work. During the great World War I had the opportunity of comparing service in other organizations with service in the Church of Jesus Christ. It fell to my lot to be the instrument of bringing to some of our boys certain favors by way of transfer, or temporary relief, or leave of absence, by virtue of authority vested in me as an officer in the Canadian army. Upon one occasion I was called upon, as I thought, to bring some relief to one boy, I was asked when in the city of London to visit a boy whose name I did not know. I supposed that he would ask for a temporary release that he might return home, as I thought to recuperate; and, feeling the thrill of the power vested in me by virtue of the uniform I wore, I went down to that hospital with the intention of interceding for that boy, with the powers higher up. When I went into the little room which he occupied he extended his hand to me, and instead of addressing me as an officer in the army, he said to me: "Brother Brown, I sent for you to ask that you intercede with God in my behalf, that I may not die in this hospital, but that I may be allowed to return home to my widowed mother. Will you administer to me?" When this boy made that request at my hands, I could not help making the comparison, great though it may be to wear the uniform of the king, I never felt more pride in my life in any position than I felt as I knelt by the side of that boy, placed my hands on his head, and in the name of Jesus Christ asked that his life might be spared. I compared then the authority which I held in the Church of Christ with the authority held by men in other organizations, and from the bottom of my heart I felt to say: "Thank God for this work, and for the Priesthood which we have." I went into that hospital a proud British officer. I came out a humble "Mormon" elder; and I say to you, my brethren and sisters, that I prefer membership in the Church of Jesus Christ to presidency or command in any other organization in the world, civil or military. I bear testimony that I know this is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that it is the truth, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH C. BENTLEY

President of the Juarez Stake of Zion

My brethren and sisters, I am grateful for the opportunity this afternoon, of bearing my testimony to this great work of our Father in which we are engaged. This seems to be a time of encircling the earth. While we have just listened to the testimony of Elder Brown, from a Northern stake of Zion, which includes the North Pole, and the testimony of others from the United States, I represent the Juarez stake of Zion, which extends from the southern boundaries of the United States to the South Pole.

I want to bear my testimony, especially to my young brethren and sisters, of this Church and kingdom of our Father, that I know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, that he was the instrument in the hands of our Father of restoring the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that today, as has ever been the case since the establishment of this work, our Father has his protecting care over his people. I remember distinctly during the revolution in Mexico when General Villa had made his attack on the town of Columbus and was making his way toward the "Mormon" colonies, there was considerable excitement, for he was killing every American that came in his way, and every Mexican who had shown favor to the American people. It was thought that when he reached the "Mormon" colonies he would completely wipe them out of existence. The American consul in El Paso had told us several times to leave Mexico and go back into the United States. As General

Villa was marching toward the colonies the American consul said: "I have told those people several times to come out of there, now we will see whether a 'Mormon' is made of any different stuff than any other American." There was considerable excitement among the Mexican people, especially in Colonia Dublan, for General Villa was located within a few hours march from that place. There was not a single Mexican family that felt safe in residing in that colony. We were notified by the officers of the Mexican army that they could give us no help. It was evident that Villa was marching toward our colony. Our people, under the instruction of those who presided over them, were told to go home and go to bed, and trust in the Lord. That night they retired, and we were the only people in that section of the country who did go to sleep, but we slept peacefully. During the night General Villa marched within the borders of our colony and immediately turned and ordered his army to go in another direction. A year or two later when I happened to be in his army, having been detained on one of our trips, visiting the elders, when I was taken into his presence, he told me that there had been several occasions when he had our people completely in his control. He said: "I could have wiped you off the earth, without any trouble, but," he said, "I had no desire to do so. I like the 'Mormon' people, I like the 'Mormon' doctrines. While this is no place for you people to be doing missionary work at the present time, I hope to live to see the day when there will be a 'Mormon' missionary in every town in Mexico, for," he said, "I like you people. I like your method of living under this government." General Angeles was present with him, when we bore our testimony to him of the divinity of this work, and explained our mission, that we were there laboring among them, preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; and he turned to General Villa and said: "This is a wonderful work. They are doing just what we ought to be doing, but they seem to be doing it in a much better way and more successfully."

My brethren and sisters, I rejoice in this great work of the Lord. I am thankful to my heavenly Father that I have been permitted to bear a portion of his holy Priesthood and to labor in this great work in which we are engaged. May the Lord bless us and help us to keep ourselves free and unspotted from the sins of the world, that we may accomplish his work, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER WINSLOW FARR SMITH

President of the Ensign Stake and former President of the Northern States Mission

On one occasion a humble missionary in the Northern states rapped at the door of a splendid apartment; a woman greeted him, and he proceeded to present his message. She argued with him; he presented subject after subject, and she raised objection to every point that he offered; but finally, in humility, with somewhat of a feeling of defeat, he said to her: "This thing I know, beyond all doubt, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that Joseph Smith was his prophet, raised up to usher in this, the great latter-day work." She said: "That interests me, come in, and let me talk with you." He went into her home. All the argument that he had brought forth was as naught, but that humble testimony, out of the fulness of the heart of a devoted missionary, sank into her heart. She was impressed by it, and she listened to the word of the Lord.

Christ said on one occasion: "He that will do my will shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." This is a law unto us, the children of our Father. We can know, as we know nothing else, that the gospel is true. We can know, for it will burn within our being, and God will make it known to us if we will but keep his commandments. He has given us the law, he has given us the great plan of life. It is a wonderful system, a marvelous philosophy. It embraces all truth, and it is so organized and so arranged that it matters not how humble we are or how mighty and great, it fits our needs; and, by rendering obedience, we can know that it is true. Its every principle is true. There is no exception among the principles and ordinances of the gospel. Each and every one has its place. The keeping of every law is necessary to exaltation in the kingdom of God. If we feel that we are a law in and of ourselves, and feel that this principle or that principle is not for us, or for our keeping, we deny ourselves one part of the great blessing that God has for us.

I bear you my testimony, my brethren and sisters, that God lives, that this is his work, that at the head of his Church today stands a man who bears the Priesthood of Almighty God, one whom God sustains and whom we should and must sustain, if we would enjoy his Spirit. This is the work of the Lord. Its purpose is the saving of the children of men. At its head stands the great King, the Lord God, the eternal Father. It will go on; it will fill the whole earth.

All men will hear its message, and the honest in heart will be gathered into its fold. Nothing can stay its progress, it is the work of God, and it will go on, for God has spoken it. This is my testimony, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EDWARD C. RICH

President of the Montpelier Stake of Zion

I rejoice in the opportunity of having the privilege of bearing my testimony here in this great tabernacle. I have done so many a time in cottage meetings, in the Old World, upon the street corners, and in the halls, and I am not ashamed to do it here.

About thirty years ago, I was called to go on a mission. I had heard returned missionaries, time and time again, say that they knew that "Mormonism" is true. As a child I was taught that it is the truth, and I believed it. When I received that call the impression came to me that if I would go into the world, I would know for myself whether "Mormonism" is true or not. I have thought since, that likely this was the deciding factor that caused me to accept that call to go into Great Britain to preach this gospel. I returned in a little over two years, convinced in my mind that it is the truth. I have received many testimonies to the divinity of this work. One of them came to me while laboring as a missionary in the city of Bristol. I might say that I had never had any experience, or very little experience, in this Church. I neglected the opportunities that came to me, as a child and as a young man, to take active part and to participate in it. I have rued the time of that neglect, and I have been humiliated, time and time again since then, but there was no one to blame but myself. I had every opportunity to understand the truth, to study it, and to explain it. I neglected that opportunity.

While laboring as a missionary, with three other elders, we held a meeting every Sunday evening in Bristol, and during the week a cottage meeting. At this particular time the other three missionaries were out visiting their friends. The time came to hold that meeting. No one was present but myself. I had never presided at a meeting in my life. The time came to start the meeting, but none of the elders arrived. I selected a long chapter in the New Testament. I did not know what it contained. I read that chapter thinking that by the time I would finish it some of my companions would be there and they could preach the gospel to the people who had assembled. But none of them came. I read the chapter, commented on it for about ten minutes, and dismissed the people. After they had left, the landlady said to me: "Elder Rich, that is the shortest meeting I ever attended." I said: "It might have been short to you, but it was long enough for me!"

Years after that I attended a reunion of the Sheffield conference, held in the Seventeenth ward in this city. A girl came to me and told me that her father, prior to attending that meeting had said: "I have been to hear 'Mormon' missionaries; I have propounded questions to them, and they have been answering all of them; but I have a question tonight that I can ask them and they can't explain it." She told me that in my remarks that evening the question had been answered, though her father did not present it. I knew nothing of it for years and years. I have come to the conclusion that the Lord inspired me to pick out this chapter, and in the few comments that I made upon it answered this man's question. I believe in the inspiration of God. I know that he is leading and guiding this Church.

Some ten years after that time, I met a man on the streets of Montpelier, a friend of mine who received the gospel in Ireland, and he said: "Brother Rich, I wish my brother-in-law, who is in the British Isles, could hear this message of salvation." I said: "Where is your brother-in-law?" He said: "He is in Sheffield." I said: "I have a brother in Sheffield now performing missionary work." I sent the address to my brother who called upon this family, by the name of Fitnar. They were not interested in the gospel at first. Later on they received the message of salvation and today they are all active members of this Church, living up to the teachings of the gospel in the stake where I preside, and in the settlement where I live. I am as confident that the inspiration of the Lord came upon that man and impressed him to speak to me in reference to his brother-in-law, as I am confident the inspiration of the Lord came upon Columbus, and that he was inspired to go out upon the waters. It is remarkable that of all the places in the world where my brother might have been performing missionary work, that he should be in the very city where this man's brother-in-law resided, and that of all the people in Montpelier this man might have approached on the subject, he should speak to me about it. I am sure that it was in answer to this man's prayer, that his brother-in-law might receive the gospel.

Two weeks ago yesterday morning I attended, in company with Brother Smoot, who is upon this very stand, a man whom the doctors said could not live twelve hours. He was administered to, and today is rapidly improving and on the way to recovery. These are some of the things that are testimonies to me as to the divinity of this work, that it is the work of God and that those who lead and direct its affairs upon the earth are inspired of the Lord.

This missionary system of ours is the greatest thing in the world, for it gives individual testimonies to men and women so that they know for themselves that this is the work of God, that there is power in it, that the Lord is leading and directing it. They go forth and perform the duties and obligations that are resting upon them, to warn the inhabitants of the earth. In speaking of the signs which should precede his coming, the Lord said that there should be wars and rumors of wars, pestilence, and plagues, and that this gospel of the kingdom should be preached as a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come. May God hasten the day when it shall be done, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ROBERT I. BURTON

President of the Mount Ogden Stake of Zion

My brethren and sisters, this is a new experience for me, being the first time I have ever been called upon to address a body of the Saints in this building. I am filled with awe at the thought of standing in the place where so many notable men have stood when addressing the congregations of our people.

The other day, as I was speeding westward on a train from Chicago, and I crossed the Missouri river and again followed along the Platte river, I looked at those bodies of water, and I thought, and asked myself the question: "I wonder if this is where the pioneers crossed this continent, I wonder if I am beholding a sight that Brigham Young beheld, as he led that notable band of pioneers westward?" I then felt assured that their hearts must have been made of noble stuff to have made such a journey in order to be able to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences. Each time I gazed upon the different scenes, I wondered if their eyes had beheld those same sights. But here I am upon the stand and in a building that those pioneers helped to erect. I know that they were here, and I know that their presence has made this building sacred. So I feel overwhelmed to stand before you in a place that has been occupied by men of note, men whom we love and revere; and we have in our presence today their successors, men whom we hold very dear to our hearts, men whom we support with our faith and our prayers, and with all the energy that we possess. I thought also of my mother and how she walked across the plains, at least a great part of the distance, in 1848 as a girl nine years of age, and how she left the blood stains of her feet upon some of those pathways. I thought of my father coming here, in 1854, after a long journey from England; how they had run out of water and provisions, almost entirely, upon the ship, and they had been placed upon quarter rations; how cholera had broken out upon the ship, and many of them died and were buried at sea. I remembered all these things, and I thought: "Oh, if I cannot remain faithful, and firm and true to the gospel as it has been taught to me by my noble parents and by those patriots, those noble men and women who came out here as pioneers, then I am not worthy of the blood that runs in my veins!"

All honor to the pioneers. All honor to their successors, who are here in our midst. I love them, I respect them, I honor them with all my heart, and I pray God to bless them. I know as surely as I know that I stand before you, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the living God, I know that God lives, and that Jesus Christ is his Son; and when I know that, all else in this life matters little to me. I feel, if I can be faithful, firm and true to that knowledge, to the end of my days, I shall be a most happy and grateful man.

We have heard today, in song and story, the wonders of the latter-day gospel that has been restored to us, and my heart has been filled, to overflowing, with gratitude to my heavenly Father that I have been permitted to be counted worthy to be one with you. I love you, brethren and sisters, and I pray God to bless you and give you the spirit of the gospel, give you the necessities of life, give you wisdom that you may train and rear your children in the way in which they should go, instill into their hearts the precious truths of the gospel, and a knowledge of its saving power, for this is our mission upon the earth. May God bless us to this end, I pray, in Jesus name, Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

In calling on the five speakers who have just borne their testimonies to you, I did not do so with any preconceived thought of who they were. It so happens that Winslow Farr Smith is the great grandson of Patriarch John Smith, and the grandson of George A. Smith who has thrilled the hearts of the Latter-day Saints, as his father, the late John Henry Smith, has done many and many a time from this stand. It happens that Hugh B. Brown is the grandson of James S. Brown, one of the great missionaries of this Church, a man that I knew in my childhood, and I rejoiced in hearing him preach the gospel here at home. Edward C. Rich is the grandson of Apostle Charles C. Rich and also of Presiding Bishop Edward Hunter, the man who came with money, after selling a fine farm in Pennsylvania and buying some wild land at Nauvoo, and presented the remainder of his means to the Prophet Joseph, because he was in financial distress. Robert I. Burton is the son of William W. Burton, one of the late stalwarts of the Church. Joseph C. Bentley is the son of one of those early pioneers who went to Dixie—that country which I heard belittled by one of our wealthy men who said he would not give his forty acre farm in Davis county for the entire Dixie country. Richard Bentley went there and stayed. He lived there and pioneered that country, and was one of the loyal, true men of the Church.

We will now hear from one of the brethren that the gospel found in a foreign land—President Soren Rasmussen, of the Jordan stake.

By the way, the world said that by the time grandchildren came along this work would perish from the earth. We have heard today from one great-grandson. That is a pretty good specimen of its perishing.

ELDER SOREN RASMUSSEN

President of the Jordan Stake of Zion

My dear brethren and sisters, I rejoice exceedingly in the testimonies of my brethren. As President Grant has stated, I was born in a foreign land. My parents were very kind to the elders, and as a consequence many of the missionaries had a home there. I remember very plainly, some years ago, while traveling on the road as a commercial man, I was in the city of Elsinore where I stopped over Sunday, and the bishop asked me to speak at the afternoon service. After closing he asked me who my father was. I told him, and he said:

"I thought so, when you spoke. I want to tell you that I called at your father's home while laboring as a missionary in the country where you lived. We had been in the habit of lodging in your father's home. We came there on one occasion and the spare room was taken. It seemed that there would be no opportunity for us to stop there, at this time, but your father suggested to your mother that they would sleep on the floor and the missionaries might sleep in their bed.

I have often thought, my brethren and sisters, since coming to Utah, and since having received the gospel, how greatly I have been blessed of the Lord, and I feel to thank my parents, although my father never joined the Church. My mother, however, emigrated with the Saints; and I may say this in behalf of my father, he was very kind to the missionaries, and that he was ready to be baptized. He suggested this to my mother, but she was not yet ready. A few months after this transpired, father passed away, and mother soon afterwards sold out her business and emigrated to the land of Zion.

My brethren and sisters, I know that this is the work of the Lord. I have enjoyed the spirit of this work, and I feel that the Lord is with his servants under all circumstances; for wherever I have labored, whether at home or abroad, I have felt the inspiration of his Holy Spirit. I want to say to you that I sustain the authorities of this Church with all my heart. May the Lord bless us and help us to become, more and more, his servants and his handmaidens, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I rejoice that the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ has found converts in all parts of the world—from the country of the midnight sun, Scandinavia, to South Africa, from Canada on the North to Mexico on the South, in the far off lands of New Zealand and Australia, in the Hawaiian Islands and in Japan, and that the Lord has been so merciful that no matter where the message of life and salvation has gone, men have received for themselves, individually and not for another the knowledge of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. One of the truest, most loyal and magnificent men that has ever been connected with this Church of Christ was the late Karl G. Maeser, from Germany. He gave his very life and all the strength, the ability and power that he possessed for the advancement of the work of the Lord, and for the uplift, educationally, of the youth of Zion.

We will now hear from Bishop Kasper Fetzner.

ELDER KASPER FETZER

Bishop of the Jefferson ward, Granite Stake

I can indeed say it is a great surprise to me to stand before this great congregation. I took quite a pride, a year ago, in seeing my son on this stand, when he offered a prayer as one of the Boy Scouts.

I rejoice in an organization of that kind, because it helps to take care of the boys who shall be our future leaders. I rejoice also in bearing my testimony that a servant of the Lord came to our country bearing witness of the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I was then a member of the officers force of the German army. I had borne my testimony before a military court, and I was ridiculed in my position that I should join such an undesirable sect, and they told me that if I attended another "Mormon" meeting I should be thrown out of my office and punished in jail. I was fined, again and again, for attending the meetings; and here is President Thomas E. McKay who can testify to the truth of it. I have been in the forests, joining with the Latter-day Saints and listening to the gospel of Jesus Christ; and I was fined at one time a hundred dollars and another time was told I would be thrown out of my position and punished. But when I was called before the court and asked what I would do in the future, I told them to decide between themselves whether I should not serve my God more than them. At that time they testified unto me, as the highest officer and general in that Bavarian army, that if I could learn the truth, and the reason why the ministers of the churches there are preaching to the people, it would be discovered that it was only for the reason of better policing the people of Germany. They have assured me that the first minister of Germany has told them that there is no truth in religion, but that the Darwinian doctrine is paramount and is the truth. But, as I told him, I can say there is no evidence that a monkey ever became a man, as far as history goes; that there is no evidence of any progress in that direction whatever, and I can't see why I should believe a doctrine of that kind which teaches us to go down to the very bottom of animal being, while the gospel of Jesus Christ teaches me to go up to heaven. It is so lofty that it is impossible for me to detach myself from it. So I told them I would take the consequences, and I am glad I did.

I am thankful that I came here, and I can say to you people that your God is my God, your people are my people, and I hope I will be worthy, in my weakness, to stay with you and be useful. I have tried to show my faith; and even during the war I told the German people whom I presided over that we should be loyal first, as the Doctrine and Covenants says, that the time shall come when freedom shall come to every nation through America; and yet when the President of the German nation said: "If freedom shall come to the German nation through any other nation, we shall accept it," though it was hard for those who were really Germans. They can't say anything else, after the truth has come out, than that it was a good thing for the German nation to become free of their masters who have made them slaves. I know the German people from the ground up, as I have been mixing with them, and no one can tell me any different. I tell you that I know the German people, and that they will some day rejoice that they have been freed, and that now they can progress more than ever. The world will be made to see that there is a good foundation; not only in science, but also in the gospel of Jesus Christ, as followers after the great message which has been given in these last days. I have knelt down in the forest of Bavaria and asked God in heaven for this, the gospel of Christ—the truth which he has revealed—and I know that I have heard a voice from heaven, though I have seen nobody, and I know this is the gospel of Jesus Christ. I could not deny this testimony, and many other testimonies I have received. I assure you it is a matter of satisfaction to me, and I desire my superiors shall feel that my testimony rests upon the very foundation, and that is the Spirit of God. I ask God to bless us that we may join one another more closely, and that we may help one another, and especially that the youth of Zion may step in the footsteps of their fathers as we are all called, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Edward H. Anderson

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I desire to express my sincere gratitude and thanksgiving unto God for the very rich outpouring of his Holy Spirit, during all of the sessions of our conference. I feel that we have in very deed had a spiritual feast, that the Lord has blessed us abundantly, and I hope and pray that we may all return to our homes in safety; that those who are not located here, but have come from other sections of the state and from other states, from Canada to Mexico, and from the various missions, that we may all go home and carry with us the inspiration that has ben manifest during this conference.

I have nothing on my mind that I desire to say further than that I endorse the remarks that have been made, and rejoice in the wonderful testimonies that have been borne. Particularly have I enjoyed the remarks of the last seven speakers who were called upon, who had no expectation of being called. All of the other speakers were rather inclined to worry, as the Bishop said, knowing that their turn would come sooner or later.

Although I have already borne my testimony I feel impressed that I would like to leave with this body of people, once more, my testimony regarding the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. I know, as I know I live, that God lives, that he hears and answers the prayers of those who honestly seek him. I know that Jesus is the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind, the Son of God. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the true and the living God, and that there are thousands and tens of thousands of Latter-day Saints who have this knowledge, as perfectly as I have it; that God has revealed it to them, that they are not indebted to any man or set of men for this light, knowledge and testimony regarding God our Father and his Son Jesus Christ, and regarding the divinity of the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, the instrument of our heavenly Father and of our Savior in restoring again and establishing upon the earth the gospel of life and salvation, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, which will bring to us salvation, if we are faithful in keeping his commandments, and we shall thus enjoy the privilege of mingling with God and our Redeemer, and the faithful ones who have gone before, throughout the countless ages of eternity.

The choir sang, "Then shall thy light shine," solo by James Astin. The choir and congregation sang the "Doxology."

The benediction was pronounced by President Anthony W. Ivins, and the conference adjourned for six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing, assisted by Professor B. Cecil Gates. Professor John J. McClellan played the accompaniments, interludes, etc., on the great organ, assisted by Edward P. Kimball and Tracy Y. Cannon.

Stenographic reports of the discourses were made in the Tabernacle by Franklin W. Otterstrom, assisted by Joseph Anderson; and in the Assembly Hall by Frederick G. Barker.

Ninety-Fifth Annual Conferenec of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

FIRST DAY

The 95th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Saturday, April 4, 1925.

President Heber J. Grant presided and announced the opening of the Conference at 10 o'clock a. m. He was sorry to state that President Chas. W. Penrose had been critically ill during the past six months and hence could not be present with us in this conference, which we all regret.

GENERAL AUTHORITIES OF THE CHURCH PRESENT

Of the First Presidency: Heber J. Grant, and Anthony W. Ivins.

Of the Council of the Twelve: Rudger Clawson, Reed Smoot, George Albert Smith, George F. Richards, Orson F. Whitney, David O. McKay, Joseph Fielding Smith,* Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, Melvin J. Ballard, John A. Widtsoe.

Presiding Patriarch: Hyrum G. Smith.

Of the First Council of Seventy: B. H. Roberts, J. Golden Kimball, Rulon S. Wells, Joseph W. McMurrin, Charles H. Hart,† Rey L. Pratt.

Of the Presiding Bishopric: Charles W. Nibley, David A. Smith, John Wells.

OFFICERS AND OTHER AUTHORITIES PRESENT

Church Historian and Recorder: Joseph Fielding Smith, and the following assistants, Andrew Jenson, B. H. Roberts, A. William Lund, Junius F. Wells.

Presidents of stakes were well represented from the ninety-four stakes of Zion, with their counselors, patriarchs, bishops of wards and their counselors, and numerous other prominent officers representing the quorums of the Priesthood, also general, stake, and ward officers of the auxiliary organizations of the Church.

Mission Presidents as follows were in attendance: B. H. Roberts, Eastern States; John H. Taylor, Northern States; Samuel O. Beinion,

*James E. Talmage absent presiding over the European Mission.

†Levi Edgar Young, absent at Columbia University.

Central States; Charles A. Callis, Southern States; John M. Knight, Western States; Joseph W. McMurrin, California; Brigham S. Young, Northwestern States; Rey L. Pratt, Mexico; Joseph Quinney, Jr., Canada; Eugene J. Neff, Hawaiian, and Benjamin Goddard, Bureau of Information, Temple Block, Salt Lake City.

All the seats in the large Tabernacle were occupied, both in the gallery and in the main hall and on the choir stand. Hundreds were standing in the side aisles, both on the main floor and in the gallery.

President Grant announced that the choir and congregation would sing, "O ye mountains high," out of respect to President Charles W. Penrose. President Grant read the poem in full, and stated that by permission of President Penrose the words in the song, "on the 'necks' of thy foes thou shalt tread," were changed, and would be sung, "on the 'schemes' of thy foes thou shalt tread."

After the choir and congregation had sung the hymn with spirit and effect, the opening prayer was offered by Elder Samuel F. Smith, president of the Snowflake stake of Zion.

A solo entitled, "Hosanna" was sung by Melvin Peterson.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

It is very gratifying, indeed, to see this immense congregation here this morning, bespeaking the interest of the Latter-day Saints in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is customary at the opening session of our conference to give some statistics and to refer to the condition of the Church at home and abroad. I am very pleased to be able to announce that the work of the Lord is growing all over the world; and that there is never a month or a year but what the Church is stronger, spiritually and financially, than it was the month or the year previous.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The following financial statement I am sure will be of interest to the people here assembled:

From the tithes of the Church there has been expended for stake and ward purposes, $1,352,663.43.

For education, the maintenance and operation of Church schools, $727,808.93.

For construction, maintenance and operation of temples, $442,018.46.

For the care of the worthy poor and other charitable purposes, including hospital treatment, $175,520.77.

For the maintenance and operation of all the missions, and for the erection of places of worship and other buildings in the missions, $700,664.09.

This makes a total of $3,398,675.68, taken from the tithes for the maintenance and operation of the stakes and wards, for the maintenance and operation of Church schools and temples, for charities, and for mission activities.

In addition to charities paid out of the tithes as before named, there have also been disbursed the fast offerings and Relief Society and other charities, amounting to $489,406.61, which amount added to the $175,520.77 paid from the tithes, makes a total of Church charities, $664,927.38.

CHURCH GROWTH FOR THE YEAR 1924

Children blessed and entered on the records of the Church in stakes and missions, 19,955.

Children baptized in the stakes and missions, 14,047.

Converts baptized and entered on the records of the stakes and missions, 7,556.

There are now 94 stakes of Zion, 907 wards, 70 independent branches connected with the stakes, 24 missions and 654 branches in the missions.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Birth rate, 33 per thousand.

Marriage rate, 13 per thousand.

Death rate, 7.3 per thousand.

There are 160,634 persons in the Church who are married; of this number 256 persons were divorced in the year 1924.

Families owning their own homes, 72 per cent.

PRESIDENT C. W. PENROSE SERIOUSLY ILL

As announced in the opening, President Charles W. Penrose is in a precarious condition. He sends his love to all the brethren, and desires them to know that they have his confidence in all that they may do; and his message to the Saints is to obey the law, wherever they reside.

Elder Seymour B. Young, President of the First Council of Seventy, has passed away since our last conference, having been a faithful member of the Council for something over forty years.

A MISSION HOME IN SALT LAKE CITY

A home on State street has been dedicated for the entertainment of missionaries, and for the purpose of giving them instructions for a week or more, prior to their departure upon their missions; and also to take care of any returning missionaries who may be stopping briefly in this city on their way home, after having filled an honorable mission. We are pleased to announce that at the dedication there was a rich outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord, and we feel assured in our hearts, judging from the inspiration of the occasion, that it will be a source of great benefit to our young men and young women who are called to go out into the mission field.

CHANGES IN STAKES

There have been some changes in a number of the stakes, and the new men chosen to preside are as follows:

Curlew stake, Colen H. Sweeten.

Yellowstone stake, John M. White.

Nebo stake, Lee R. Taylor.

San Luis stake, James P. Jensen.

Young stake, Elmer F. Taylor.

New wards have been organized since our last meeting as follows:

Hillcrest ward, Grant stake.

Inglewood ward, Los Angeles stake.

LaGrand Second ward, Nebo stake.
 Payson Fourth ward, Nebo stake.
 Santaquin Second ward, Nebo stake.
 Genola ward, Nebo stake.
 Virginia City ward, Los Angeles stake.
 Home Gardens ward, Los Angeles stake.
 Ballard ward Lost River stake.
 New stakes organized, since our last conference:
 Kolob stake, President George Ray Murdock.
 Palmyra stake, President Henry A. Gardner.

In addition to the death of President Seymour B. Young we announce the death, since our last meeting, of David H. Cannon, president of the St. George temple, for many years; Bishop James A. Wright, of Bingham ward, Jordan stake, and Bishop Armond T. Rose, of North Farmington ward, South Davis stake.

MISSIONARY WORK

Perhaps no one thing in connection with the Church is as dear to the hearts of the Latter-day Saints as our missionary labor. Counting the time, the salaries that might be earned by those who are in the mission field, and the expense of maintaining them there, the Latter-day Saints are expending today something over $2,000,000 a year for the spread of the gospel in the world.

We know that the first and most important duty for us is to love the Lord our God with all our heart, might, mind and strength; and second to that is love for our fellowmen. No people in all the world in proportion to their numbers, are giving such evidence of a love for their fellowmen, and a desire for their welfare, as are the Latter-day Saints. Our missionary work proclaims to all the world our willingness to make financial sacrifice and to labor with no hope of earthly reward, for the salvation of the souls of the children of our Father in heaven. I am sure that a general statement of the missions will be of interest to this congregation.

We have in the California mission, presided over most ably by President Joseph W. McMurrin, 125 missionaries. There are 8,625 people in that mission. We own Church property in that mission valued at $289,114.04.

| President American Missions: | Missionaries | Members | Church Property |
|--|--------------|---------|--------------------|
| California, Joseph W. McMurrin..... | 125 | 8,625 | $289,114.04 |
| Canadian Joseph Quinney, Jr..... | 71 | 716 | 23,021.47 |
| Central, Samuel O. Bennion..... | 158 | 8,712 | 110,410.26 |

| Total | 1,092 | 64,189 | $1,008,230.35 |

Each and all of the men presiding over these missions are giving the best in their power for the advancement of their missions. They are men of God, devoted to the welfare of their respective missions. And this can be said also of all the other missions, the statistics of which I shall now read, giving the name of the mission, the president, the missionaries, the membership and the Church property.

European Missions:

|--------------------------------|-----|-------|-----------|
| Armenian, Joseph W. Booth..... | 2 | 164 | 450.00 |
| British, James E. Talmage..... | 151 | 5,670 | 78,518.17 |

(Here let me mention the splendid work Elder James E. Talmage is doing presiding over the European mission. The fact that he is a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh gives him a standing in Europe that perhaps none of the rest of us could possibly have. He is receiving excellent consideration from newspapers there, and is working early and late, as he has done all his life. He is one of the most industrious, energetic men I have ever known, and is making a very splendid successor to President David O. McKay, who did such a good work as the president of the European mission.)

| Temple Block, Benjamin Goddard..... | | | 40,000.00 |
| Total | 1,871 | 117,340 | $1,974,763.51 |

The grand total of our missionaries is 1,871; of members in the missions, 117,340; the grand total of Church property in these missions is $1,934,763.51, lacking but a very few dollars of $2,000,000 of money invested in Church property in the missions throughout the world.

Certainly when we consider the limited means of the people who embrace the gospel all over the world—for the gospel seems to reach the poor—we have great cause to rejoice in the financial showing in our missions, as well as the wonderful showing financially here at home.

PRESIDENT GRANT'S TOUR OF THE MISSIONS

Since I last had the privilege of meeting with you in general conference, I have visited the missionaries in the east, and given them instructions—in Indianapolis, Indiana; Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minnesota; Detroit, Michigan, and Milwaukee, Wisconsin; also in Chicago, and held public meetings in all of these places except Chicago.

At Minneapolis we had the pleasure of dedicating a very splendid meetinghouse and recreation hall erected there, and of meeting with a most excellent class of Latter-day Saints. We have chapels also at St. Paul and Minneapolis. The Saints at Detroit and at Indianapolis are gathering funds for the purpose of assisting in erecting chapels in those places.

On Nov. 27, I left Salt Lake City for Independence to attend the funeral of my cousin and the cousin of President Joseph F. Smith, Thalia Grant Smith. The services were well attended. After that I had the privilege of holding meetings in Independence, Kansas City, and St. Louis; also at Fort Worth, San Antonio and Kelsey, Texas, and in Wichita, Kansas, and instructing the missionaries in all of these places, as well as holding public meetings, which were well attended. In a number of places we have excellent meetinghouses to meet in. In others we have rented halls.

During this trip I had the privilege of speaking before the Chamber of Commerce in Kansas City, Missouri. The secretary announced his regret that all of the six thousand members of that great body had not had the privilege of listening to my twenty minute talk. I said in reply: "I can remedy that very easily. I will have six thousand copies of this speech delivered at your office so that when you send out your next monthly statements you can enclose a copy."

He expressed his pleasure in doing it. They were printed, and delivered, and I have received many letters from men who have read the speech, expressing their pleasure in having heard or read what I had to say regarding the faith of the Latter-day Saints. In that short address, speaking very rapidly (much more rapidly than I am doing now), I quoted all the Articles of our Faith and made comments upon them. It took four columns of the Christmas News to print that twenty and one-half minutes speech. I rejoice that there were at least a score of influential men who shook hands with me and expressed their pleasure in having heard the plain statement of the faith of the Latter-day Saints, as embodied in our Articles of Faith.

When I stop to reflect that the Latter-day Saints were expelled from the state of Missouri under the exterminating order of the governor of that state, then to think that representative men of one of the largest business organizations in Kansas City—one of the most progressive cities in the Union—would listen with attention and afterwards congratulate the President of the Church upon a speech in which he quoted the Articles of Faith, and some of them expressed regret that I did not have an hour instead of twenty minutes, and invited me to come back again, and take the hour, certainly we have to acknowledge that God is moving in a mysterious way his wonders to perform, and that the Latter-day Saints are becoming known for what they really are—a God-fearing, upright people, who are loyal to God and to their country.

The newspapers in all these places gave me better notices and published fairer reports of the speeches I made than I have ever had before on any trip I have taken.

On January 9, I left Salt Lake City for Los Angeles, for a brief visit, feeling very much the need of a little rest. I had the pleasure, on that short trip of only ten days, of speaking in the Adams ward and the Matthews ward in Los Angeles stake.

Feb. 3, I left Salt Lake City for a visit to the California, the Central States, and the Southern States missions, first treading the sands of the Pacific, and a few days later the sands of the Atlantic. Meetings were held upon that trip, in Ocean Park, Oakland and San Francisco; also in New Orleans, in Jacksonville, Florida, and in Atlanta, Georgia.

In all of these places there was a splendid attendance, and again the newspapers gave very fair notices of the meetings and of what was said. In no case was there any attempt to ridicule or belittle or to change the remarks that I had made in public, where reports were taken, or where interviews were given. Some slight mistakes were made, but they were all unintentional mistakes.

I have never enjoyed greater liberty in proclaiming the gospel than I did in some of the meetings on this last trip, lasting something over five weeks, visiting the California, the Central States and the Southern States missions.

I believe this fully covers the activities of the Church that would be of interest to the Latter-day Saints, and of my own labors since we were together six months ago.

ABSOLUTE FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST

I rejoice beyond the power with which God has endowed me to express my feelings, in the knowledge I possess regarding the divinity of this great Latter-day work in which we, as Latter-day Saints, are engaged; and as I travel I find a lack of belief in God, and in the divinity of Jesus Christ, even among the ministers of the gospel, I rejoice in the fact that every man and woman in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has an absolute faith in God, in his individuality, and an absolute faith that Christ is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world; that he came to the earth with a divinely appointed mission to die for the sins of the world, and that he is in very deed the head of the Church of Christ.

Upon the trip last mentioned, I cut from a newspaper a clipping which I had intended to read at this conference, but I have misplaced it. It was a recommendation by an English lord that people discard the "absurdity" of Jesus Christ as a God on earth and a Redeemer of the world, and that they accept the Mohammedan philosophy; suggesting that they could believe in all of the ethical teachings of the religion of Christ and Mohammed, but that they should get away from the absurdities of Christianity, and settle the various disputes and troubles that they were having in the Christian religion.

Wherever I read that statement—and I read it in a number of places—I took the trouble to state to the people in the various places where I preached, the position of the Latter-day Saints as to the gospel in which we believe. I quoted the vision of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, as follows:

"And this is the gospel, the glad tidings, which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us—

"That he came unto the world, even Jesus, to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness;

"That through him all might be saved whom the Father had put into his power and made by him;

"Who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him."

I announced to the people that in the Church of Jesus Christ no man or woman would be admitted into the Church, or be permitted to retain fellowship who is not willing to accept this statement absolutely without mental reservation. I also read to them:

"And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives!

"For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father—

"That by him and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

I announced in those meetings, in some of which the majority of the audience were non-members of the Church, that every Latter-day Saint must subscribe to the doctrine that God himself visited the boy Joseph Smith, and that God himself introduced Jesus Christ to the boy as his well-beloved Son. I announced to these audiences that among the Latter-day Saints there is no evidence of "modernism" so-called, and that no man or woman will be fellowshipped in this Church who denies the individuality, the personality of God, or that Jesus Christ is in very deed the Son of the living God, the Redeemer of the world.

THE WORD OF WISDOM

I regret to say that there is becoming evident among the Saints, a lack of interest and a looseness in observing the Word of Wisdom. I regret to have heard that there are men occupying positions as bishops' counselors, and as members of high councils, who do not observe this law; that certain bishops' counselors and members of high councils are not only drinking tea and coffee, but some of them are using tobacco. No man who uses tobacco is worthy to stand as high councilor in this Church. He owes it to himself to clean himself up or step aside and allow a man with more faith, with more manhood, with more integrity to God and his laws, to take the position that he occupies.

President Wilford Woodruff from this stand, many years ago, called upon every man holding the Priesthood and occupying any office in this Church, to obey the Word of Wisdom or to resign and step aside. I reiterate that men who do not obey the Word of Wisdom are not worthy to stand as examples before the people, to be invited into private priesthood meetings and to discuss matters for the welfare of the Church of God. Their disobedience shows a lack of faith in the work of God. I shall not take your time to read all of the Word of Wisdom, but I shall take time to read the words of the living God that must be acknowledged by every Latter-day Saint to be the word of God, or he or she is not entitled to be a member of this Church. After telling us what is good for us, the Lord makes a promise that is one of the most marvelous, one of the most uplifting and inspiring promises that could possibly be made to mortal man. He says:

THE PROMISE

"And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones;

"And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures;

"And shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint.

"And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

AN ILLUSTRATION OF THE DESTROYER REBUKED

I shall never forget the occasion when a friend appealed to me, upon learning that the doctor had announced that his daughter, stricken with diphtheria, would die before morning. He asked me to pray for that daughter, and after leaving his office I prayed with all the earnestness of my soul that God would heal that girl. While praying, the inspiration came to me: "The power of the living God is here on the earth. The Priesthood is here. Hurry! Hurry! Get John Henry Smith; go and rebuke the power of the destroyer, and the girl shall live."

The doctor waiting upon that girl, said she could not live till morning; but when morning came he explained that he could not comprehend it, and that he believed the girl was going to get well. He could not refrain from expressing his surprise at the change in the girl's condition over night. The power of the living God rebuked the destroyer.

"And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

The Lord has told us through the Prophet Joseph Smith:

"If a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life, through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come."

No man who breaks the Word of Wisdom can gain the same amount of knowledge and intelligence in this world as the man who obeys that law. I don't care who he is or where he comes from, his mind will not be as clear, and he cannot advance as far and as rapidly and retain his power as much as he would if he obeyed the Word of Wisdom.

TITHES AND REAL PROSPERITY

The law of financial prosperity to the Latter-day Saints, under covenant with God, is to be an honest tithepayer, and not to rob the Lord in tithes and offerings. Prosperity comes to those who observe the law of tithing; and when I say prosperity I am not thinking of it in terms of dollars and cents alone, although as a rule the Latter-day Saints who are the best tithepayers are the most prosperous men, financially; but what I count as real prosperity, as the one thing of all others that is of great value to every man and woman living, is the growth in a knowledge of God, and in a testimony, and in the power to live the gospel and to inspire our families to do the same. That is prosperity of the truest kind. I would rather die in poverty knowing that my family could testify that, to the best of the ability with which God had endowed me, I had observed his laws and kept his commandments, and by my example, had proclaimed the gospel, than to have all the wealth of the world.

OUR RELIGION THE TRUTH

Either we have the truth, and this gospel called "Mormonism," is in very deed the plan of life and salvation, the power of God unto salvation, through his Son Jesus Christ, and by following its teachings the greatest of all the gifts of God to man, namely, life eternal, will be ours, or it is not the truth.

God has given to men and women all over the wide world, seeking for the light of his spirit, in answer to humble prayers, a testimony and a knowledge that this gospel is exactly what it purports to be—that it is the truth, that it will stand forever, and that those who live it shall be exalted eternally in the presence of our heavenly Father, and his Son, our Redeemer.

CLOSING TESTIMONY

May God help each and every one of us who have a knowledge of the divinity of this work to live so that other men, seeing our good deeds, may glorify God and be led to investigate the plan of life and salvation. I bear witness to you here today, that I know God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of the true and living God, that he was a martyr, that he gave his life for this cause, and that his blood bears witness to the integrity, the honesty and inspiration of his mission as a prophet of the living God, because he was true even unto death. May God help us one and all to live the truth, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

A soprano solo, "The mighty God hath spoken", was sung by Mrs. Laurinda P. Brewerton.

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

I have had a few surprises in my life, but I think none greater than this. However, it is a very agreeable surprise. I am thankful for the privilege of meeting this vast audience and partaking of the spirit of this inspirational gathering. It is a joy to look once again into the faces of close associates and dear friends. It is this element which makes the meeting this morning more appreciated than the meetings generally that I have attended during the past three or four years.

THE SPIRIT OF ONENESS AND LOVE

I am glad to report, however, that the spirit of the meetings abroad, wherever we meet Latter-day Saints, is the same as that which we have here this morning. It matters not in what part of the globe the meeting is held, whether in the islands of the sea, in Japan, in Syria. in the Scandinavian countries, in England, Germany, France, Holland—wherever one meets a group of Latter-day Saints whose faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ is unwavering, there one finds the spirit of oneness, the spirit of love, the spirit of willing sacrifice for the good of humanity. God bless the Latter-day Saints all over the world that they may continue in that same spirit.

APPEAL FOR AN HONEST HEARING

It is a source of regret to me that such people should be so grossly misunderstood. May I read the following:

"We desire to hear of thee, what thou thinkest, for as concerning this sect we know that everywhere it is spoken against."

These are the words of some Jews from Jerusalem to whom Paul, then a prisoner, bound in Rome, had made an appeal for an honest hearing. They referred to the sect called Nazarene. Everywhere it was spoken against. Today after nearly two thousand years everybody acquainted with Christianity knows that Paul was falsely accused, and that that sect was vilified by those who spoke against it. It is a simple matter today to understand the wrong that was done to Paul and to the believers in the lowly Nazarene, but it isn't so easy for some people to see that today in the matter of persecuting a religious organization history is repeating itself. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as was the Church in the meridian of time, is everywhere spoken against, and its missionaries, are falsely accused. Paul, even at the time these men said they would like to hear him, was in Rome, because he had been accused of being a pestilent fellow, a mover of sedition, a profaner of the temple, all of which he denied before Festus. He denied these charges also before Felix, he denied them before King Agrippa, and bore his testimony before them, as President Grant has borne his testimony this morning, to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. But everywhere the people spoke against him.

IGNORANCE THE CAUSE OF MISJUDGMENT

I have been impressed during the last few years with this fact, that many people, British particularly, seem to choose to believe the bad things that are said against this people in preference to the good. I have tried to analyze why this is so; and I have come to the conclusion that much of it is due to ignorance. There are two principal classes of men and women in the world who choose to fan this flame of ignorance. These two classes are, first, those who will vilify an honest people for mercenary purposes; and second, those who misunderstand or who misinterpret the doctrines of the Church of Christ and justify themselves in opposing it on the ground that they do not wish their people to be contaminated by false doctrines. The first class, those who wilfully tear down another's reputation to get gain, I think should be classed among the worst people on earth. The government handles a man who will take the life of another, and may make him forfeit his own life for that which he takes. I think next to the heinous sin of murder is the crime of murdering one's reputation to get gain. We have men and at least three women in the world who are guilty of this despicable thing. Such purveyors of falsehood have that within them which seems to feed upon the slander which is current among mankind. Oliver Goldsmith said that this spirit is like the tiger which, after having tasted human flesh, ever afterwards pursues men in order to satiate his appetite. So the slanderer who has once gratified his appetite with calumny, makes ever after the most agreeable feast upon murdered reputation. It is a difficult thing to oppose, indeed often it is best not to attempt to oppose it; for as one great thinker has said, "Slander has a strange constitution, the more you oppose it the more it grows." Thus, because of the activity of this class of people, and also because of the activity of those who choose to misinterpret the gospel of Jesus Christ and justify themselves in opposing it, we find throughout the world that the Church of Jesus Christ is spoken against, not because of what the Church is, but because of what people think it is. There is a vast difference between those two things.

IN SPITE OF ALL, THE WORK OF GOD IS GROWING IN EUROPE

But, brethren and sisters, I am delighted to report to you that in spite of this condition the work of God is growing by leaps and bounds in the European mission. In Great Britain where I have spent much of my time during the past few years, I am pleased to report that the work is progressing, and that the outlook is most favorable. There 150 young men are devoting their time to the spreading of the truth and to the contradicting of these vile stories that have received such current circulation in that country. The same may be said of the other missions in Europe. In Holland the work is growing. Only last October on a Wednesday night, Amsterdam hall, just dedicated for the little branch there, was crowded to overflowing, and that is but typical of most of the meetings held there.

The French mission has just been organized, but in Switzerland the branches are growing, slowly it is true, but growing.

In Belgium, part of the French mission, the work is increasing rapidly.

In Syria, Brother Booth is devoting his life to the work among the Armenians, and the cause is in good hands. True we are not doing much missionary work there; but rather taking care of the little branch that is ours, waiting for the opening of that great mission.

In the Scandinavian countries we find the same spirit of progress.

GROWTH IN GERMANY BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS

In Germany the work is growing by leaps and bounds. You will be interested to know that last March in Koenigsberg when we held our conference, there were sitting on the stand in the beautiful gymnasium, part of a public school, seventy-five children who furnished music for the six hundred people assembled in a Sunday School session of conference. That night seventy-five adult voices furnished the music for the conference, the hall crowded to capacity, and as part of that service they rendered most efficiently and effectively part of Haydn's "Creation." On that same tour, on the following Tuesday at Stettin, we found the hall crowded to capacity at ten minutes to 7:00 o'clock. An excellent choir furnished the music. On our way to that service, publicly announced, we passed on our left the jail in which some of our elders had been incarcerated but a few years before, for preaching, or attempting to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. On the following Sunday in one of the large assembly rooms of a school house in Berlin there were assembled over one thousand children, Sunday School members, in one of the most inspirational Sunday School sessions I have ever attended. It is a significant fact that the street car officials of that great city, ran special cars for the benefit of the Latter-day Saint children. That afternoon we met in the Staat hall in Berlin, twelve hundred eighty-six people worshipping God there without molestation. Five minutes walk from where we met stands the jail in which President Clawson, my brother Thomas E., and some of their fellow-workers were incarcerated, a few years ago, for attempting to hold meetings such as we were holding there with permission of the Berlin authorities. On October 7, 1924, in Hamburg we held a most remarkable conference. On the Saturday night of which one hundred voices, nearly all of whom were members of the Church rendered Evan Stephen's "The Vision" in a most inspirational manner. Sunday night, as the concluding number of an inspirational, never-to-be-forgotten conference, that same choir sang "The Martyrs." These two great productions have been translated into German by one of our own brethren. The choir had been trained by one of our own elders.

THE FIRST CLASS PRESS MORE FAVORABLE

Saturday night the choir of one hundred voices was assisted by one hundred fifty children who sang "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah." A man not in the Church was sitting by my side, and when those combined choirs sang so inspiringly and in perfect tune, so far as my ear could detect, I dropped my head because of the tears in my eyes, and I saw tears rolling down my companion's cheeks, impressed beyond expression. These are but a few incidents indicative of the progress now being made in the European mission. Another encouraging indication is the fact that leading papers in London and in Liverpool and other great cities of the European mission have refused to print slanderous stories about the so-called "Mormons." A few years ago these vile slanders were given free currency. I will add also that the Latter-day Saints in those missions are united with the elders in counteracting the falsehoods and vilifications and vituperations that are so generally accepted as true. Tracting societies, carried on by our own members, are quietly, though effectively, overcoming the ignorance that seems to be the cause of the misunderstanding against this great Church, which stands for all that the gospel of Jesus Christ contains.

OUR ELDERS TEACH THE FUNDAMENTALS OF CHRISTIANITY

Recently I read a summary of the fundamental teachings of Christianity given by Albert P. Fitch, formerly professor in Amherst College, one of these modernists to whom President Grant has referred. The first fundamental in the spirit of Christianity he gives as the ethical and religious supremacy of Jesus Christ. This faith means believing what Jesus said regarding the moral and religious nature of God and man. The second fundamental he names as the acceptance of Christ's religious teaching and practice on the ground that it sets forth the principle which can be workable on our world, and the one principle potent enough to overcome our world. As the third condition in that belief he begins with Jesus' teaching as to the nature and character of God and he names the Father whom Jesus teaches as having redemptive love freely and supremely given, supremely exemplified in good will toward man. The fourth condition of this universal belief in Jesus means to be a son and a brother in this kingdom, this divine family which Jesus teaches; and to be a son and brother means to love our fellowmen the way God loves us.

These this prominent writer gives as the fundamentals of Christianity. These the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ are preaching. Their aims are lofty, their purposes are sublime, and the world instead of speaking against them should encourage them and uphold them. Particularly this is true of the state of Utah. Every citizen of this state owes an obligation to the 2,000 missionaries who are out representing this state in honor. Why should anyone condemn the missionaries who are out preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ without price, paying their own expenses for teaching to the world the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and bearing witness in kindness and love, that our Father has appeared to man, that his Son Jesus Christ has been raised from the tomb and now lives, bearing witness to the word of the immortality of the soul? Who should vilify people for standing on that sublime ground? They testify further that the Church of Christ is organized in its perfection, and if the world will accept that Church and apply its principles economically, educationally and socially, the brotherhood of man will be established and the millennium for which all honest souls are longing will be hastened.

TESTIMONY

I testify to you here that God lives, that he is near to his servants, and will hear and answer them and guide them when they come to him. I know that my Redeemer lives. I know it! I know that he has spoken to man in this age. I know that his Church is established among men. God help us all to be true to it and help the world to see it as it is and not as ignorant men, and vicious men and women sometimes picture it, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRIESTHOOD CONVENTIONS

During the past three months, by direction of the First Presidency of the Church, there have been held, in many of the stakes of Zion, priesthood conventions, the purpose of which was to stimulate renewed zeal and increased activity in the councils and quorums of the Priesthood. I hail with delight the inauguration of this heaven-inspired movement, in which I am proud and happy to have taken part.

The Priesthood, which means divine authority and the men in whom that authority is vested, is by far the most important thing in the Church of Christ; being, in fact, the rock upon which it rests. There could be no Church without the Priesthood. It is therefore of vital consequence that all the quorums and councils should function effectively toward the great ends for which they were instituted.

To my mind the most enjoyable of the meetings held in connection with the priesthood conventions, were those in which the brethren who had been appointed to speak related instances of the power of the Priesthood that had come under their observation or within the range of their experience. What I heard in those meetings awakened in me a desire to discourse briefly upon the subject at this general conference of the Church.

A GOD OF MIRACLES

Among the words of the Savior, as recorded in the New Testament, are the following:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you. He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." (John 14:12.)

To what particular works did the Savior refer when he made this remarkable promise to his disciples? I believe that he had reference to or meant to include the wonderful works connected with his mortal ministry—the miracles whereby he manifested his divine power, and concerning which it is written: He "did not do many mighty works" in certain places, "because of their unbelief."

The "beginning of miracles" in the Savior's ministry was the turning of water into wine, at the marriage feast in Cana of Galilee (John 2:11). Afterwards he fed a multitude of five thousand people with five loaves and two fishes. He walked upon the water, stilled the tempest, healed the sick, cast out devils, gave sight to the blind, raised Lazarus from the tomb, and did many other marvelous works.

SIGNS TO FOLLOW BELIEF

He endowed his apostles with the same power (Matt. 10:1-8), and having commissioned them to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," he said, "And these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover" (Mark 16:17, 18). "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following" (Ibid 5:20). No good Christian doubts this, nor does any faithful Latter-day Saint.

HIGHER CRITICISM'S ATTITUDE

Nevertheless, there is a growing disposition in these modern days to discredit and deny all such things—to do away with everything savoring of the supernatural. "Higher Criticism," as it is called, seems to regard this as its special mission. It would fain strip the Son of God of his divinity, and make him merely a good and a great man whose teachings are salutary and uplifting. Jesus Christ, we are told, was not miraculously begotten; he did not do the mighty works attributed to him; his blood did not atone for sin, nor was he raised from the dead to become the Author of the Resurrection. All these are myths and fables, invented for propagandist purposes, and are unworthy of credence by any intelligent mind. Such is the attitude of the so-called "Higher Criticism," otherwise known as "Modernism." The logic of its advocates is simply this: We cannot do works of that kind, and therefore works of that kind cannot be done.

I concede the first proposition, but not the second. They who doubt the possibility of miracles are indeed without the power to perform them. But this does not prove that believers lack that power. Miracles are the fruits of faith. "These signs shall follow them that believe." The gist of the matter is this: These doubters have done away with God, or have tried to do away with him, and consequently are unable to conceive of a higher power than they themselves possess.

ILLUSTRATIVE ANECDOTES

Their position reminds me of an incident that occurred many years ago, when I was a ward bishop in this city. It was Sunday evening, and a Primary Association conference was in progress at the ward chapel. One of the sisters, a Primary teacher, gathered the little tots around her upon the stand, and told them the story of Jesus feeding the multitude. Going home that night, one of the mothers, anxious to impress the lesson upon the mind of her little son, asked him the question: "What did Sister Blank tell you this evening?" "She told us about the Savior feeding the people," answered the boy. "How many people?" queried the mother. "Five thousand." "And what did He feed them with?" "Five loaves of bread and two fishes." "Well, now, how do you suppose he could do that?" The little fellow mused a moment, and then blurted out: "Well, I don't believe those in the middle got any."

His child mind could not grasp the idea that it was a miraculous feeding of the multitude, and that it was done by the power of God, and not of man.

Another little boy, of whom you may have heard—for I have told the story more than once in the congregations of the Saints—was of quite a different turn. Johnny was his name, and he had a little brother named Billy. The two were playing in their mother's door-yard. Johnny was whittling a stick, and Billy had just caught a fly. "Johnny," said he, "what a funny thing a fly is. See what lots of legs he's got. And every time I blow him he buzzes (suited the action to the word). I wonder how God made him."

Yes, and I wonder too. I wonder how He made the sunbeam, and the blade of grass, and the flowers and the trees. I don't know—all I know is that they are.

But Johnny had an idea of how God made the fly. He went on whittling, and said: "Well, Billy, God don't make flies like men make houses. When he wants flies he says, Let there be flies, and then there is flies."

Johnny had read the Bible, and understood it. He had learned the first great lesson of Scripture: "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light." His mind could allow for the difference—the vast difference between the might of Omnipotence and the puny strength of mortal man.

NOT CONTRARY TO LAW

One objection—perhaps the main one—urged against a belief in miracles, is that they are contrary to law. But that is a great mistake. They are in strict conformity with law. The universe is governed by law, and its Creator works in consonance therewith. But there are greater laws and lesser laws, and the greater suspend at times the operation of the lesser. When this occurs, men exclaim: "A miracle!" Others say: "It never happened, for it is contrary to law." Contrary to some law it may be, or may seem to be—some lesser law with whose everyday workings men are familiar; but not contrary to some higher law regarding which they may know little or nothing.

CARLYLE ON NATURAL LAWS

"What are the laws of Nature?" asks Carlyle, and answers his own question thus: "To me perhaps the rising of one from the dead were no violation of these laws, but a confirmation, if some far deeper law, now first penetrated into, and by spiritual force, as all the rest have been, were brought to bear on me with its material force. * * * 'They [the laws of Nature] stand written in our books of science,' say you; 'in the accumulated record of man's experience.' Was man with his experience present at the creation, then, to see how it all went on? Have any deepest scientific individuals yet dived down to the foundations of the universe, and gauged everything there? Did the Maker take them into his counsel, that they read his ground-plan of the incomprehensible All, and can say, This stands marked therein, and no more than this? Alas, not in any wise! * * * To the minnow, every cranny and pebble and quality and accident of its little creek may have become familiar; but does the minnow understand the ocean tides and periodic currents, the trade winds and monsoons and moons' eclipses, by all which the condition of its little creek is regulated, and may from time to time (unmiraculously enough), be quite upset and reversed?" (Sartor Resartus, Natural Supernaturalism.)

A grand old thinker, that Carlyle. Man is not a minnow, to be sure. But neither is man's finite wisdom any criterion by which to judge the infinite wisdom of the All-wise.

ELISHA AND THE AX

When Elisha the Prophet caused the sunken ax-head to float on the surface of the river into which it had accidentally fallen (II Kings 6:1-6), he was working in accordance with law, but not any ordinary law. The Law of Gravitation, in obedience to which all things on earth tend toward a common center—the center of the earth—required the ax to stay where it was, at the bottom of the stream. But the Prophet evidently knew of a higher law which could suspend the action of the law of gravity as to that particular object. He invoked that higher law, and "the iron did swim."

MOSES AND THE RED SEA

When Moses divided the Red Sea, so that Israel might pass through and escape from the pursuing Egyptians, who were overwhelmed by the returning waters, he was working in accordance with law—divine law. And the same is true of all servants of the Lord who have wrought miracles at any time.

JOSHUA AND THE SUN

"Higher Criticism" laughs to scorn the idea of Joshua commanding the sun and moon to stand still, so that Israel might have light enough effectually to defeat his enemies (Joshua 10:12-14); and the Bible account which declares that "the sun stood still and the moon stayed," is treated with derision. Because, forsooth, if the sun had halted even for a moment in its regular course, the whole mighty universe would have come crashing down into chaos and ruin. Well, perhaps so, if there had been no God to uphold it—the God who made the sun and moon, and whose almighty power holds them in their orbits and controls their every action. I see nothing more marvelous in controlling the heavenly bodies, than in creating them in the first place. Be it a fact, as is claimed, that it was the earth that stood still in Joshua's day, and that the sun and moon only seemed to be stationary, that does not affect the main argument. The same God who made the earth also made the sun and moon, and could have stayed them in their course had He so willed.

WHAT ARE MIRACLES?

Miracles are extraordinary results flowing from superior means and methods of doing things. When man wants light he strikes a match, or presses a button, or turns a switch—and lo! there is light. When God wants light, he says: "Let there be light." It is simply a matter of knowing how to do things in a superior way, and having the power to do them. Man is gradually acquiring this power. It is a far call from the tallow dip to the electric light. But the end is not yet. Improvements will continue to be made, and some day, perhaps, men may be able to make light just as the Lord makes it. Paradoxically, it might be said that the time will come when miracles will be so common that there will be none.

MODERN INSTANCES

The Latter-day Saints are not strangers to the miraculous workings of divine power. Our history as a people is replete with such occurrences. I could relate many experiences of my own in support of this assertion, and so could these, my brethren, seated here upon the stand.

My first experience of the kind was in the year 1877, when I was a missionary in the State of Ohio. I had been preaching in the farming districts near the town of Elyria, testifying that the miraculous "signs" promised by the Savior were in the Church of Christ today, the same as in days of old. A sick woman took me at my word and sent for me. She had been suffering for six weeks with neuralgia, and was almost maddened by the incessant pain. She asked me to administer for her relief. Up to that time I had never performed the healing ordinance, and felt very timorous over the outcome, fearing that if she were not healed I would be deemed an impostor and perhaps driven out of the neighborhood. Moreover, her husband had threatened to kill any "Mormon" missionary who crossed his threshold. But I went—and was not molested.

No sooner had I laid my hands upon that woman's head, than a power came upon me that I had never felt before, nor have I ever felt it since, in the same degree. It was a burning in my bosom, so powerful as to almost deprive me of speech, and it went like fire to the very tips of my fingers. I rebuked the pain in the name of Jesus Christ, and the woman was instantly healed. "Thank God!" she said, "the pain has gone." I sank into a chair and burst into tears, overcome by this manifestation of the goodness and power of God.

Not long afterwards, I was visiting a family of Saints in the coal-mining region near the town of Akron. A married daughter of the household came trudging through a snow storm, with her two little children, a distance of three miles, to get me to baptize her. I did so, the immersion taking place in a little brook running through her father's lot. It was February, and the weather was extremely cold. The moment I stepped into the icy stream a pain shot up to my heart, and I feared for a moment that I would have to step out again. I feared also that the little woman would not be able to endure it. So I silently prayed that the water might be tempered. Immediately there was a change in it—or else in me, for I felt the cold no more, nor did she complain of it at all.

HEALING SELF-ADMINISTERED

The baptism over, she went on her way rejoicing. But I was in distress. A pain had seized me in the elbow of my left arm, and it steadily grew worse. That evening I used some liniment upon it, but got no relief, and my arm continued to swell and stiffen. I could hardly move it next day, but by that time I knew just what to do. There was some consecrated oil in the house, but my green inexperience had made me think that it would be improper to use it on myself, there being no other elder present. But suffering had opened my eyes, and my faith was strong, for I felt that the pain had no business there. That night I carefully washed off the liniment, applied the holy oil, and rebuked the pain in the name of Jesus. The effect was instantaneous. I turned my arm over—the pain was gone; and I have never felt a vestige of it since.

THE GREATER SUSPENDS THE LESSER

One more instance, and I am done. Some years ago I was engaged to deliver a lecture in one of the towns south of this city, and was on my way to the lecture hall when I received a message from the bishop of the ward, asking me to come and administer to his little daughter, who was critically ill. Her doctor had said that she could not live till morning. Taking with me another elder, I proceeded to the bishop's home, and we administered to the dying girl. Next morning a telephone message informed me that a marvelous change had taken place. The young patient, who had not slept for days prior to being blessed by us, immediately thereafter had sunk into a sweet and refreshing slumber. She slept twelve hours, and woke up—normal, and continued so. The doctor was astounded, and the parents, of course, were overjoyed. That girl, then fifteen years of age, and now twenty-four, is an active member of the ward in which she resides, has a good position, and goes to and from her work as well and happy as if she had never known a day's illness.

Her physician had said that she could not live till morning—and no doubt he was right, from his viewpoint. Medical science had so decreed, and but for the interposition of Divine Providence, that decree would probably have gone into effect. According to the lesser law she could not live. But a greater law said: "She shall live." And the lesser could not operate in the presence of the greater.

ALL THINGS POSSIBLE TO THEM THAT BELIEVE

Miracles belong to no particular time or place. Wherever and whenever there is a legitimate demand for the exercise of divine power, that power will act, and marvels will result. We worship a God of miracles, and he changeth not, but is the same yesterday, to-day and forever (Mormon 9:7-11, 17-20). There is but one valid reason for the absence of miracles among any people, and that is the absence of faith. "All things are possible to them that believe."

The choir and congregation sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Nelson J. Hogan, president of the Idaho stake of Zion.

Meeting adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

President Heber J. Grant opened the meeting by announcing that the choir and congregation would sing, "O say what is truth?"

After singing, Elder Colen H. Sweeten, president of the Curlew stake of Zion, opened the meeting with prayer.

A duet, "For so hath the Lord commanded," was sung by Cannon Lund and August Glissmeyer.

BISHOP CHARLES W. NIBLEY

It is a great honor, I am sure, to be asked to speak to this congregation, but I approach this duty with fear and trembling. The meeting this morning, the first session of our conference, gave assurance that the Lord is still with his Saints, and still recognizes this work, and that he is sustaining his servants who labor for his honor and glory.

There is a deep significance in Elder McKay's testimony given this morning, when he spoke concerning the changed conditions in some nations of the earth where hitherto our sons suffered imprisonment for trying to preach the gospel; while now places of prominence are open to them, even the halls of the governments, in which Latter-day Saint missionaries have been invited to hold meetings. What has brought about this change?

During recent years, especially since the World War, great changes have taken place in this direction. I call your attention to a revelation of the Almighty, given to the Church through the Prophet Joseph Smith found in Section 98, beginning at the 4th verse:

"And now, verily I say unto you concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them.

"And that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me.

"Therefore, I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land;

"And as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these cometh of evil.

"I, the Lord God, make you free, therefore ye are free indeed; and the law also maketh you free.

"Nevertheless, when the wicked rule the people mourn.

"Wherefore, honest men and wise men should be sought for diligently, and good men and wise men ye should observe to uphold; otherwise, whatsoever is less than these cometh of evil."

Again, in the 101st section of the same book, commencing at the 77th verse, we find:

"According to the laws and the Constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles;

"That every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment.

"Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another.

"And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood."

This last revelation was given just after the Saints had been driven from their homes in Missouri. Yet the Lord's words to his people were that the Constitution of the United States is that which "I established." This divinely conceived Constitution is, we are told, for the benefit of all mankind. The Lord said that its underlying principles are for the benefit of all flesh, not made for this country alone, but intended to govern the whole world.

Why is it that the elders are not permitted to preach the gospel in Russia today, where there are a hundred and eighty million people who have scarcely heard of the gospel? It is because of the moral agency that the Lord speaks of in the revelation known as section 101. These people are denied their free agency. The rulers of this people have a wrong conception of the rights and privileges which the Lord says pertain to all mankind.

In the 109th section of the Doctrine and Covenants is a prayer, given by revelation to Joseph the Seer, which was repeated in the Kirtland temple at the time of its dedication on March 27, 1836. I shall not undertake to read it, but shall quote only the 54th paragraph:

"Have mercy, O Lord, upon all the nations of the earth; have mercy upon the rulers of our land; may those principles which were so honorably and nobly defended, namely, the Constitution of our land, by our fathers, be established forever."

These words were uttered as a part of the dedicatory prayer, notwithstanding the persecution the Saints had suffered prior to 1836, persecution suffered at the hands of people who were prejudiced, people who were ignorant as to what the Latter-day Saints stood for, ignorant as to their beliefs and their aims. Notwithstanding all this, and clearly showing the broad and liberal spirit of this great latter-day work where such matters are concerned, the words last quoted were uttered as a part of the dedicatory prayer.

The revelations found in the Doctrine and Covenants, sections 98 and 101, which I have quoted, and in which the Lord has said that no man should be in bondage to another, were given at a time when millions of negroes were in bondage in the southern part of the United States. At that time there existed a great question as to whether or not slavery should be perpetuated, and it seemed that the decision might be in favor of continuing to hold this black-skinned race under bondage to the white men who owned them. This question was settled a few years later, when the Supreme Court rendered its decision in the Dred Scott case. Dred Scott was a negro who escaped from serfdom and went into one of the eastern states. His owner followed him and replevined him, claiming he was after his own property, just as he would go for a mule or an ox or a cow. Under the law the slave was his property. Chief Justice Taney, then at the head of the Supreme Court, delivered the decision that this was the law, the constitutional law. This decision was the law of the land; but in the justice and mercy of Almighty God, even a law which became a constitutional law, had to be overthrown, and the Lord raised up Abraham Lincoln and others to see that the law laid down by Him—that one man should not be in bondage to another—was set right and true freedom established in this land.

From that day on, millions more of slaves have been freed in Russia and other lands. In these latter-days, thrones have tottered and fallen, and in place of these has come a representative form of government, a government of the people, a government which gives the people their moral agency, spoken of in the revelations I have read, and which the Lord says is pertinent to all mankind.

It is true that there might be a constitution similar to ours in such countries as Mexico or Russia, and the results would not be at all the same, for the people of these countries are not as intelligent as are the people of this nation. But even in such countries, our Constitution could not help but produce a better government, for in that Constitution are the underlying principles which will, in time, teach these people to govern themselves intelligently. In order that the various peoples of the earth may at sometime reach the point at which they can intelligently govern themselves, the Lord in his mercy has in the past overthrown nations comprised of millions of people who have been subjected to unrighteous domination.

Now, coming to our own land, our own Constitution, I think we hardly appreciate sufficiently what this Constitution means to us and to the work of the Lord. It is my belief that this Constitution, which the Lord declared he established, is for the benefit of all mankind. Verse 77, Section 101, reads as follows: "According to the laws and constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles." Certainly, the fundamental, governing principles which the Lord has established on the earth under the name of the Constitution of the United States, were meant for all men, everywhere. These principles, with their accompanying freedom and liberty, are inseparably connected with our great latter-day work, it seems to me; for the Lord tells us that this freedom, this liberty, was brought about through the hands of wise men whom he raised up. Without this great Government of ours, this God-given Constitution, the gospel of Jesus Christ could never have found an abiding place in the earth. They are connected, correlated, interlocked one with the other; for the Constitution, like the gospel itself, is for the benefit of all flesh, for all mankind.

The Book of Mormon tells us that so long as the people of this nation are willing to acknowledge Jesus Christ as the God of this land, or as the ruler of this nation, so long shall his mercies be extended unto them. Notwithstanding the weaknesses of our people, and of other people, I believe that today there is a greater desire in the minds of millions of people of this nation to acknowledge God and to acknowledge Jesus Christ and to live righteous lives than there has ever been before. While in some ways wickedness may be increasing, yet there is an earnest desire in the hearts of millions of people in this nation to acknowledge God and serve him.

Only a month ago President Coolidge delivered his inaugural address, and he closed it with the name of God upon his lips. These are the closing words of that address:

"America seeks no earthly empire built on blood and force. No ambition, no temptation, lures her to the thought of foreign dominion. The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the cross. The higher state to which she seeks allegiance of all mankind is not of human, but of divine, origin. She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God."

Here is a direct acknowledgement, most direct, coming from the very head of the nation, showing that the nation believes in God, believes in his divine providence, and asks for nothing save the favor of God.

When Abraham pleaded with the Lord that the cities of the plain might not be destroyed, he was told that if he could find ten righteous people, the Lord would spare them. I believe that, instead of ten righteous people in this nation of one hundred and ten millions, there are millions of people who are righteous, who daily seek the Lord, and who try to live according to their beliefs.

On the coin of the realm there is another direct acknowledgment that as a nation we believe in God, for, stamped on every silver dollar and on every goldpiece, are the words: "In God We Trust."

Also, in our national anthem we have these words:

"Then conquer we must, for our cause it is just,
And this be our motto: 'In God is our trust!'
And the Star-spangled Banner in triumph shall wave, O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

I believe that it is my duty and your duty to teach our children concerning this great God-inspired Constitution, this great law of liberty which he has given to this world, and which was never given before to any nation in any land. Never before has there been a representative government of this kind. Republics have been tried, hundreds of times, thousands of years ago, but never was there anything like this Government. If I had the time I could point out the differences between our God-given Government and those governments of men.

In our nation's hymn "America," we have the words which were given, I believe, by the inspiration of the Almighty. The last verse of this hymn is the one that declares our beliefs as to who is the God of this land, and while we sing it, I believe that we feel in our hearts that Jesus Christ is indeed our God, the true Ruler over this great land of ours. The words of the last verse are these:

"Our father's God! to thee,
Author of Liberty,
To thee we sing;
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King!"

The Lord bless us. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

About ten days ago it seemed as if I might be prevented from attending this great gathering. I took counsel with myself, and came to the conclusion that the general conferences of the Church, which I have been permitted to attend, with considerable regularity, ever since the days of my early manhood, have been a tremendous source of strength to me. I doubt whether any other Church activity has been more powerful in establishing and building my faith than these great general conferences.

GOD GUIDES AND DIRECTS THIS PEOPLE

I have been stirred by this conference; and uplifted in my feelings. I desire to bear witness to the truth of that which has been spoken.

God has indeed been with us, and his word has been taught by his servants who have been called upon to address us this day. It is always a source of gladness to me to recognize, in the events within the Church, that God does indeed guide and direct this people.

THE TRUE MEANING OF LIFE

These great gatherings are a constant marvel to me. There are none other like them in the world. I never attend one without pondering upon the real reason why these conferences bring out these hosts of people, all apparently of one mind, one heart, and one understanding. President Grant's remarks this morning gave the explanation. These thousands could not assemble every six months, and enjoy these meetings, unless we were certain about the great issues of human life. I believe that every person here belonging to the Church, who has caught the spirit of this great latter-day work, feels certain as to the origin of man, the purpose of life, and the destiny of humanity. Perhaps no search in the history of the world has been equal to the search for the truth regarding the origin and destiny of man. We have had times when great nations have given themselves to a search for wealth or for long life. The elixir of life and the philosopher's stone were the objects of man's seeking for many generations, and at other times men have sought other great things. But there has never been a time when the great majority of thinking people have not attempted to seek out the true meaning of life. We have found that true meaning. In the hearts of the Latter-day Saints there is an assurance as to the meaning of life, and that security of knowledge makes possible the many wonderful things that characterize this Church and Kingdom.

UNCERTAINTY OF THE MEANING OF LIFE A CAUSE OF WICKEDNESS

As I travel about among those not of our faith it seems to me that the uncertainty concerning the meaning of life is a chief cause of the wickedness, indifference and fear which are found among the nations today. In fact, whenever uncertainty with respect to this fundamental problem attacks an individual, from that moment on, either fear develops with him, fear of the unknown, often leading to superstition, or he becomes indifferent, and says: "I don't know whence I came, I don't know where I am going, why should I care? Let me do my bit today, my little kindness, but pay no attention to the churches or to organized forms of religion, because I don't really know what is the truth."

REVEALED RELIGION GIVES THE INTERPRETATION

Curiously enough, our wealth of modern, man-made knowledge sheds little light upon the meaning of life, unless interpreted in the light of revealed religion. How different with us Latter-day Saints! If we know one thing with certainty, it is that we were in the beginning with God, that we came here according to a fully and completely devised plan, and that we shall live on after this life, forever and forever.

Father Lehi, in his remarkable farewell address to his children, as recorded in the Book of Mormon, declares that "Adam fell that men might be;" and continues, "and men are that they might have joy." Any person reading this statement so frequently quoted among our people, must understand that the very essence of it is that there is no chance with respect to the great program of human life, but that this earth and all things on it, every living soul, fits into the great, eternal plan prepared by Almighty God before the foundations of this earth were laid. In another place in modern scripture we have a statement to the effect that not only shall we have joy in this life, on this earth, but that in the hereafter we shall have "immortality and eternal life." Not merely continued existence, from age to age, but eternal life with all that life implies—activity, development, growth and increase of every proper kind of character. Such doctrines give joy to the human heart. Such doctrines make it possible to live on this earth in the face of difficulties that men of necessity have to encounter.

THE GREAT PRINCIPLE OF ETERNAL PROGRESS

I am especially grateful for the doctrine that we shall go on, throughout the endless ages, far beyond the comprehension of man. I am indeed grateful that all has not been revealed today, because if we are to go on, today and tomorrow and throughout all time to come, then we shall be continually learning and increasing in knowledge. I find men occasionally who are very fond of discussing the unrevealed truths of the gospel. To them everything must be explained; there must be no mystery. This is completely out of harmony with the great principle of eternal progression, one of the cornerstones of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am thankful that I do not understand all things; that I have been given a certain field of knowledge into which I must fit this mortal life to the best of my ability; and that I know for a certainty that on the tomorrow, when this life is passed, or perhaps before it is over, new light and knowledge may be given me.

I am grateful also that man is that he "might have joy." I believe that statement does not mean joy merely in the hereafter; I believe it means joy on this earth. As a people, we are and should be joyful, glad and happy. We should so live that those who come among us would observe that gladness is in our hearts, because of the truths that have been given us. The body, mind and spirit should be used to give joy, not sensual pleasure to man. However, merely knowing a doctrine or a truth is not enough to make us fully happy, or to give us that complete joy of which Father Lehi speaks. Undoubtedly, the one great way to achieve joy in this life is that laid down by President Grant this forenoon. A person, to enjoy satisfaction in life and to stand firmly upon his feet in the walks of life, must of necessity obey law which really means the proper use of knowledge. Conformity with law gives joy, opposition of law brings misery and unhappiness.

OBEEDIENCE TO LAW

How much of the law should a man obey? All of the law! Not one law should be forgotten. Let us obey all the law, with all our might and strength, and we shall find the joy that characterizes those who really understand life, and who have won the full measure of gladness. I am thankful that we have among the Latter-day Saints very many persons, perhaps the majority of the members, who so live that this great joy, which has been promised us, is theirs indeed.

SINCERITY A DOMINANT TRAIT IN THE CHURCH AND ITS LEADERS

Obedience to law must be impelled by simple honesty or sincerity. I wonder if we are quite sincere in our obedience, or if we give to the Lord with hidden motives in our hearts. We cannot be anything but sincere if we are true Latter-day Saints. Men who give of their time, talents or means without fully giving themselves, their hearts, only give in part. Throughout the history of this Church is the simple thought, that sincerity lies at the foundation of this organization. The people of the kingdom have come from all corners of the earth, after accepting this gospel with full sincerity, holding nothing back. The Prophet Joseph Smith was sincere. Brigham Young was sincere; there was no doubt in their minds. They did not dissemble; they were not playing a game; they were not acting a part; but sincerity is evident in everything that they did. Some so-called historians who have written about us, have laid as the foundation of their writings the assumption that Joseph Smith was a scoundrel who attempted to fool the people, and that Brigham Young became a "Mormon" because he loved wealth and power. That is not history. Those who will read the history of this Church, with honest hearts, freeing themselves of prejudice, will come back to the conclusion that this work was founded in honesty. Any historians or purported historians who begin their work by assuming that the founders of this Church were dishonest or insincere, do not write history, they write travesty. History is more than a mere chronology of facts. History is a great interpretation of events. The events of "Mormonism" bring out clearly the fact that a sincere feeling has dominated all of its years.

JOY COMES BY OBEYING THE WILL OF GOD

I know, my brethren and sisters, that it is possible to be happy in this Church and kingdom. I know that joy may be won by those who will do the will of God. I have tried, as you have, to keep the law fully. I bear you my testimony that as I try and try again to live the full law, a joy far beyond the power or the giving of man, becomes mine.

A few years ago an old widow on her death bed asked: "Is this death?" And the answer came; "Perhaps it may be near." She then sat up in bed, asked that pillows support her, and said: "If this be death, then I want to testify of the joy I have had in finding and living the gospel of Jesus Christ. Gladness has come into my soul because of this great gift which I found in my early womanhood." A week ago, on the train, I met the type of man who has found joy in this work. This man, not yet very old, but in the afternoon of life, told me the story of his life. He had been on three missions. His sons, five or six of them, had gone on missions. He had twice sold out his property that he might obey the call of the priesthood and go on missions. Now, in his declining years, yet vigorous and strong, he told me with what a joy he faced the coming years. His children were taught in the truth, he himself had a modest home, and the good things of life, so far as he needed them. I said to him: "Brother, you have sacrificed much, but you have also a great abundance of blessings to compensate you for the sacrifice you have made." He turned to me, looked into my eyes, and said: "Brother, I sacrificed, therefore have I the blessings. Without sacrifice I should not have known the great joy which is promised to those who live the principle of the gospel."

I bear witness again to the truth of this work, to its spiritual power and to its sufficiency in guiding men in all the affairs of life. I pray that we may be continually blessed by God, that we may always be willing to give unto him all that may be required of us, that we may go onward, and that the work may be prospered, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

A solo, entitled, "Flee as a Bird", was sung by Archibald Bronson. It was said that this was Brigham Young's favorite song.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Mexican Mission

I am very happy, my brethren and sisters, to have the privilege of attending this wonderful gathering of the Church, and upon this opening day of our conference seeing so many people gathered together. Truly it is a marvelous sight to look into the faces of those who have congregated in this building, and to note that there are many who cannot find seats, and who are standing in the aisles, and some, I take it from their movements, who have gone to the Assembly Hall, or to some other place where they might receive the instruction and the admonition and advice that are given at this conference. I rejoice in this great latter-day work, and the spirit that prompts these great gatherings and brings these people from so great distances to be refreshed and admonished and built up in their faith in God, that they might learn more of all their duties to him and to their fellowmen, and go home to their respective abiding places and further the progress of this work of our Father.

I rejoice that in the day and age in which we live, the kingdom of God is again established in the earth. I have an abiding faith and testimony that the kingdom foreseen and foretold by that great man, Daniel, in the interpretation he gave to the dream of the great king of Babylon, is now established upon the earth, as has been said at this conference. There is no doubt in the hearts and in the minds of Latter-day Saints regarding the existence of our Father in heaven. There is no doubt in the hearts and minds of Latter-day Saints regarding the life and existence and work of our Redeemer and our Savior, Jesus Christ. There is absolutely no doubt today, either in the minds of the old or the young, as to whether this is the Church of God established in the earth or not, for we know that it is. I bear you my witness this afternoon that I know God has again spoken from the heavens, that he has revealed himself to his chosen servants, and that he has restored the same power, keys, and Priesthood that he gave to his servants in all ages of the world and particularly to his servants in the meridian of time, when he gave to Peter and to his companions the keys of the kingdom. I know that the holy Priesthood is here upon the earth today. I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, that without the shadow of a doubt and without feeling in my heart any sense of hypocrisy, I can say to you this afternoon that I know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, raised up to establish this work in the day and age in which we live. I rejoice that I have heard that testimony borne by my father. I rejoice that I have read that same testimony recorded in the words uttered by my grandparents, and I rejoice that I have lived long enough upon the earth to have heard my own son, I believe in all sincerity, bear that same testimony.

I have labored now for nearly nineteen years in the missionary field, with your sons and daughters. There is nothing in all the wide world that brings me more joy or more happiness than to associate with them, and to hear them with all humility and in all sincerity declare to the world that they know these things are true.

My brethren and sisters, I do not stop with this testimony, and I wish to go further this afternoon. It is of course, traditional now among us all, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, but I wish to continue my testimony and say I know that all who have succeeded him as presidents of this Church have been prophets of God; and while in the discharge of their duties, and living the lives of Latter-day Saints, all who have occupied the positions of apostles have been in very deed apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, men of the Lord, raised up to work in the ministry to perfect the Saints, and to be instruments through whom the revelations of the Lord might come, where they might minister, either at home or abroad. I bear you my witness today that, more than I know any other one thing, it seems to me, I know that President Heber J. Grant is a prophet of God, and that through him the Lord makes known his mind and will to this people. We can only be safe in obedience to the advice and to the counsel and to the admonition and to the reproof that may come to us through the sources of which I have spoken.

I wish to leave with you this testimony and to say that I dedicate my life and my services to the Lord, and I desire to serve him by serving my fellow men. I rejoice at the opportunities that have come to me to labor in the ministry abroad. I have said before, and I stated this to our missionaries with whom I recently held a conference, that if I held no anticipation of reward in the future, I have been an hundredfold paid, more than perhaps I deserve, through the knowledge I have that through my teachings, I have brought hope into the lives of people who, before they knew me, were without hope, and that hope has been brought through the teaching of the principles of this everlasting gospel that is dearer to me than my life.

May the Lord help us to be faithful and to be true to the great knowledge that has come to us, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

It is not considered indelicate to speak in laudation of one's country and extol its institutions and people. By the same token I am sure that it ought not to be considered indelicate to speak of one's church and his people, and to commend their achievements and their greatness. It seems to me desirable, particularly at this time, that attention should be called in rather liberal manner to the greatness and the richness of our people; this, at least in part, because an insidious and subtle effort seems to be made, and is now in progress, to underestimate the achievements of this people and, in consequence, to undermine the faith and the confidence of those who study us and give some favorable attention to us, and in particular the faith and the confidence of our young people.

THE ATTITUDE AND SPIRIT OF OUR PEOPLE

I believe that without arrogance and undue presumption, I am justified in saying that we are the greatest people on the face of the earth today. I recognize the fact that in making such a statement I should bring myself under some condemnation by those who set themselves up as critics of our work, our faith and our people. The most charitable consideration of them, however, I think is that they do not know and do not understand the genius of our work, and the attitude and spirit of our people. They cannot understand our great endeavor to follow in the footsteps of the Master and teach his gospel, unless they possess the spirit of the gospel which comes from the Lord himself. For while the things of man may be understood and comprehended by the spirit and intelligence of man, the things of God cannot be understood except by the Spirit of God; and when men in criticism of our work, ridicule our members and belittle our high conceptions, they do not understand the import and significance of these conceptions or else, understanding them, they are prompted by an evil spirit to attempt to undermine the work and thwart its great purposes.

GREAT BY PROCESS OF NATURAL SELECTION

I say, we are a great people. We are great by process of natural selection. You have heard of the blood of the Pilgrim fathers extolled. Sociologists today are saying that the perpetuation of that blood, the blood of those men who came from England and Holland and established this great republic, is indispensable to the perpetuation of the great principles of liberty, equity and justice which underly this mighty nation, its Constitution and institutions. It is my belief that the men who were drawn from the Old World to found this Government have been selected with no more care and to no higher purpose than the people who have been selected from all the hamlets and the villages of the Old and the New World to come to Zion to prepare the foundation of the Kingdom of the Living God. The same great qualities of independent thinking, high manhood, power and strength, were indispensable in both instances; so that by the heritage which we have from our great ancestors we are a great people.

IN WHAT WE ARE GREAT AS A PEOPLE

We have been great in achievement. The limited time at my disposal would in no sense justify me in attempting even to outline the remarkable accomplishments of the people of the Church within less than a century of time. You know in the main those accomplishments, and they bear witness to the integrity and the honor and the devotion of the Latter-day Saints.

We are great in the message that we have to give to the world. That message is the greatest message that has ever come to mankind. It is the same message that came in the beginning of the world. It is the same message that will come in the end of the world, for the salvation of humankind, and the establishment of God's Kingdom. It contains truths which are indispensable to life, to the knowledge of life, and to all that makes life worth living.

We are a great people in intelligence. I am fully aware of the fact that there might be many who would controvert that statement, because there are many today who measure intelligence by different standards and criteria than we set up for the measurement of pure, true intelligence. Intelligence, as I conceive it, is the power to grasp and assimilate the fundamental, essential truths of God and the universe, and those great truths which are embraced in the gospel of Jesus Christ are of such transcendent importance that they overshadow all other truths assuming that there is such a distinction so that the minds of men, which are capable of understanding, comprehending and knowing gospel truths, are possessed of the highest order of intelligence with which God has endowed the human family. In making that statement I wish in no sense to belittle that intelligence which is capable of grasping the great truths of science and of making application of the laws of nature to the betterment of mankind. I rejoice in education, in its culture, in its refinement, and in the knowledge and power that comes from it, but I maintain that the highest order of intelligence is that intelligence which is capable of receiving and enjoying a testimony of God's greatest and highest truth.

We are a great people in power, not only in our own human power, although it is not inconsiderable; but we are great in the power that God has given to us. He has endowed us with a portion of his own power, with a portion of his own strength, and with that power and through that power, the Church is established, this work is maintained and the Lord prepares the way for the coming and establishment of his own kingdom. This great power of the Priesthood, is the power without which this work would be impossible. It is the greatest power bestowed upon humankind. It is given for the most important offices and service to humanity. It is in very deed a portion of Godhood, and you men and boys who are privileged to possess it more nearly approach God in your Priesthood than in any other attribute or way.

IN WHAT WE ARE RICH AS A PEOPLE

Not only are we a great people, we are a rich people; not so much in the things of this world, in money and possessions and property, but we are rich in those things which are essential to happiness and well-being. We are rich in humility. We recognize the power of the living God. We recognize our dependency on that power, and we subject ourselves to the laws of God and endeavor to be obedient to them. We are rich in virtue; thank the Lord! I believe there is no community in the broad land where there is so much of clean living, so much of pure thought, and a people so free from contamination by those practices which so generally prevail among mankind. We are rich in that great asset of humanity, health. We are rich in health because we have endeavored to live the law of health, spoken of as the Word of Wisdom. We are rich in the love of God, and that is a great source of wealth. I think that is the greatest source of wealth that any people may enjoy. I have felt for years and years that if the love of God could come to the inhabitants of our own dear country, we should be free from the disturbances and disorders, and the problems, at least in large measure, which now confront us; and having the love of God, we have in our hearts the love of man, illustrated and exemplified by our devotion to his interests and our sacrifices to teach him those vital things so essential to his welfare and his happiness. We are rich in our homes, in the places where we live, in this wonderful heritage, in this great land of Zion itself. We would not exchange our habitat for any other place in the world. We were led to it. It came to us through divine appointment. It is a part of God's blessing, and mercy to us. Then we are rich in vision, without which a people perish. We have been given to see ahead. We are not relying upon the predictions and prognostications of men. We know where we are going. Thank the Lord for that great blessing. We know that the direction we take leads to happiness and peace and joy and salvation. We know that the commandments which God has given to us are the promises upon which we may build a structure of endurance. There is no uncertainty with reference to our future. We know that our destiny is high and great, and that our objectives are all worthy our best and highest endeavor, a blessing that transcends our comprehension.

OUR TREMENDOUS RESPONSIBILITY

A people so great and so rich are surely charged with tremendous responsibility. We are charged with the responsibility of establishing and maintaining this great Church, this great instrumentality with all its facilities and agencies, designed to save the human family and to exalt men. We are charged with the responsibility of preserving, inviolate and free from corruption, the great truths of the gospel, of which we are living custodians. That is a tremendous responsibility. If we in any measure fail to discharge it faithfully, the very essence of eternal life, the gospel itself, may be in its effect and application, lost to mankind. But we are to preserve it and to keep it sacred and inviolate for the generations to come.

We are charged with the responsibility of actually founding the kingdom of the living God; we are making it here, for I believe as I stand here that the work we are now doing is in preparation for the kingdom that is to be established and presided over by the Lord God himself. Indeed I look upon our own work and endeavor as indicative of the same kind of work that shall be carried forward when the Lord does come to reign and to conduct the affairs of his kingdom himself. What a responsibility! How much it means to us! Men of God, women of Israel, I know that you thrill as citizens of this great country when you hear the glorious strains of the Star Spangled Banner, or the sacred anthem of America, and see the great flag of the country raised aloft. But I tell you that, thrilled as you may be by patriotic impulse, you are exalted as you stand under the banner of Christ to carry forward his mighty work and establish his glorious kingdom. God help us to be faithful to our trust, and worthy of our riches, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

President of the Western States Mission

My brethren and sisters, my heart has been made to rejoice in the testimonies and experiences given this day. I have pleasure in representing the people of the Western states mission and bringing to you greetings from them, also from your sons and your daughters who are laboring there, preaching the gospel of repentance. I have never associated with a finer group of men and women than those who are at present laboring under my direction. My heart has been filled to overflowing when I have listened to their testimonies concerning the establishment of God's work in the latter-days. They have an abiding faith in the living God, they have an abiding faith in the divine mission of Jesus Christ and in the atoning sacrifice that he made on Calvary, for the redemption and salvation of the human family. They have an abiding faith in the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and those who were associated with him and those who have followed in his footsteps. Undaunted and unafraid they are proclaiming the message of salvation to the people of the Western states, and I want to say to you that those who are accepting their message are receiving the same spirit and the same testimony that have come into the lives of all Latter-day Saints who have obeyed the commandments of our eternal Father. They are not afraid to lay down the gauntlet and say to men and women everywhere: "If you will repent of your sins and yield obedience to the saving ordinances of the gospel, you shall know of the doctrine whether it is of God or whether we speak of ourselves." The testimony of hundreds of men and women who have received the ordinances of the gospel is to the effect that the Spirit of God has come into their lives, and all doubt has been removed from their souls. They have been made happy in the knowledge that God lives, and that his promises are true.

I would like to relate just one or two experiences that have come to me from the men and women who have received the message of the gospel in their hearts and have obeyed it. I do this because several have said to me, since I came to attend the sessions of this conference: "Are those whom you are baptizing worth while? Are they faithful Latter-day Saints? Do they keep the commandments of God?" I want to say to you that I have seen genuine faith manifest on the part of many who have accepted the gospel and who are far removed from our organized branches, isolated if you please, perhaps a single family alone in the community.

I call to mind one family in the state of Wyoming, the only members of the Church in the small community where they reside, baptized a year ago last February, a widow with eight children, six boys and two girls. Just before Christmas of last year I received a letter from the oldest boy, nineteen years of age, to this effect. Said he: "Elder Knight, I believe that I am being neglected. I have been a member of the Church almost a year, and I have not yet been called upon a mission. I want to go and preach the gospel. I may not measure up to the standard of the missionaries that you have in Wyoming, but I will do my very best." Realizing that his mother is a widow, I wrote her a letter and asked her what should be done. She answered: "I knew that my boy had written you. I make approximately one hundred twenty-five dollars a month doing hospitalization work. The desire of my heart is that all of my boys may do missionary work for the Church of Jesus Christ, and if I can pay a little each month I should like to have my boy go as soon as he is out of school this year." Since then I have received several letters from that mother. In one of them she said that she had never earned more than one hundred fifty dollars in a single month, but on the first of February I received a letter from her in which she enclosed her tithing for the month of January—thirty dollars and fifty-cents. Said she: "Surely the Lord has been good to me. Last month, I made more than twice as much as I have ever made in a single month, before, three-hundred five dollars;" and in the month of March I received another letter in which she said: "Enclosed find my thithing forty dollars. I made four hundred dollars in February." I will say that that young man will have the opportunity of going on a mission and preaching the gospel of repentance. The Lord is opening up the way for that widow woman and not only the one boy, but others will follow, and they will make valued defenders of the faith.

In the city of Pueblo, three weeks ago tomorrow, another little woman came to me and said: "President Knight, I am ready to mortgage my home that my oldest boy might have the desire of his heart to fill a mission to the nations of the world." I could mention many other circumstances of like character. One young man recently joined the Church in the state of Nebraska. He was prominently identified with one of the protestant organizations. Since his baptism he has taken an active part with our missionaries and now is spending two to four hours each day, tracting his home town and bearing witness that God has heard his prayers and that he knows the gospel taught by the Latter-day Saints is the power of God unto salvation. These men and women who are receiving the gospel are worth while. The same witness has come into their lives that has come into your lives, and the lives of all who have accepted the gospel and obeyed the commandments of our eternal Father. I rejoice in my association with these men and women because of their faith and their devotion.

We have been fortunate in baptizing a large number of converts. Among the number baptized three ex-ministers of the gospel. I asked one of them why he joined the Church and he said: "For years I have been looking for a satisfying religion, and I did not find it in any of the protestant churches, neither did I find it in the Catholic church; but when I investigated "Mormonism" there came a new light into my life, and I am happy to have come in contact with your missionaries." He said further: "I want all the books that have been written by your people, because, though I preached the gospel for many years, I realize how little I know about the great plan of salvation. The Bible has become a new revelation to me. Every time I open its lids, new inspiration comes into my life, and I rejoice that I have at last found the truth." All these things give evidence to me that these men and women have been converted to the gospel of the Master.

I do not desire to occupy more time. I rejoice in the blessings of the gospel. I know, as I know I live, that it is true, that God lives, that Jesus Christ is his Son, the Redeemer of the world, the only name by which salvation may come to his children here upon the earth. I know, too, as I know that I live, that Joseph was the instrument in the hands of God of establishing again his work in the earth. He was the pioneer, the path-finder, he blazed the way and gave to the children of men in our day a new faith in God and in his glorious work. I know, too, that the men who preside in Israel today are prophets of God, inspired to direct the destiny of Israel. May God bless us all that we may be obedient to their counsel, and that we may have power to reduce to practice in our lives the instructions that are given to us by our file leaders, that is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER B. H. ROBERTS

Of the First Council of Seventy, and President of the Eastern States Mission

I think we have been very fortunate today in the solos that have been rendered. I was especially thrilled, as I presume you were, by the first solo this morning, the opening line of which was: "Man, though dead, shall arise again."

That declaration brought to my mind another great prophecy on the same subject, to which I think it will be profitable for us to pay some attention. Permit me to make a little explanation about it. Israel, both in ancient times and in modern times, were a people who endured great sorrows, both as a nation and as a people. They had war, famine, pestilences and many and great tribulations. In the days of Isaiah, the Prophet, their sorrows seemed to reach a climax, and this great Prophet of Israel presented their sorrows to the Lord, undoubtedly for the purpose of obtaining some word of comfort, some hope that would lighten their burdens and bring somewhat of joy into their existence. He voiced the sorrows of Israel in the following language:

"Lord, in trouble have they visited thee, they pour out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them.

"Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs; so have we been in thy sight, O Lord;"

And the Lord answered the Prophet in the way of comfort and said:

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." (Isaiah.)

This was the word of comfort unto Israel, the renewal of the promise of immortality, of resurrection unto immortality. I pray you be reminded here who it is speaking. It is the Jehovah of the Jews, "the Lord God Omnipotent." Here was a prophecy: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." And then comes the song, the praise and thanksgiving:

"Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; and the earth shall cast out her dead!"

Seven hundred years passed away, and then came the fulfilment of Isaiah's prophecy:

"And behold the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake and the rocks rent and the graves were opened, and many of the Saints which slept arose and came out of their graves after his [the Christ's] resurrection, and went into the Holy City, and appeared unto many." (Matt. 27:51-3.)

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. * * * The earth shall cast out her dead." Here we have the prophecy of Isaiah and also its fulfilment. And yet we are living in a day when those who are supposed to name the name of Christ in reverence and faith, are not only denying the Deity of "the Lord God Omnipotent," as he was revealed in the flesh, but are equally strong in their denial of this great fact of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the resurrection from the dead. Comparatively few men in the religious world, believe this unique doctrine of the Christian faith, the literal, physical resurrection of the dead. Many cults and philosophies teach that in some way or other there may be a continuation of the life principle, and even of personality after death; but it was reserved as the peculiar and glorious doctrine of the Christian faith to teach the reality of the resurrection from the dead, the reuniting of the spirit and body after death. If this is not the head of the corner in the building of the Christian faith, it is at least one of the very chief foundation stones. St. Paul teaches us that, and shows us that if there be no resurrection of the dead, then the Christian faith is vain, and is all a mockery. Let me point that out to you a little.

In his discourse upon this subject, showing how fundamental this principle is to the gospel of Jesus Christ, Paul of the early Christian writers was the first to mass the testimony extant in his day. You must remember that the gospels, as we now have them—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John—with their wonderful testimonies concerning the resurrection of the dead, were not in existence at the time that the epistles were being written. Not the gospels, but the epistles, are the first Christian documents of the meridian dispensations, and I think it quite true as an historical fact, that Paul was the first to mass the testimony on this subject. He said in his first letter to the Corinthians:

"I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures;

"And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the scriptures:

"And that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve;

"After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep."

That is, some had died; but he could appeal to the testimony of five hundred brethren who at once had beheld the resurrected Christ.

"After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles.

"And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time."

And now, upon this state of facts he proceeds to reason, and the keenness and the sureness of his logic cannot be questioned. I pray you hearken to it:

"Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead.

"But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen:

"And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

"Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not."

Could you escape that conclusion?

"And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins.

"Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

"If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

And is not that just as true now as it was when Paul conducted the Saints at Corinth through this process of reasoning to that awful conclusion? Down into the very depths of despair does his reasoning bring us, if it so be that Christ did not actually rise from the dead. Behold, how hopeless, how vain is the faith of men in Christ if they eliminate from the scheme of his religion the doctrine of physical resurrection from the dead. Thank God the apostles did not leave either the Corinthian Saints or those of us who come after them in that slough of despond to which he had conducted them; but having brought us down to where we may see into the very depth of despair, now he proceeds to build upon the opposite supposition—no, not "supposition," but the truth; namely, that Christ has risen from the dead. Hearken to him:

"But now Christ is risen from the dead and become the firstfruits of them that slept.

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

"But every man in his own order; Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

"Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power.

"For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

"The last enemy that shall be destroyed, is death."

That is the Christian faith; and yet Christians of today, in large part, do not believe it; a few do, but only a very few. And believe me, Latter-day Saints, that among the many things required of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, one of the many duties laid upon us in the preaching of the gospel in this dispensation, is this responsibility of being God's witnesses in the world for the truth, for the reality of this doctrine of the resurrection from the dead. Not in the survival of some essence or spiritual principle, but in a real life hereafter, in which spirit and body shall be reunited, and, as the Christ lived physically after he rose from the dead, and was a physical as well as a spiritual personage, so too shall men now dead become: "Your dead men shall live again, together with my dead body," sayeth God, "they shall arise from their graves." That is the word of God, and I care not for the philosophies of men, nor their attempt to tell us that it is a matter of impossibility for them to be resurrected. If the material particles of this body that we call ours shall be preserved as peculiar to the spirit that has laboriously gathered that body through life and made it the garment of our spirits, I care not what becomes of those particles so far as our sight and touch may be concerned. I place my faith in the word and promise of Jehovah before he tabernacled in the flesh, that men should arise from the dead; that together with his dead body they should arise and live; and with all my heart I believe God competent and able to fulfil his promises. "Though a man be dead, he shall arise again." And as a poet has said, "Eternal form shall still divide eternal mind from all beside," and we shall know each other, and have associations that shall, when purified, be holy, and shall minister to our joy through all the ages that shall endure. That is my faith, in this great doctrine of the Christian faith, emphasized in this new dispensation of the gospel whereof we are heralds and witnesses. This is my testimony, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "High on the mountain top," and prayer was offered by Elder Levi S. Udall, president of the St. Johns stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

SECOND DAY

MORNING SESSION

Promptly at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning, April 5, 1925, President Heber J. Grant opened the meeting by announcing that the choir and congregation would sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

After the singing, Elder Junius F. Wells, assistant Church historian, offered the opening prayer.

The hymn, "An angel from on high" was sung by Hyrum J. Christiansen and Edna Gotberg, with the choir.

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

As I stand before this vast congregation this morning, and contemplate my early experiences upon this block, when the Latter-day Saints were few in number, with poor shelter, and very inferior accommodations compared with that which we at present enjoy, I am overwhelmed with gratitude as I think of that which the Lord has accomplished, for I see in this gathering the fulfilment of his word, and the words of his servants, the prophets uttered more than four-thousand years ago, and come to understand my own littleness, my own inability, my utter dependence upon the Lord my God, for without his aid we are helpless, he has done it. It has not been the work of man, although devoted men and women have been the instruments in the hands of the Lord in the accomplishment of that which we see before us this morning. Therefore, I give praise and glory and honor to God for all that I am, all that I hope to be, all that we are, all the we can hope to be, for our dependence is upon him.

DO YOU BELIEVE THE PROPHETS?

I desire, my brethren and sisters, as a preface to the remarks which I make, to read briefly from the second general epistle of the Apostle Peter to the Church, as follows:

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

At the time when the Apostle Paul was arraigned before King Agrippa, to answer to charges which had been preferred against him, after recounting the circumstances of his conversion, he turned to Agrippa and said:

"King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest." Then Agrippa said to Paul, "almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." And Paul said: "I would to God that not only thou, but that all who hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, save these bonds."

I desire to paraphrase these words as follows: My brethren and sisters, do you believe the words of the prophets as they have been handed down to us through the holy Scripture? I know that you believe, and I would that all of you understood them, and comprehended their importance and application to us, not as I understand them, but more fully and comprehensively.

NEED OF KNOWING THE HAND-DEALINGS OF GOD WITH MAN

To properly comprehend the great plan of human redemption, designed by the Father for the blessing of his children, it is necessary that we be familiar with his hand-dealings with the people of the world, from the beginning of time, as we count it, until the present. It is not sufficient that we familiarize ourselves alone with the dispensation in which we live, important though that be. We must know something of the past, as history has written it, the present as we see and understand it, and the future as the prophets have declared it. Without this grouping of the past, the present and the future, our vision will be restricted, and incomplete.

LOOKING BACK FOUR THOUSAND YEARS

I desire, my brethren and sisters, to take you back more than four thousand years, to a period of time when an event occurred which was of transcendent importance to us, when a promise was made by the Lord which has not yet been fully fulfilled, but toward the fulfilment of which we are rapidly moving.

THE PROMISE TO ABRAHAM

It was about 122 years after the deluge that the Lord called Abram, who at that time was seventy-five years of age, and a direct descendant of Shem, the chosen son of Noah, commanding him to go out from the country of his kindred, and from his father's house, into a land which he promised to give him, and to his posterity after him, for an everlasting inheritance. In obedience to the word of the Lord, Abram went from Haran, to which place he had been taken by his father, from Ur of Chaldea, and pitched his tent in the land of Canaan. Twenty-four years later the Lord spoke to him as follows:

"And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him: I am the Almighty God. Walk before me, and be thou perfect.

"And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly.

"And Abram fell on his face, and God talked with him, saying,

"As for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations.

"Neither shall thy name be called any more Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham, for a father of many nations I have made thee.

"And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee."

GOD'S PROMISE NEVER FAILS

We have here a promise made by the Lord, which, judged by human standards, was impossible of fulfilment. Abraham was an hundred years old, and his wife, Sarah, ninety years of age, a supposedly barren woman, but the Lord had spoken, and his word never fails. Isaac was born, and the Lord repeated to him the promise made to his father. Isaac in turn, became the father of Jacob, through whose lineage, and the twelve sons who were born to him, the foundation was laid for the twelve tribes of Israel, the progenitors of a mighty nation.

THE HISTORY OF ISRAEL AND THE STORY OF JOSEPH

To follow the history of this interesting people from that time to the present in detail, would be impossible in the short time which is at my disposal. You who are familiar with the story know that twelve sons were born to Jacob, six of whom, Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar and Zebulon, were the sons of Leah, his first wife. Joseph and Benjamin the sons of Rachel; Dan and Naphtali the sons of Bilha, the handmaid of Rachel; and Gad and Asher, the sons of Zilpah, the handmaid of Leah.

You are familiar with the story of Joseph, who was sold by his brethren to passing Ishmaelites who carried the boy into Egypt, and sold him to Potiphar, a captain of the king's guard. How he was cast into prison, and finally released and made the vice-regent of the king, the most powerful personage, except the Pharaoh, in all Egypt. You know how famine came to the land, which made it necessary for Jacob to send his sons to Egypt to procure food, where these men discovered that the governor of all the land was their younger brother, whom they had sold into slavery, and after returning to Canaan brought down their father and all of their possessions into Egypt, and were established in the land of Goshen, where they became a numerous people.

But Egypt was not the heritage of Israel. Naturally they would have remained there and been absorbed by the Egyptians, but the Lord had decreed otherwise. He had given them Palestine as the land of their inheritance, and their return to that land was inevitable, even though it were against their will.

After remaining in Egypt more than two hundred years, some chronologists say four hundred, the Lord delivered them from the bondage of the Egyptians, through his servant Moses, and under the leadership of Joshua they again entered and took possession of the promised land, a great people. From the seventy souls who went into Goshen with Jacob, there went out 603,500 men more than twenty years of age, men able to bear arms, probably not less than three millions of people in all.

The history of the Israelitish people, from the time they crossed the river Jordan, under Joshua, and subdued Jericho, until the establishment of the kingdom, under Saul, about four hundred years, is one of almost constant war and contention, which resulted in the subjugation of neighboring kingdoms and peoples, until Israel, under David, became the possessors of Palestine from Dan on the north to Beersheba on the south.

It was under Solomon that Israel reached the zenith of her power and glory as a nation and kingdom. One hundred and twenty years had elapsed from the establishment of the kingdom, under Saul, until the division of the nation, which occurred during the reign of Rehoboam, the son of Solomon. Five hundred years in all, since the return from Egypt. Years of conflict among themselves and with other peoples, years of faithlessness on the part of Israel, and suffering because of their transgression and indifference to the words of the prophets whom the Lord sent among them to call them back into the old way of righteousness, but they said, we will not walk therein. When the watchmen whom the Lord placed on the towers of Zion sounded the warning trumpet they said, we will not hearken.

THE DAY OF THE PROPHETS

It was the day of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and others of the prophets of old, through whom the Lord strove to keep the people in the path of righteousness and justice, the only road that leads to ultimate success, for final triumph has never been achieved and never will be, by a nation which denies the living God, and departs from the path which he has marked out for us to follow. In their pride of conquest Israel saw, in the glory which had come to them, fulfilment of the promise made by the Lord to Abraham. He had given them the land of promise, from north to south, and east to west, they were in possession of it, and in their pride believed themselves strong enough to hold it forever.

THE DISSOLUTION OF ISRAEL

The dissolution of Israel, as a great nation, commenced when the ten tribes, under the leadership of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, broke away from Judah and Benjamin and established the kingdom of Israel, with Samaria as its capital city, while Judah and Benjamin, with a part, at least, of the tribes of Simeon and Dan retained Jerusalem as the capital city of their kingdom.

Both nations rapidly relapsed into idolatry, Israel to the worship of the golden calf of the Egyptians, while Judah, to a great extent, turned to the worship of Bel of the Babylonians, and the idolatrous gods of the nations with which they were surrounded.

In this condition Israel continued until about seven hundred years before Christ, when the Assyrian armies, under Sennacherib overcame the Israelitish armies, captured Samaria, carried the Ten Tribes captive into Assyria, at the head of the Euphrates, and brought people from their own country whom they established in the cities of northern Palestine, and the identity of Israel as a distinct people, was lost to the world.

Judah continued to maintain a semblance of power for more than one hundred years after the fall of Israel, when they suffered the same fate. Judea was overrun by the Babylonian armies under Nebuchadnezzar, Jerusalem taken, the temple desecrated, and despoiled of its wealth, and Judah carried captive into Babylon, as their brethren had been carried into Assyria.

THE CHRISTIAN ERA USHERED IN

This hasty and imperfect review brings us to the ushering in of the Christian Era.

After the fall of the Babylonian kingdom to the armies of Media and Persia, King Cyrus permitted the Jews to return from Babylon to Palestine and rebuild their city and temple which had been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. With great enthusiasm this work was undertaken, and it appears that the Jews who returned from the Babylonian captivity showed greater faith in the God of their fathers than had been manifested before they were carried away.

THE FATE OF THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL FORETOLD

The fate which befell the House of Israel had been plainly outlined by the prophets whom the Lord had sent to warn them that the penalty of disobedience would be the dissolution of the nation, and that they would be taken from the land of their inheritance, and scattered among the strange and unbelieving nations of the world. A final fulfilment of this prophecy occurred when, about one hundred years after the birth of the Redeemer, Judea was trodden down by the Roman armies under Vespasian and his son Titus, Jerusalem taken, the temple destroyed, and the Jews scattered among the nations of the world, where they have remained until the present day.

The prophets Zechariah and Ezekiel had declared that the shepherds would neglect the flock, and that the sheep would be scattered, and become the prey of strange nations. To all human appearance, judged by every law of human reasoning, the promise made to Abraham had failed, he had been promised that Palestine should be the everlasting heritage of his children, and now they held dominion over no part of it. The end, it appeared, had come, the words of the prophets had been literally fulfilled, the promise made by the Lord if ever to be realized was still future.

ISRAEL NOT FORSAKEN OF THE LORD SHALL BE GATHERED AGAIN

Notwithstanding the fact that the Israelitish people had been scattered and lost to the world, to become the prey of strange and unbelieving nations, the Lord had not forgotten nor forsaken them. He remembered the covenant made with their father Abraham, and decreed that it should be verified. The prophet Jeremiah, six hundred years before the birth of Christ, speaking upon this subject, declared that the Lord who scattered Israel would gather him again, in these words:

"Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say: He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd does his flock.

"For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob and ransomed him from the hand of him who was stronger than he.

"Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat and for wine and for oil and for the young of the flock and of the herd; and their soul shall be as a watered garden and they shall not sorrow any more."

Isaiah, seven hundred years before the birth of the Redeemer, referring to this same matter, said:

"And in that day [he spoke of the Latter-days] there shall be a root of Jesse which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people who shall be left from Assyria and from Egypt and from Pathros and from Cush and from Elam and from Shinar and from Hamath and from the islands of the sea.

"And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth.

"The envy also of Ephraim shall depart and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim."

CHRIST'S PROMISE TO ISRAEL PRIOR TO HIS CRUCIFIXION

During his ministry among the Nephite people, upon this continent, after his resurrection from the dead, the Redeemer of the world, referring to this matter used the following language:

"I will remember the covenant which I have made with my people; and I have covenanted with them that I would gather them together in my own due time, that I would give unto them again the land of their fathers for their inheritance, which is the land of Jerusalem, which is the promised land unto them forever, saith the Father.

"And it shall come to pass that the time cometh when the fulness of my gospel shall be preached among them; and they shall believe in me, that I am Jesus Christ, the son of God, and shall pray unto the Father in my name."

This entire chapter treats the subject to which I am referring, but I need not read further from it.

More definite and direct on this subject than any other, and to which I desire more particularly to call your attention, are the words of the Redeemer, just prior to his crucifixion. He called his disciples together, and in answer to questions which they propounded, spoke as follows:

"And now ye behold this temple which is in Jerusalem which ye call the House of God, and your enemies say that this house shall never fall, but verily I say unto you that desolation shall come upon this generation as a thief in the night, and this people shall be destroyed, and scattered among all nations.

"And this temple which ye now see shall be threwn down, that there shall not be left one stone upon another."

This was literally fulfilled at the time of the taking of Jerusalem by Titus, the son of Vespasian.

"And it shall come to pass that this generation of Jews shall not pass away until every desolation which I have told you concerning them shall come to pass.

"Ye say that ye know that the end of the world cometh, ye say also that ye know that the heavens and the earth shall pass away, and in this ye say truly, for so it is, but these things which I have told you shall not pass away until all shall be fulfilled.

"And this have I told you concerning Jerusalem, and when that day shall come shall a remnant be scattered among all nations; but they shall be gathered again; but they shall remain until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

"And in that day shall be heard wars and rumors of wars, and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayed his coming until the end of the earth.

"And the love of man shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound. And when the times of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fulness of my gospel; but they perceive not the light, and receive it not, but turn their hearts from me, because of the precepts of men.

"And in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

That the final destiny of Judah was different to that of Joseph is plainly indicated by the blessing pronounced upon him by his father.

THE BLESSINGS OF JACOB

Just before his death, Jacob called his sons to him and gave to each his last blessing. Upon Judah he pronounced the blessing of leadership, declaring that the scepter of power should not depart from his house until the coming of Shiloh, to whom the Jews looked forward as their final king.

When he laid his hands upon the head of Joseph, he said:

"Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall. The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors, unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills. They shall be upon the head of him who was separated from his brethren."

The promise made to Abraham gave to him and his posterity after him the land of Canaan, which was to be the land of his inheritance, and this promise was renewed to Isaac, and to Jacob, and the Lord, through the latter, enlarged this promise to Joseph, his heritage, like a fruitful bough by a well, whose roots are well watered, ran over the wall, and extended beyond the heritage of Judah to the utmost bounds of the Everlasting Hills, to America, where the Zion of our God is to be established.

THE DESTINY OF ISRAEL PLAINLY INDICATED

The scripture which I have just read indicates plainly the unchangeable decree of the Lord regarding the destiny of the Israelitish people. Scattered and lost to the world as they have been, they are not lost to the Lord, nor has he forgotten the covenant which he made with their father Abraham, and which was reconfirmed upon the heads of Isaac and Jacob.

THE WORK BEGUN IN THIS DISPENSATION

With the opening of the present gospel dispensation, now nearly one hundred years ago, the Lord commenced the work which is destined to result in the establishment of Ephraim, and other descendants of Joseph upon this continent, where the Zion of our God is to be established, and the restoration of the Jews to Palestine, the land of their fathers.

With the organization of the Church the Lord made plain the duty of its members. Men holding the restored priesthood, with its keys of authority, were sent into every country where they were permitted to go, proclaiming the opening of a new gospel dispensation, calling the people to repentance, and bearing witness that the mountain of the Lord's House was to be established in the tops of the mountains, and to be exalted above the hills, where we are today and that people from all nations should flow unto it, in order that they might be taught the way of the Lord, and learn to walk in his paths.

THE JEWS TO BE RESTORED TO THE PROMISED LAND

The promise made by the Lord, regarding the restoration of the Jews to the Promised Land was not overlooked. At the conference of the Church, held on the 6th of April, 1840, now eighty-five years ago, Orson Hyde, a member of the Council of the Twelve, and John E. Page were called to go on a special mission to Jerusalem, for the purpose of dedicating the Holy Land for the latter-day gathering of the remnant of Judah. John E. Page failed in the accomplishment of the mission which was assigned him, but Orson Hyde, after surmounting many difficulties, a year and a half later knelt upon the Mount of Olives, and dedicated Palestine as the gathering place of the scattered remnant of Judah, and this servant of the Lord, moved upon by the spirit of prophecy, declared that inasmuch as it was by political power and influence that the Jews were scattered, it would be by political power and influence that they would be gathered, and that England was destined to be the nation which would take the leading part in the work of restoration.

More than seventy-five years had elapsed, almost a generation, as the scripture counts time, since the light of the gospel had broken forth among those who sat in darkness, since Orson Hyde dedicated the land of Palestine for the latter-day gathering of scattered

Judah, and the Holy Land still remained under the dominion of the Turk, the star and crescent still floated from the minaret of a Moslem Mosque, where the temple of Solomon once stood.

THE GREAT WAR AND BRITISH PROTECTORATE

Then came the great world war, and final peace at Versailles when Great Britain was given the responsibility of establishing and maintaining a protectorate over the Holy Land. The British armies, it is true, had already occupied Jerusalem, but it was with the signing of the treaty of Versailles that the first definite step was taken looking to the fulfilment of the words of the prophets, who had declared the redemption of Israel, and the restoration of Judah to the lands of their fathers, thousands of years ago.

INTEREST OF THE JEWS IN THE RESTORATION

The interest manifested by the Jewish people in the restoration of Palestine has few parallels in the history of the world. One is reminded of the zeal which their fathers showed as they returned from Babylon to Jerusalem to rebuild their city and temple, when women as well as men worked, and gave lavishly of their most cherished possessions that the task might be accomplished.

Jewish societies have been organized in various parts of the world, having for their purpose the creation of a publicly recognized, legally acquired home in Palestine, and the building up of the Jewish homeland in the Canaan of their fathers. Many millions of dollars have been subscribed by Jews throughout the world, to be used in the purchase of land, and the development of the dormant resources of the country.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED

From statistics which I have gathered, I wish to read the following, which shows a part only of that which has been accomplished:

Immigration

At the close of the war there were about fifty thousand Jews in Palestine. At the close of 1924 this number had been doubled, and latest reports tell us that Jews are pouring into Palestine at the rate of more than two thousand per month.

Agriculture

At the close of the war not more than one hundred thousand acres of land were in Jewish ownership in Palestine; since then through the Zionist movement as much more has been added by purchase. Swamps have been drained, sand dunes leveled, and agricultural exports, which before the war were practically nothing, now amount to more than twenty-five millions of dollars annually. Eighty-nine Jewish agricultural colonies are being developed.

Schools

One hundred and twenty schools have been established, as follows: 39 kindergartens, 65 elementary schools, 5 secondary schools, 3 teachers training colleges, 4 technical schools, and 5 manual training schools. These schools have 497 teachers, and a large number of students in attendance. Besides these schools several agricultural training schools have been established, and a University at Jerusalem which was dedicated last week by Lord Balfour, has been established on a site which cost sixty thousand dollars.

Large sums have been expended in the construction of roads, hydro-electric power plants are in course of construction, hospitals have been erected, and provision made for the care of the indigent and unfortunate. According to the reports which have been rendered there was expended from the first of April, 1921, to June 30, 1924, more than thirty five millions of dollars in the development of this undertaking.

A movement such as this cannot fail to excite the interest and admiration of the civilized world. The Hebrew people have suffered during the past centuries as no other people have ever suffered, so far as my study and observation entitle me to judge. They have been scattered among strangers, where they have been denied the right of citizenship, and participation in the commercial and industrial activities of the people. They have been ruthlessly robbed of that which they have honestly acquired by the labor of their own hands. Worse than all, pogroms have been declared against them, when the protection of the law has been officially declared to be inoperative, and permission given to wicked men and women to despoil them of their goods, and even deprive them of life itself.

THE MOVEMENT MUST ELICIT PRAISE AND SYMPATHY

The wonder is that they have survived and maintained their nationality during all these centuries of affliction, and now that they are undertaking to establish a home in the land of their fathers, where they may live in peace, and be a blessing to the non-progressive people who have so long dominated it, they certainly must elicit the praise and sympathy of all right thinking people.

THE HAND OF THE LORD IN IT

From a human point of view it is a movement of great interest, but to me the one outstanding feature is the manifest hand-dealing of the Lord, which I see in it, and which they themselves do not fully realize. It will come in a natural way, it may be England, it may be some other nation, but it will be the Lord who will direct.

THE LORD WILL USE THE NATIONS TO ACCOMPLISH HIS PURPOSE

When Cyrus led the victorious Medio-Persian army to the overthrow of the great Babylonian kingdom he was not aware that he was fulfilling the words of the prophets who had lived long before, but he did so in wondrous detail. When Alexander of Macedon halted his army, after he had crossed the Dardanelles and won the battle of Granicus, and notwithstanding the protest of his generals delayed his campaign against Persia, in order that he might besiege and finally destroy Tyre, he had no knowledge of the fact that the prophets had declared that the greatest maritime city of the world should be destroyed in just that manner, but it was nevertheless true.

So will the Lord continue to use the nations for the accomplishment of his purposes, until the words of his servants the prophets have all been fulfilled, until Zion is established, Judea redeemed, and his will done upon earth, as it is done in heaven.

God bless the Jews in this important work. May the eyes of their understanding be opened, and the time soon come when Shiloh, to whose coming they have so long looked forward, shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, and they recognize in him, Jesus of Nazareth, the Redeemer of the world, whom their fathers rejected. And may we, Latter-day Saints, we people who are of Ephraim, appreciate the part we are playing in this great latter-day drama, the like of which was never played before, and never will be again, is my earnest prayer, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I saw President Ivins turn this book down. He said before he started to speak, he was going to read the last verse of the inspired hymn by Parley P. Pratt that we have heard sung today:

“Lo, Israel filled, with joy
Shall now be gathered home,
Their wealth and means employ
To build Jerusalem;
While Zion shall arise and shine,
And fill the earth with truth divine.”

Another prophecy that was uttered by Parley P. Pratt over three quarters of a century ago is being fulfilled.

ELDER REED SMOOT

I do not believe that there is any other place in all the world where a gathering of people such as we have in this building this morning is possible. Every seat occupied, with thousands standing, and every person present listening for every word that falls from the mouth of the speaker, with every one interested in what may be said, and the prophecies that may be made, every soul having within herself or himself a testimony that God lives and that this is his Church.

THE GREATEST JOY OF LIFE

While President Ivins was speaking this morning I thought to myself how wonderful it would be if every soul that breathes could have heard the speech delivered by him, and how would it be possible for men and women hearing him to doubt that there is a living God, and that the testimonies and prophecies uttered by his servants from the beginning of the world down to the present have been or will be fulfilled. The greatest joy I have in my life is that I know that the servants of God, speaking under the inspiration of his Holy Spirit, utter those things that God wants his people to know, and also give notice to the world that they will surely happen.

WHAT IT MEANS TO LIVE THE GOSPEL

There is no other church on earth with so perfect an organization to look after the welfare of its members, not only spiritually but physically and temporally as well. I haven't the time to point to examples, but in making that statement I feel positive that no one who has studied the organization of the Church, bearing upon these three great activities of life, could do otherwise than testify to the statements I have just made. To live its laws and requirements means spiritual salvation, physical development and temporal advancement. It is well that at these conferences the people are instructed along these lines, for they are part of the whole, and without the whole men cannot enjoy the fulness of life.

THE BURDENS OF DEBT

How often at these conferences have we heard the voice of President Smith ring out, aye, not only as counsel and advice, but as a man clothed with authority to speak, pleading with the people to study and obey the temporal laws given to this Church! How often have we heard him and others pleading with the people to keep out of debt; and, if in debt, that we get out as soon as possible. That advice is not only good to our people and all people, but it is good to all nations and all countries, all states, all counties, all cities, for whoever dreamed a few years ago that the world would be in such a condition financially as it is today? Since the close of war I have exercised all my power to eliminate every unnecessary expense of our government with a view of lightening the burden of taxation upon the institutions of our country and individual taxpayers, and set an example, if you please, for states and for counties, and for cities, and foreign countries, as well, to follow.

So, my brethren and sisters, for the few moments that I have at my command, I want to call briefly to your attention one subject that it seems to me will at least assist those who want assistance to keep out of debt and get out of debt.

IDLENESS CONDEMNED

I remember that in one of the early revelations given to the Prophet Joseph the Lord said:

"Thou shalt not be idle, for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."

May I add that in idleness there is decay and early death, not only in man but in everything in all the universe. Take a piece of machinery, let it be idle, and what will happen? It will be made useless much earlier than if in constant use. And I might proceed and call your attention, my brethren and sisters, to other matters of the mind and the body, but time will not permit. As far as I am concerned I would prefer to work out rather than to rust out, and if I had followed the advice of my doctors just before leaving Washington, I would be up in some of these mountains, not receiving a telegram, or a letter, seeing no people, but resting for four or five months. When he gave me that advice, all I had to say was, "Doctor, I will not do it."

HOW TO REACH HAPPINESS AND CONTENTMENT

It is not altogether the number of years that you live that counts, but the result of your labors that you will be judged by, not only among the children of men, but in the hereafter as well. I want to see the "Mormon" people the most contented and the happiest people in all the world. And let me testify to you today that the way to reach that happy sphere is to live the commandments that God has given us, and obey the same.

MEANING AND NECESSITY OF THRIFT

Thrift is what we need among our own people and among the nations of the world, and when I say thrift I mean it in its broadest sense. In speaking of thrift I mean the kind that makes better men, better women and better children, a thrift that will build a better nation, a better world. Thrift means much more than the mere saving of money, it means prosperity, good husbandry, economical management, frugality; it means individual efficiency; it means order and system; it means self-control, and in many cases self-denial. It means self-confidence; it means character-building in its broadest meaning, morally, temporally and spiritually. The thrift that I want to impress upon you does not mean stinginess nor miserliness, nor does it include extravagance. Thrift and thriving mean the same thing. A thriving child never suggests skimping and saving; a thrifty man is one who thrives on account of his own efforts. Many people have a wrong idea in thinking that thrift is the niggardly cutting down of necessary expenses; they urge that they would rather be spendthrifts than misers.

WASTE THE ENEMY OF THRIFT AND PROGRESS

In this connection remember that waste is the universal enemy of all forms of thrift and progress. What do we get out of smoking? No good whatever. It is a violation of the very principle of thrift, and many people in this country are now indulging in it. I once made a speech at the Utah stake conference, years ago, when I was second counselor to the president of that stake. It was often designated the,

"garbage can speech of Reed Smoot." Now, my brethren and sisters, I want to say to you that into that can, many times at the homes of the people who can least afford it, you will find the waste, aye, the wicked waste of the very necessities of life.

This subject is so broad that I find it is impossible for me to cover it, but I do want to call attention to the fact that in the United States 66 out of every 100 people who die leave no estate; that out of the remaining 24 only nine leave an estate larger than five-thousand dollars. Think of this deplorable condition, that at the age of 65, 97 out of every 100 in America, are partially or wholly dependent on relatives or friends or the public for their daily bread for their clothing, and for a roof under which to sleep.

A STORY OF LINCOLN AS AN ILLUSTRATION

An eastern merchant once wrote Abraham Lincoln, when a young attorney, asking about the responsibility and character of a fellow-townsmen, and Mr. Lincoln answered as follows:

"Dear Sir:—Yours of the 10th received. I am well acquainted with the gentleman named, and know his circumstances. First of all he has a wife and baby. Together they should be worth fifty thousand dollars to any man. Then he has an office in which there will be a table worth about a dollar and a half, and three chairs worth, say, one dollar. Last of all, there is in one corner a rat hole which will bear looking into. Yours respectfully, Abraham Lincoln."

WHERE OUR DANGER LIES

I see my time has expired. I do not know how it is possible for any man or woman to attend one of these conferences and hear the testimonies given under the inspiration of the Spirit of God that we have here, to leave a meeting and say the "Mormons" are dishonest in their belief. I believe all that has been revealed; I believe all that will yet be revealed; and I believe that this people will be instructed and directed under the influence of revelation from Almighty God. The only danger is ourselves. The Father will do his part, and desires that his children will do theirs. May God give us wisdom and judgment to fulfil every requirement made at our hands, that every calling, no matter were it may be, may be fulfilled in a way that even the bitterest enemy that we have may see our works, and forever cease criticism of such a people. God be with us forever. May his work grow and increase in the world for goodness, and in power, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President Grant announced that brief testimonies would be given by a number of the brethren during the remainder of the time.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

President of the Southern States Mission

Brethren and sisters, during the latter part of February and the early part of March, the Southern states mission was honored by a visit from President Heber J. Grant. As the President of the Church stood before those great audiences in Jacksonville, Florida, and Atlanta, Georgia, as a minister and a witness for Jesus Christ, I could feel in my heart that God had opened effectual doors for the President to deliver great messages to those large congregations. We have experienced, through the ministry of the President of the Church, a great spiritual uplift. The poet says:

"Thy swift messengers are treading
Thy high courts where princes dwell;
And thy glorious light is spreading,
Zion prospers; all is well."

There is in this gospel the power to bring the peace of mind that is dearer than all. Not long ago a young lady in the south who had not attained her majority heard the gospel preached by two of the humble servants of the Lord. That message, spoken under the power of the Holy Ghost, went to the heart of this young woman. She appealed to her father for permission to be baptized, but he refused, and said, "The church of your father and your mother will afford you spiritual consolation." Her pleadings were of no avail. Some months afterwards the girl died. There came to the father a great awakening. Someone has said that "the awakening of the conscience is the grandeur of the soul." His conscience began to trouble him; he felt in his heart that he had denied his daughter, the idol of his life, a sacred privilege to which she was entitled. He could have turned in his troubled state of mind to those outwardly magnificent but soul-unsatisfying institutions in which he had bidden her to remain, and said: "Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased? Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow?" But the response would have been, "'Where the tree falleth, there shall it be.' Death fixes a period to man's progress." So he turned in his distress to the standard that God has set up for the Gentiles to seek to, and his rest was glorious. He considered the doctrine of salvation for the dead, and he wrote me, stating the circumstances of his refusal to permit his daughter to be baptized. He said: "I believe in the doctrine of salvation for the dead; I believe that there is in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints the power to apply the grace of this gospel to those who have departed. And," said he, "you will relieve my mind, you will make me happy by having the temple work done for my darling daughter, who departed this life without receiving the gospel, because of my prejudice." And this was done. This man received peace.

My brethren and sisters, it is my testimony that in this Church there is the power and the Priesthood to administer the saving ordinances of the gospel for those who have gone to the spirit world, who have not had the opportunity of receiving the gospel in this life. And this testimony I bear in humility and with gratitude of heart, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HUGH J. CANNON

President of the Liberty Stake of Zion

My brethren and sisters, this call came as a very great surprise, but it is always a pleasure to me to testify of the divinity of this gospel, no matter how much fright results from the call.

When I see before me the thousands of people who share with me the knowledge that the gospel is true, when I contemplate their lives and think what the truth has done for them, I feel as Brother Smoot said, "It is surprising that all the world cannot understand it."

While waiting for this meeting to commence a little experience I had, not very long ago, came to my mind. You know the Church practice of having our families visited by the ward teachers, and I wondered how it is that people of the world have not thought of this simple means of keeping in touch with those whose spiritual welfare they are attempting to direct.

A little while ago the Presidency of the Liberty stake suggested to the bishoprics that they would like to do some visiting among the people and see how this work of ward teaching is being actually carried out. An invitation was extended to me to go out with two young boys in one of our wards. By appointment I met them on a certain street corner, and found them to be about fourteen years of age. The one in charge asked, "What would you like to do?" I replied, "I would like to see how you do your teaching; just go ahead in your usual way." "Well, suppose we go into this house," he said, indicating his father's home, in front of which we were standing, "and have prayers together." We went in and they asked me to pray. From the time we entered that house until the work of teaching was finished for the night, not one word was spoken that did not pertain to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We went into one home, and the boys said to the head of the house who happened to be their bishop, "Are your children all together?" The bishop answered, "They will be, in a moment." We waited until all in the house were present and then we had prayers, after which the boys delivered their message, and in all my experience in the Church I have never seen such good teaching as those two fourteen-year-old boys did. When they got through in the first home, they turned to me and said, "Brother Cannon, haven't you something to say?" And I was obliged to say, "No." If I had opened my mouth to speak I would have broken down and cried, so deep was the impression they made upon my heart.

When we see simple things like this in the Church of Christ, and then compare them with the vain attempts which are made by the people of the world to put over their message, it seems to me that all mankind, if they will give it a moment's thought, must see in this Church the hand of a Divine Ruler, one who inspires his servants to direct and to institute in the Church the things which will make for salvation.

I can testify, and I rejoice in the testimony which I possess, that God does live, and that the men who preside over us, and who have presided over this Church from the beginning, are divinely called and divinely inspired. I rejoice in the testimony which I have of these things, and which I bear to you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HENRY H. BLOOD

President of the North Davis Stake of Zion

One unaccustomed to standing before a congregation of this size cannot fail to be overawed as he occupies, for the first time, this position, and his trust must be placed in the Lord for guidance in the few words of testimony that he would like to bear.

This morning, as I listened to what President Ivins told us, to his reading of predictions that have been made with reference to ancient Israel, and to the complete fulfilment, so far as the fulfilment has at this time been made complete, of all those predictions, my mind went also to the predictions that have been made with reference to modern Israel. I thought of that wonderful prediction made by the Prophet Joseph Smith, in the later years of his life, in which he said that the Latter-day Saints should be led to the Rocky Mountains, and that here in the midst of these valleys they should become a mighty people. It then was a wonderful prediction in itself, because he had never seen in his natural vision these valleys, and yet his prophetic eyes had been opened to understand what the future of this people should be.

Later, when the people were led by the Prophet Brigham Young to these valleys, it is not surprising to me that when his eyes first beheld this spot upon which this tabernacle now is built, this valley in which this splendid city is located, he was able to say, "This is the place."

I have watched within the short period of my own life that fulfilment of another prediction, which tradition says—I do not know that it is written—was made at the time the ward in which I live was first organized, very early in 1850. At that time it is said that President Brigham Young made a statement that the time would come when that section lying between Salt Lake City and Ogden would be so closely populated that it would be difficult to say when you left one settlement or town and entered another. At that time there was not much of a population in that particular district; indeed, there was a section of that country lying between here and Ogden that did not at that time appear to lend itself to population—the Sand Ridge. We considered it to be a place where no one could reside, a place inhabited only by lizards and an occasional jack rabbit, and yet the prophet of the Lord had said that it should become populous. Go there now, my brethren and sisters, traverse the section between this city and Ogden, and witness the literal fulfilment of that prediction which I have heard mentioned all the years of my life. Indeed it had scarcely begun to be fulfilled when I first remember that particular district. Today some of the best and most productive gardens are located along that section of the country between here and Ogden. And a more intensively cultivated section cannot be found in the state of Utah. Literally, it is true that one going from here to Ogden can scarcely tell when he leaves one settlement and enters another. Verily these predictions of modern prophets have been fulfilled, and in their fulfilling there has also been fulfilled that wonderful prediction contained in the 35th chapter of Isaiah, wherein that prophet of old said,

“The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose.”

Men will say, of course, that this has been brought about by the hands of men, and so it has, but God's purposes are always fulfilled by men, by the instrumentality of men whom he raises up to fulfil his purposes. Men have gone out into the mountains, conserved the water supply, poured it upon the parched land, and the land has been made fruitful because of the work of man, but that is literally the way the Lord fulfils the predictions of his prophets.

My testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, is that God is guiding the destinies of this people, that every word that has been spoken with reference to ancient Israel, and with reference to modern Israel, will be fulfilled, and I bear this testimony to you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The hymn, “Let the mountains shout for joy,” was sung by a quartette and the choir.

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Henry N. Mickleson, president of the Lost River stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

At 2 o'clock p. m., April 5, the conference session was opened by President Heber J. Grant, who announced that the choir and congregation would sing, “Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah.”

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Albert H. Belliston, president of the Juab stake of Zion.

The choir sang, “The morning breaks the shadows flee.”

In announcing the singing of this hymn President Heber J. Grant stated that it is the first hymn in the Latter-day Saints' hymn book, and that it is entitled to the place.

H. L. Johnston, Tobar, Nevada, heard the Sunday morning service over radio. He sent a message saying, “Morning service came in fine.

Appreciate opportunity of hearing the word of the Lord." The message was read by President Grant.

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

My brethren and sisters, I am quite sure that this is the largest congregation of Latter-day Saints that I have ever had the privilege of standing before. I think there must be in this building at least nine thousand people, and in addition to that number there is a large audience in the Assembly Hall, and another congregation in the Barratt Hall, and still in addition to that there is a large congregation of people who are "listening in." I said to Brother John M. Knight, as we were leaving the building yesterday, that I sat right behind him on the stand and could hear every word he said. He seemed to be pleased with that information, and as he was able to make me hear him, I trust that I shall be able to make you hear me.

TWO IMPORTANT DOCTRINES

I have been deeply impressed with the sermons of the brethren who have spoken, both yesterday and today. President Grant in the opening address gave the key note to the conference. He explained clearly our belief in Deity; yes our belief in God the Father and in Jesus Christ, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, which is one God, the God of the Bible. He also stressed, with his usual force and precision, two very important doctrines of the gospel—one the Word of Wisdom and the other the law of tithing. In my talk this afternoon, if I can come somewhere within the range of the keynote address, I will not be going very far astray. Another thing, it should be remembered that the doctrines of the gospel may be approached at different angles, which gives a little spice and variety to the discourses of the brethren. This I think is acceptable to the Lord and pleasing to the Latter-day Saints.

GREATER AND LESSER LAWS

How wonderful is the gospel of Jesus Christ. Paul the Apostle describes it as the power of God unto salvation to all those who believe and obey it. But the question naturally arises: "What is this salvation the apostle was referring to? You will find among the writings and sermons of the Prophet Joseph Smith some information upon this very important subject. He said that a man could not be fully saved until he had put all enemies under his feet in this world, and subdued or dominated all evil spirits in the world to come, as it was written of Christ that he should reign until he put all enemies under his feet, the last enemy being death.

Within the scope of the gospel there are very many doctrines or laws. There are some people who presume to determine which are great and which are small. As for instance, you may hear a person say: Well, this doctrine of the gospel is one of the greater doctrines, and this other doctrine, well that is one of the lesser laws. It seems to me it is presumptuous upon the part of any man to determine a matter of that kind. Who can say, except God himself, the author of the gospel, which are the greater and which are the lesser laws, if there be any difference. I have been reflecting somewhat upon the two important doctrines or laws that the President so beautifully and powerfully emphasized in his address. One is the law of health, the other is the law of revenue; or in other words the Word of Wisdom and the law of Tithing.

AS TO THE WORD OF WISDOM

Relative to the Word of Wisdom, brethren and sisters, we are told in the revelation itself, which was given February 27, 1833, that it was given to show forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of his people. That sounds very fine to me. It is wonderful if we can be saved temporally. It is necessary, it is essential, and this was given, it seems, for that very purpose. The Lord then proceeds to tell his people what is hurtful to the body. He knew; he has always known; therefore he advises his people. He tells us that strong drinks are not good for the body, that tobacco is not good for the body, but was intended for all sick cattle, and is to be used with judgment and skill. We are also told that not only strong drinks are not good for the body, but that hot drinks, meaning tea and coffee, are not good for the body.

In giving this great revelation, the Lord has not left his people in the dark. After pointing out some of the things that are exceedingly hurtful to the body, he points out the articles of food that are good for the body, namely all wholesome herbs to be used with prudence and thanksgiving, the flesh of beasts and the fowls of the air, to be used sparingly and not to excess; all grain, the same being ordained for the use of man and of beasts, to be the staff of life. Here is a law that reaches out in opposite directions. It tells us on the one hand what is good for these our mortal bodies, on the other, what is bad for them. It is the law of health. Are the Latter-day Saints observing it? Many are, some are not. Those who fail to keep it cannot plead ignorance, for the law has been in force upon the Church of Christ for ninety-two years, and is often mentioned in the congregations of the Saints. It should not be overlooked, nor forgotten, that this law was given with a promise of great blessings through its observance; for it is written down in the statute that, "all Saints who remember to keep and do these things, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures, and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint. And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass them by as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

ITS SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL CHARACTER

This promise greatly emphasizes also the spiritual character of the law, as well as the temporal, and justifies one in saying that the Word of Wisdom is not only temporal in its nature, but is also spiritual, for surely wisdom and great treasures of knowledge are spiritual. In further evidence of this the Lord said to Joseph Smith in the revelation of the Three Glories, namely:

"For thus saith the Lord—I, the Lord, am merciful and gracious unto those who fear me, and delight to honor those who serve me in righteousness, and in truth to the end.

"Great shall be their reward and eternal shall be their glory. And to them will I reveal all mysteries, yea, all the hidden mysteries of my kingdom from days of old, and for ages to come, will I make known unto them the good pleasure of my will concerning all things pertaining to my kingdom.

"Yea, even the wonders of eternity shall they know and things to come will I show them even the things of many generations.

"And their wisdom shall be great and their understanding reach to heaven; and before them the wisdom of the wise shall perish and the understanding of the prudent shall come to naught.

"For by my Spirit will I enlighten them and by my power will I make known unto them the secrets of my will—yea, even those things which eye has not seen, nor ear heard, nor yet entered into the heart of man."

THE PROMISE IS SURE

Let me say here, in all solemnity, that those who fail to keep this law cannot justly claim the promise.

I fancy I hear some one say: "Ah, Brother Clawson, my father was a good man, a faithful Latter-day Saint. He kept the commandments of God, he was an observer of the Word of Wisdom. At the age of seventy he died, and the destroying angel came and took him away."

My answer to that is: "Brother, would you make the promise of God of non-effect? Would you intimate that the Lord who gave this law and this promise unto its people failed in your father's case to keep his promise? Surely it was not so. True, the angel of death may have been in your father's home when he passed away, in fact, may have come for your father, but he was not a destroying angel, no, he was an angel of peace, of mercy, of hope, of love, and he came to open the door of light and life and everlasting joy to your good father."

Death comes to all. The death of the righteous is sweet but the death of the wicked, of the rebellious, of those who are wilfully neglectful of their duty and treat lightly the sacred commandments of God, is bitter. Oh, Israel, God will not be mocked in these latter days. His house is a house of order. His will is supreme. He gives the law and demands of his children obedience thereto.

CONCERNING THE USE OF TOBACCO

Again referring to those things that are hurtful to the body, I quote from an article by Will H. Brown of Oakland, California, as follows:

"Tobacco A Source of Inefficiency"

"Newspaper dispatches from Washington, D. C. state that the amount spent for tobacco in the United States for 1923, was $3,090,000,000. That is more than $1,000,000 more than was spent for admission to movies and theatres, for imported silks, for candy and sweets, jewelry, face powder, lipsticks, perfumes, imported diamonds and precious stones, all combined.

"The further statement is made that the tobacco bill of the United States for 1923 would pay the entire ordinary operating expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year, according to the new budget estimates. It has been well known for some time that the tobacco bill is far in excess of the total cost and valuation of the entire public school system of America.

"But great as is the cost in money, it is small in comparison with the cost in mental, moral and physical efficiency. The lack of care and thought on the part of many workers in many lines is a matter of common comment. A man who stated he had been a yardmaster for the last thirty-five years, wrote to one of the well known financial writers for the Hearst papers, saying: "There are only a few good men left in all the great railroad terminals."

"The increase in crime and immorality, which is one of the alarming conditions now faced in this country, keeps pace with the increase in the use of tobacco. One prominent judge says he regrets to see a girl smoking, for he considers a cigarette in the mouth of a girl as a brand of the prostitute. Tens of thousands of women and girls are now smoking. We must remember, however, that tobacco is no more demoralizing for one sex than the other."

In face of the fact that tobacco exerts a baneful and demoralizing effect on the body and the mind, there are some members of the Church and even young men and boys, who have acquired the habit and go on using tobacco. It appears to be a matter of deliberate and wilful disregard of God's commandment. And then what shall we say of members of the Church, if there be any, and I fear there are, who not only violate the law of God, but also the law of man, by using bootleg whiskey that in some cases paralyzes the body and blinds the eyes. If the Latter-day Saints will but do their simple duty, they will be living above and beyond the law of prohibition, which is a righteous and most beneficent law.

THE LAW OF REVENUE FOR THE CHURCH

The time is gone. I might say in conclusion that the other great law emphasized was the law of revenue for the Church. No church under the heavens can be fully established and have assurance that it will prosper without revenue, and therefore the churches of the world have planned in various ways to raise revenue to meet their current expenses, and to build up their institutions. In many instances, they have adopted the custom of passing around the plate during their religious services, or in other words taking up a collection. Now the Lord knew very well that, if he established his Church, there must be a way provided for gathering revenue for the Church. In his wisdom he gave to us the law of tithing. It is very simple, it is very beautiful, In reading that law nobody need to go astray or to misunderstand it. It bears down equally upon all, according to their circumstances, and that idea alone is very valuable. For instance, if a man is getting one thousand dollars a month, he pays one tenth, or one hundred dollars, for tithing. If a man is getting five hundred dollars a month, he pays fifty dollars tithing. If he is getting thirty dollars a month, three dollars tithing. If a man is getting ten dollars a month, which is inconceivable, he should pay one dollar in tithing; and, as I have heard the law explained by our late President Joseph F. Smith, if a widow woman gathers ten eggs from her chickens, she should pay one egg for tithing, and will then have nine eggs left to go on with. Doubtless the widow woman will not miss that one egg. Doubtless the man that earns one thousand dollars a month, if he will be honest with the Lord and pay his tithing, will not miss the one hundred dollars. The Lord said to ancient Israel: "Why have you robbed me?" Ancient Israel said to him: "Lord, how have we robbed thee?" And the answer was: "You have robbed me in your tithes and offerings." Now, if we will pay our tithes and offerings, the Lord has said: "I will open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." So there is a blessing and a promise that go with tithing as there is with the Word of Wisdom. The Lord bless you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

The responsibility that rests upon one who occupies this position would be overpowering but for the knowledge that those who stand here do so in obedience to the requirement that has been made by our heavenly Father to convey to the children of men the message of the gospel.

HOW MARVELOUS ARE THE WORKS OF GOD

Many times during the sessions of this conference my eyes have been dimmed by tears, not necessarily because of the thing that was said, but because of the influence that has pervaded this great assembly. While enjoying the remarks of the brethren my mind has dwelt on the opportunities offered in this great and wonderful universe, and I have felt to exclaim: "How marvelous are thy works, O Lord!" You who are here today, if you will examine yourselves, if you will count your many blessings, will say with me, surely no people that have ever lived upon the earth have such occasion to be thankful for the mercies of our heavenly Father extended to them. Each of us a weak instrument, each of us comparatively helpless but for the mercy of the Lord that has been and is extended unto us.

GRATITUDE FOR OUR MANY BLESSINGS

I am reminded of a prophet of old who stated that he was born of goodly parents. How thankful we ought to be for that wonderful blessing. I stand here today as one of the humblest among you, thankful beyond expression for my ancestry, grateful for my wife and my children, appreciative of the opportunity I have of associating with the best men and the best women who live upon the earth. When I realize the former barrenness and sterility of the Western land, and now see this beautiful valley dotted by the homes of the children of our Lord, the meeting houses and temples erected to him, and when I behold these wonderful mountains capped by eternal snow, and realize that our heavenly Father decreed that here his children should have their feet planted, and from here should go forth the word of the Lord, I feel deeply grateful that I have my humble home among this people in the midst of these delightful surroundings with the privilege of entering into the House of the Lord to receive his blessings with my brethren and my sisters.

When I look into your faces I realize that you represent a great group of people who are not here today, many of whom, yes most of whom, are of necessity as grateful as we for the blessings that the Lord has bestowed upon them. I have mentioned, only the physical comfort when I have referred to the surroundings, but the greater and more precious gift of our heavenly Father is the blessing that has come to us to know that he lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith is the prophet of this latter dispensation, and that there is upon this earth at the present time a priesthood endued with power from on high. What would it mean to us if suddenly there were taken from us this knowledge? How would it affect us if we had to part with the authority that God has conferred upon us? It would mean that there had been closed to us the doors of the celestial kingdom. It would mean that the crowning blessing toward which I have been taught to look since I was a child would not be realized. That of the companionship of my loved ones, the association of the father and the mother, and I may say mothers, for in my case I was fortunate to have two mothers, the companionship of many other good men and good women, who are dear to me almost as life itself, could not be enjoyed in the celestial kingdom. I have been taught to look forward to the time when I may have their eternal companionship, and I rejoice and with deep gratitude thank my Father in heaven for that assurance.

GRATEFUL FOR A LIVING TESTIMONY

When I ponder over the condition of the people of this world, the doubt that is in the mind of the human family, I am reminded that it is only a repetition of history. Then people of the earth during past centuries have received the ministry of our heavenly Father, through his divinely-appointed servants, but because of their indifference, and carelessness, because of selfishness and evil, they have forfeited the knowledge that God lives, and they have turned from the worship of the true and living God to worship Baal, and the other false gods, that men have erected under the influence of the adversary of all righteousness. Today, as I think of the men who stand as religious leaders among the people, and observe how helpless they are to inspire faith in the minds and lives of individuals, and realize that in the mercy of the Lord the Latter-day Saints have received, not something that is uncertain, but a living individual testimony that has been born into the lives of each soul who has complied with the simple requirements of our heavenly Father, namely—faith in him, repentance of sin, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, I am profoundly grateful. Without exception, each repentant baptized believer who has complied with these requirements of the Lord has received a witness for himself that this is our Father's work.

THE FAITHLESS CONDITION OF THE WORLD

Observing the faithless condition of the world today I am constrained to read to you from a portion of the record of Mormon as contained in the Book of Mormon, and as inscribed on plates and buried in the Hill Cumorah by Moroni. He says:

"And now, I speak also concerning those who do not believe in Christ.

"Behold, will ye believe in the day of your visitation—behold, when the Lord shall come, yea, even that great day when the earth shall be rolled together as a scroll, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, yea, in that great day when he shall be brought to stand before the Lamb of God—then will ye say that there is no God?

"Then will ye longer deny the Christ, or can ye behold the Lamb of God? Do ye suppose that ye shall dwell with him under a consciousness of your guilt? Do ye suppose that ye could be happy to dwell with that holy Being, when your souls are racked with a consciousness of guilt that ye have ever abused his laws?

"Behold, I say unto you that ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would dwell with the damned souls in hell.

"For behold, when ye shall be brought to see your nakedness before God, and also the glory of God, and the holiness of Jesus Christ, it will kindle a flame of unquenchable fire upon you."

CALL TO REPENTANCE

Brethren and sisters, this is the record that was written by this man hundreds of years ago. As I said, history repeats itself. If there had been time I might have referred to the various dispensations when the Lord has revealed himself. I am now reading from one of the dispensations as recorded in the Book of Mormon:

"O then ye unbelieving, turn ye unto the Lord; cry mightily unto the Father in the name of Jesus, that perhaps ye may be found spotless, pure, fair, and white, having been cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, at that great and last day.

"And again I speak unto you who deny the revelations of God, and say that they are done away, that there are no revelations, nor prophecies, nor gifts, nor healing, nor speaking with tongues, and the interpretation of tongues;

"Behold I say unto you, he that denieth these things knoweth not the gospel of Christ; yea, he has not read the scriptures; if so, he does not understand them.

"For do we not read that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever, and in him there is no variableness neither shadow of changing?

"And now, if ye have imagined up unto yourselves a god who doth vary, and in whom there is a shadow of changing, then have ye imagined up unto yourselves a god who is not a God of miracles.

"But behold, I will show unto you a God of miracles, even the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; and it is that same God who created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are.

"Behold, he created Adam, and by Adam came the fall of man. And because of the fall of man came Jesus Christ, even the Father and the Son; and because of Jesus Christ came the redemption of man.

"And because of the redemption of man, which came by Jesus Christ, they are brought back into the presence of the Lord; yea, this is wherein all men are redeemed, because the death of Christ bringeth to pass the resurrection, which bringeth to pass a redemption from an endless sleep, from which sleep all men shall be awakened by the power of God when the trumpet shall sound; and they shall come forth, both small and great, and all shall stand before his bar, being redeemed and loosed from this eternal band of death, which death is a temporal death.

"And then cometh the judgment of the Holy One upon them; and then cometh the time that he that is filthy shall be filthy still; and he that is righteous shall be righteous still; he that is happy shall be happy still; and he that is unhappy shall be unhappy still.

"And now, O all ye that have imagined up unto yourselves a god who can do no miracles, I would ask of you, have all these things passed, of which I have spoken? Has the end come yet? Behold I say unto you, Nay; and God has not ceased to be a God of miracles.

"Behold, are not the things that God hath wrought marvelous in our eyes? Yea, and who can comprehend the marvelous works of God?

"Who shall say that it was not a miracle that by his word the heaven and the earth should be; and by the power of his word man was created of the dust of the earth; and by the power of his word have miracles been wrought?

"And who shall say that Jesus Christ did not do many mighty miracles? And there were many mighty miracles wrought by the hands of the apostles.

"And if there were miracles wrought then, why has God ceased to be a God of miracles and yet be an unchangable Being? And behold, I say unto you he changeth not; if so he would cease to be God; and he ceaseth not to be God; and is a God of miracles.

"And the reason why he ceaseth to do miracles among the children of men is because that they dwindle in unbelief."

Remember he was preaching the gospel to the unbelievers. I want to repeat the last clause.

"And the reason why he ceaseth to do miracles among the children of men is because that they dwindle in unbelief, and depart from the right way, and know not the God in whom they should trust.

"Behold, I say unto you that whoso believeth in Christ, doubting nothing, whatsoever he shall ask the Father in the name of Christ it shall be granted him; and this promise is unto all, even unto the ends of the earth.

"For behold, thus saith Jesus Christ, the Son of God, unto his disciples who should tarry, yea, and also to all his disciples, in the hearing of the multitude: Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

"And he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned;

"And these signs shall follow them that believe—in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover;

"And whosoever shall believe in my name, doubting nothing, unto him will I confirm all my words, even unto the ends of the earth.

"And now, behold, who can stand against the works of the Lord? Who can deny his sayings? Who will rise up against the almighty power of the Lord? Who will despise the works of the Lord? Who will despise the children of Christ? Behold, all ye who are despisers of the works of the Lord, for ye shall wonder and perish.

"O then despise not, and wonder not, but hearken unto the words of the Lord, and ask the Father in the name of Jesus for what things soever ye shall stand in need. Doubt not, but be believing, and begin as in times of old, and come unto the Lord with all your heart, and work out your own salvation with fear and trembling before him.

"Be wise in the days of your probation; strip yourselves of all uncleanness; ask not that ye may consume it on your lusts, but ask with a firmness unshaken, that ye will yield to no temptation, but that ye will serve the true and living God.

"See that ye are not baptized unworthily; see that ye partake not of the sacrament of Christ unworthily; but see that ye do all things in worthiness, and do it in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God; and if ye do this, and endure to the end, ye will in nowise be cast out.

"Behold, I speak unto you as though I spake from the dead; for I know that ye shall hear my words."

This man was the one who completed the record. This man hid it away, and yet it seems almost as if it were his dying witness unto the children of men. He calls attention to the fact that these words will reach them, and by the power of God they have reached hundreds of thousands, yea millions, of the children of men who dwell upon the earth. He was a prophet of the Lord. He had the authority to speak in the name of the Lord. He did testify without fear of the things that he knew were necessary for the salvation of men. He bore witness of the power that comes to those who possess the holy Priesthood, and in this day in which we live, although hundreds of years have elapsed, his testimony has been brought forth by the gift and power of God, translated and printed and scattered broadcast among the human family, as another witness of the divinity of our Lord and Master.

THE GOSPEL A PANACEA FOR THE ILLS OF MANKIND

My brethren and sisters, I thank my heavenly Father for the blessing that comes to me this day. I am grateful to him for everything that I enjoy. I thank him for your companionship, and for the comfort and satisfaction that I enjoy, as I visit to and fro in the stakes of Zion, and in the missionary field in seeing men and women like yourselves who are anxious to know the will of our heavenly Father, and who in their hearts are saying: "Father in heaven, show me thy will and I will endeavor to keep thy commandments." In the past two months I have traveled more than eleven thousand miles in this wonderful land of America, from the eastern seaboard to the western seaboard. I have borne witness of the divinity of this work, I have found great and good men outside the pale of this, or of any church, who are apparently anxious to know what the end will be as a result of the condition that this world finds itself in. It has been my privilege to explain to some of these my faith in the divine mission of Jesus Christ, my knowledge that our heavenly Father loves his children, as he always has done; the assurance that has burned into my soul, for which I am grateful, that I know that the work of our heavenly Father is upon the earth, that the gospel of Jesus Christ will solve the problem and be a panacea for the ills that afflict mankind. I have borne witness of this, and I have found response in the hearts of some of these our Father's children who do not understand the truth. Again let me express my gratitude for the blessings that I enjoy. My heart is full of thanksgiving for all that has been bestowed upon me and upon you. God grant that we may sustain his name and his Church, that we will uphold the hands of those who preside over us, and by so doing continue to be worthy of that assurance that passeth understanding, that we are indeed the children of God, heirs of salvation in his celestial kingdom, as a result of observing his laws and keeping his commandments, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

A great orator standing before his audience made use of this appeal: "Friends, Romans, countrymen—lend me your ears." I have no thought of attempting an oration on this occasion, or on any occasion, but in a very humble way to speak to you. I am not asking for your attention, but I do crave your hearts, your faith and a silent prayer that the Lord, by his holy Spirit, will lead me to say the things he would have you, my brethren and sisters and friends, to hear. I feel very greatly honored in being called to address this large congregation on the afternoon of the Sunday of our general conference. I also feel a very great responsibility in undertaking to lead in thought those who are present, and others, perhaps hundreds of thousands, who are hearing my words this afternoon as they are broadcasted over the nation.

IN HARMONY WITH THE SPIRIT OF THE CONFERENCE

I want to say that I rejoice exceedingly in the proceedings of this conference thus far, in the spirit of the occasion, in the beautiful music which has been rendered, the testimonies which have been borne, and the instructions which have been imparted. I feel that I am in complete harmony with this spirit, and with all the proceedings of the conference; that I can endorse without reservation the instructions which have been given, and that I can join my brethren with sincere testimony that I do know that this is the work of the Lord, the plan and power of God for man's salvation.

I rejoice exceedingly that I was born of Latter-day Saint parentage, and that my heart has been inclined to love and obey the truth. I sincerely regret my imperfections and follies of life, and trust that my repentance may be genuine and enduring that my sins may be forgiven. I desire to yield obedience unto every requirement of the gospel and to do the will of the Lord in all things and to use my influence with others persuading them to do likewise.

LOVE OF GOD THE FIRST GREAT COMMANDMENT

The ideals held up before us are greater perhaps than those possessed by any other people in the world. The gospel law which has come to us is that by which our Savior lived. It was the living of the gospel that made him what he was, and what he is, the glorified Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. It is our privilege to follow in his footsteps, observing the same high standard of life, yielding obedience unto law and authority, and to become joint heirs with him in all that our Father possesses. It is my constant desire and prayer that I may be able to obey fully that first great commandment—to love the Lord my God with all my heart, with all my soul, and with all my mind; and in order that I may do so, I need to count my blessings often, naming them o'er and o'er, that by so doing I may appreciate more and more the mercy and kindness of my heavenly Father to me. This increases my love for him, and I believe it gives me strength and power better to meet the requirements of the gospel, that are made upon me.

LOVE OF FELLOWMEN THE SECOND GREAT COMMANDMENT

I desire also to observe, as fully as possible, that second great commandment, to love my neighbor as myself, and this is perhaps more difficult. I know that I should so love my fellowmen, that I would be able and willing to suffer for them, and even to die for them if necessary, as Christ has died for me. I ought so to love mankind that I would be willing to go to the ends of the earth in the preaching of this gospel of the kingdom to them. I should so love them that I would be able to meet insult and injury, persecution and even death without having in my soul the spirit of retaliation. If I were observing this second great commandment as I ought to do, I would feel as did the Prophet Stephen when he was being stoned to death, who prayed: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge;" or as did the Savior, while upon the cross, who in his suffering and dying moments, prayed the Father to forgive those who were putting him to death, for, said he, "they know not what they do." Men of the world do not understand the things of the Spirit of God for they are known only by the Spirit of God, which gave them. Some men while thinking that they are doing God service, are working directly against his will and purposes, and some not only persecute but kill those who are trying to serve the Lord and to be messengers of righteousness for him.

THE EXAMPLE OF PAUL

There is the case of Saul of Tarsus. I think that his case should ever be before us—a man of intelligence, educated at the feet of Gamaliel, living among the Saints of his day, and yet he engaged with those who persecuted the Saints, even holding the clothes of those who stoned to death the Prophet Stephen, and yet when the Lord took him in hand and converted him, he became the great Paul the Apostle to the Gentiles, and was ready to endure any kind of persecution or death for the gospel's sake. After this conversion he made the declaration that what he did while persecuting the Saints he did conscientiously, believing that he was doing God service. So, brethren and sisters, we ought to look upon the world of mankind with a great degree of leniency and of charity. We should realize that while they may be zealous in their opposition to the work in which we are engaged and to us as a people, they may be conscientious and, if so, the mercy of God will reach out to them.

IMPRESSED WITH THE GREAT NUMBERS OF THE SAINTS

I have been impressed, in this conference, with the numbers of the Latter-day Saints, and with their faithfulness. This vast congregation, filling the tabernacle to overflowing, represents possibly two percent of the present population of the Church. I estimate that it would take about fifty such tabernacles to hold all of the present membership of the Church. Then, remember that tomorrow will be the ninety-fifth anniversary of the birth of this Church organization. And think of all the faithful men and women who during these ninety-five years have been members of this Church, have lived their lives of faithfulness and have gone beyond, and we will then begin to realize the magnitude of this work and what has been accomplished.

TEMPLE WORK THE PAST YEAR—ITS IMPORTANCE

In the temples of the Church there have been 477,000 baptisms for the dead performed during the past year, and more than half that number of endowments have been administered. When we think of this and realize that with each succeeding year there will be an increasing number of such baptisms, we will begin to realize the growth of the Church, especially if we may properly call those dead persons as members of the Church for whom baptism has been performed.

President Wilford Woodruff, speaking from this stand, upon the importance of this work devolving upon the Latter-day Saints, the redeeming of their dead, said:

"Ninety-nine out of every hundred," yea, said he, "nine hundred ninety-nine out of every thousand of those for whom this work is done vicariously will gladly receive the work." I feel sure the Lord is pleased with what the Saints have done in the way of preaching the gospel in all the world as a witness before the end shall come. If it is possible for us to increase our efforts and our numbers, and do a greater work, of course we are anxious to do it. We should neglect no part of this great responsibility resting upon us, toward the living and the dead, looking to their salvation; for it is the work and purpose of the Eternal Father to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

AN EVIDENCE OF THE FAITH AND DEVOTION OF THE SAINTS

I feel very happy, brethren and sisters, in the gospel of Jesus Christ, in your fellowship, and the association which I have with you and in observing your faithfulness. Just one week ago today, while I was visiting in the Uintah stake of Zion, a count was made of those present, which revealed the fact that twenty-seven percent of the entire population of that stake, were in attendance. We have had higher percentages and lower. Circumstances are not alike in all the stakes, but to me this is an evidence of faithfulness and devotion on the part of the people. We have hundreds and thousands of men in the various stakes of Zion who scrupulously observe to keep the Word of Wisdom, and who are paying their tithes and who are devoting days, months and years of their time, and giving of their ability to carry on this work. Men and women could not be expected to do such things if they did not know of the truth of this work, that it is God's work and not man's. I rejoice in the testimony which my brethren and sisters have of its divinity.

AS TO MATTERS FINANCIAL

I am happy today, brethren and sisters, because the day before the opening of this conference I issued my check in favor of the bishop of my ward for the amount of my tithing in full. Oh, some may say: What does that amount to? It amounts only to a tenth of my interest, but that is more than some do. I would to the Lord that all the members of this Church could say that they have paid their tithing in full, a tenth of their interest and of their earnings. It is only a little thing but it makes me very happy. The day before the opening of this conference I drew my check to redeem a note, the last note that stands against me, and today I am out of debt, a very happy man. I thank God for this. It is not much, is it? I wish all the Latter-day Saints could say as much in truth. In my associations among the people in the stakes I have observed their financial distress, and bondage, and my heart has been made sore and in a sense to bleed because of this. I believe that much of it, brethren and sisters, might have been averted had we given a little more careful thought and consideration, and exercised a little more wisdom before making our investments and speculations. Oh, brethren, if we would go to the Lord in that same earnestness before making these speculations that we do when we find ourselves in trouble, asking him to help us to extricate ourselves, I am sure we would be kept out of much of this difficulty. Brethren, we ought not to invest in anything, nor to engage in any enterprise that we cannot take to the Lord or to our brethren and ask advice and counsel upon, and conscientiously ask God's blessings upon it. Now I admonish my brethren and sisters—for the brethren should take counsel with their wives—that they heed the admonition of the authorities of this Church, keep out of debt. If you are in debt, practice economy, pay your just debts and obligations as soon as you can, and make peace with your fellowmen, with the Lord, and with your own conscience; then you will be happy; also be faithful in meeting your obligations with the Lord and you shall be saved.

May God help and bless all to this end, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

"Then Jesus said to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my work, then are ye my disciples indeed;

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

IN DEFENSE OF THE MISSION OF JESUS CHRIST

We have heard during this conference from a number of the speakers concerning the condition that prevails throughout the world; a condition of unbelief in the mission of Jesus Christ and a division among those who profess to follow him. Some of those who have spoken at this conference have read from the Scriptures wherein the prophets of old refer to the condition which should prevail in the dispensation of the fullness of times. One of the speakers this afternoon read from the Book of Mormon certain prophecies concerning the latter days, which prophecies are very dear to me. In fact, as I read this volume of Scripture I am impressed more and more with its sacredness, with the message which it contains in defense of the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the gospel which has been restored in the dispensation of the fulness of times for the salvation of souls. This record endears itself to me more and more day by day as I see unfolded the fulfillment of prophecies uttered by these prophets who now speak from the dead, and from the dust to the nations of the earth, crying unto them repentance, and calling upon them to believe in Christ.

PROPHECY CONCERNING CONDITIONS THAT WOULD PREVAIL

I am going to read one or two other verses from a prophecy that was uttered several hundred years before the coming of Christ, concerning conditions that would prevail in the world in this our day:

"For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and they which belong to it must needs be stirred up unto repentance, or the devil will grasp them with his everlasting chains, and they be stirred up to anger, and perish;

"For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good.

"And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

"And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them: I am no devil, for there is none—and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance.

"Yea, they are grasped with death, and, hell; and death, and hell, and the devil, and all that have been siezed therewith must stand before the throne of God, and be judged according to their works, from whence they must go into the place prepared for them, even a lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment."

THE MISSION OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

That is the condition we find in the world today, just as Nephi declared it should be; but the mission of the Latter-day Saints is to preach Christ and him crucified. The passage from the 8th chapter of John is a key by which we may know the truth, and by which we may walk in the light and in the understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ, neither faltering, nor turning to the right hand nor to left, but pursuing our steady course in righteousness and in truth, in full knowledge that Christ lives and that he has spoken, that he has revealed the power of the Priesthood, that he has organized his Church, and that there is salvation upon the face of the earth for all who will repent and receive the gospel. We shall know the truth if we will only do his will, and the truth will make us free. There is no virtue in doubt. The man who doubts concerning the principles of the gospel, the revelations of the Lord, the plan of salvation, is unfortunate. There is no reason for it, because as I have said, the key has been given unto us by which the door may be unlocked to knowledge so that men may say: "I know," and all doubt is removed.

CONCERNING DOUBTS AND DOUBTING

I have been very grateful to the Lord for one blessing that I have received that I suppose was born with me, and that is the blessing of faith in the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and in his mission. I do not doubt. I have always accepted fully, and received the inspiration, I believe, through the Spirit of the Lord, that these things are true, and I hope that I may always walk in the light, that I may always possess this spirit and this understanding. I know there are those even among us who are not so fortunate, they do have doubts arise in their minds, they are troubled at times. Many things pertaining to the dispensation in which we live, the revelations of the Lord, are to them mysterious, they cannot square them with other things that they have heard, or perhaps accepted, which are given through the spirit of man. The safe course is to follow the revelations of the Lord. It matters not what men have said, it matters not what they may teach in their own wisdom, if that is in conflict with the revelations of the Lord we need not accept it, for we have, as has been pointed out: "The more sure word of prophecy," by which we need not stumble nor falter nor be in doubt. Occasionally some one arises who feels that it is his duty to inform the world that the old members of the Church are still faithful in the doctrines that were taught by the Prophet Joseph Smith, and by President Brigham Young, but that the rising generation is departing from such things, that the children of these fathers are turning from the teachings of their fathers, as they put it. I am here to testify that this is not true. There may be, of course, and are, those among us who are not faithful, who do turn from the footsteps of their fathers. It has always been so. We may expect that in some cases it will continue, but so far as the Latter-day Saints are concerned, the majority of them will not turn from the faith of their fathers. It is not destined that such should be the case, for when this gospel was restored the Lord declared through his servants who came from the heavens with the message of salvation, that the gospel was restored for the last time, and that it must grow and increase and the knowledge grow and spread until it shall fill the whole earth. That is the destiny of the thing the world calls "Mormonism." So they are wrong in their conclusions when they expect the children to depart from the teachings of their fathers.

Now to return to the question of doubt, and the testimony of the truth: I desire to read to you a few passages upon this point which I consider to be significant and worthy of consideration. These words were uttered in the early years of the organization of the Church:

"As faith, then, is the principle by which the heavenly hosts perform their works, and by which they enjoy all their felicity, we might expect to find it set forth in a revelation from God as the principle upon which his creatures here below must act in order to obtain the felicities enjoyed by the saints in the eternal world."—Lectures on Faith, 7:6.

"And again:

"Let us here observe that a religion that does not require the sacrifice of all things never has power sufficient to produce the faith necessary unto life and salvation; for, from the first existence of man, the faith necessary unto the enjoyment of life and salvation never could be obtained without the sacrifice of all earthly things. It was through this sacrifice, and this only, that God has ordained that men should enjoy eternal life; and it is through the medium of the sacrifice of all earthly things that men do actually know that they are doing the things that are well pleasing in the sight of God. When a man has offered in sacrifice all that he has for the truth's sake, not even withholding his life, and believing before God that he has been called to make this sacrifice because he seeks to do his will, he does know, most assuredly, that God does and will accept his sacrifice and offering, and that he has not sought, nor will he seek, his face in vain. Under these circumstances, then, he can obtain the faith necessary for him to lay hold on eternal life.

"It is in vain for persons to fancy to themselves that they are heirs with those, or can be heirs with them, who have offered their all in sacrifice, and by this means obtained faith in God, and favor with him so as to obtain eternal life, unless they, in like manner, offer unto him the same sacrifice, and through that offering obtain the knowledge that they are accepted of him.

"It was in offering sacrifices that Abel, the first martyr, obtained knowledge that he was accepted of God. And from the days of righteous Abel to the present time, the knowledge that men have that they are accepted in the sight of God is obtained by offering sacrifice. And in the last days, before the Lord comes, he is to gather together his saints who have made covenant with him by sacrifice. (Psalm 1, 3, 4, 5': 'Our God shall come and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.'

"Those, then, who make sacrifice, will have the testimony that their course is pleasing in the sight of God; and those who have this testimony will have faith to lay hold on eternal life, and will be enabled, through faith, to endure unto the end, and receive the crown that is laid up for them that love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I would like to read all of this, but I will only take certain parts of it:

"But those who have not made this sacrifice to God do not know that the course which they pursue is well pleasing in his sight; for whatever may be their belief or their opinion it is a matter of doubt and uncertainty in their mind; and where doubt and uncertainty are, there faith is not, nor can it be. For doubt and faith do not exist in the same person at the same time; so that persons whose minds are under doubts and fears cannot have unshaken confidence; and where unshaken confidence is not, there faith is weak; and where faith is weak the person will not be able to contend against all opposition, tribulations, and afflictions which they will have to encounter in order to be heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ; and they will grow weary in their minds, and the adversary will have power over them and destroy them."—Lectures on Faith, 6:7-12.

MEANING OF SACRIFICE

I believe that to be true, and let me add that in these passages that I have read, the term "Sacrifice" does not mean that we are to inflict punishment upon ourselves. It does not mean that we are to be persecuted, or to deprive ourselves of comforts and blessings; of mortal life, not in the least, but that we are willing to place upon the altar all things, even our lives, for the kingdom of God, and that we will accept in fulness all the principles of the gospel and put them into practice. Sacrifice of the world? Yes, if you want to call it such, and the things of the world, to a concentration of the mind and action upon the things of the kingdom of God, and therefore again I repeat that he who will do the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine. All doubt will be removed from the mind of the faithful believer, and he will stand in perfect light of the gospel of Jesus Christ. He will be able to declare unto all the world: "I know, for God through his holy Spirit has revealed it unto me." That is the privilege of every member of this Church, and where a man doubts the truth then there is evidence, as it has been pointed out, that he has not accepted in his heart the fulness of the gospel, or he has not put it into practice to its fulness, and therefore has not reaped the benefits and blessings which otherwise would be his. We stand firmly for the truth in the face of the conditions now prevailing in the world, and teach mankind, and call upon them to repent of their sins, and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. That all men may repent and accept him as the Redeemer of the world, the Only Begotten Son of God, I pray, for his is the only name given under heaven by which we may be saved. This is my testimony, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

ELDER REED SMOOT'S HEALTH AND LABORS

I rejoice in the very wonderful attendance we have had today in this building, and in the Assembly Hall, and regret that we do not have accommodations for those who have been upon the ground. I have been made happy in the testimonies that have been borne thus far during this conference. I am particularly grateful that Elder Reed Smoot has had the privilege of being with us, and of bearing his testimony to us here today. From the reports that we received of his condition of health I little expected that we would have this privilege. I rejoice in the very remarkable and wonderful mission that he has been performing as a Senator of the United States. He has gained the confidence and the respect of men all over this country. In my trips from the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic I came in contact with many influential men, and in the Southern states I met many men whose training and their politics were in direct opposition to those of Senator Smoot. All these influential men expressed to me their admiration for his devotion to his work as a Senator. I believe that few men have ever made a finer record for themselves in the Senate of the United States than Elder Smoot has done. I rejoice in his accomplishments. I have met influential men from away across the Atlantic who have said to me that they had a poor opinion of our people until they saw the remarkable and splendid work and upright, honest life of one of the apostles. One man said: "If you were not a good people I am sure that Senator Smoot would not permit himself to be associated with you as one of the leaders of your Church." I pray that the blessings of the Lord may be and abide with him, that he may be restored to perfect health and strength, and have the opportunity of continuing his labors for the benefit of the people of this great country that we, as Latter-day Saints, love so well, and believe that the Lord Almighty was at the helm when it gained its freedom, and as the revelations say, that he inspired the Constitution of our beloved country.

The choir sang, "O great is the depths", from Mendelssohn's oratorio, "St. Paul."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Joseph J. Daynes, president of the Grant stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned until Monday, 10 a. m., April 6.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 o'clock a. m., Sunday, April 5, 1925.

Elder Rulon S. Wells, of the First Council of Seventy, presided.

The music was provided by the Highland Park choir, Elder Gerrit DeJong conductor; Edward P. Kimball at the organ.

The choir and congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear."

Prayer was offered by Elder Ernest P. Horsley.

The choir sang an anthem, "The radiant morn."

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

President of the Central States Mission

I am very pleased, my brethren and sisters to be here to attend the conference of the Church. The great number of people that I have witnessed this morning and yesterday on the grounds and in the Tabernacle are an inspiration to me. I feel that I am deeply indebted unto the Lord for the many manifestations of his power and of his goodness unto me in my service in the ministry.

I bring you greetings from the Central States mission, from the missionaries who are there, your sons and your daughters, and from the people who are there. I can testify unto you that there is faith, much faith, to be found among the youth of Zion in the Central States, and that your boys and your girls are working hard for the establishment of the gospel of Christ in the six states comprising the mission.

The Lord said that we should judge a tree by its fruits. I thought yesterday when the President of the Church was talking; what an inspiration it must be to any man, to any woman, regardless of their faith, to be able to hear or to read the great truths he taught; and what an inspiration it was to those who were there to witness the power with which he spoke. My mind was led to the fact that hundreds of cities in this great country of ours spend vast amounts of money to gather crowds together for celebrations; they are called upon to make donations continually in order to bring people into the centers. But here is a great congregation of people gathered together in this center of the intermountain region without one cent of advertising money having been spent. They come here of their own free will and choice, filled with a desire to serve the Lord, to obtain something that they can use to establish their lives in the future. And that has marked the work of the Church from the beginning. There is not any man who can read the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints without being led to conclude that surely there is an overruling power that cements and holds its members and keeps them intact.

I am led to think of one of the details of the work of the Lord that is going on in the homes of faithful Latter-day Saints. Every child, as soon as it is able to lisp a prayer is taught by the mother to pray unto the Lord—to pray for father, for mother, for brothers and sisters, and relatives; for the President of the Church and for the apostles; the presidents of the seventies, the bishopric; the authorities of the Church in the wards and in the stakes; and for the missionaries in the field. This is a part of the life of our boys and girls as they grow from childhood to manhood and womanhood, the father and the mother setting the example. This thing has established faith in the hearts of thousands of Latter-day Saints scattered throughout these intermountain regions, and it has made them the power they are in the hands of the Lord. People everywhere speak of the devotion of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to the cause that they represent in the earth. It is a common conclusion among the people in the world where our elders go that if a man desires to attack a missionary he'd better know where he stands before he does it, for they know that the missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are prepared to defend the Church, that they have a knowledge of the scripture that the Lord has provided for them. It is said that they go to the schools and colleges of our Church in order to prepare. The people do not really know the fact—that that preparation is begun in the great majority of cases with the mother and father at home, that the young people usually have not had much practice in public speaking or conversing upon the principles of the gospel—perhaps have not taken much part in Church activities, yet faith has been implanted in their souls from the beginning, and only needs to be kindled and it is aflame and they are found ably defending the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. They go forth testifying unto the children of men that the Lord lives, that he has revealed himself anew in this dispensation, that he did speak to Joseph Smith, the prophet, that he did authorize him to organize the Church in these last days, and that his Church has been established in the earth to last forever, nevermore to be thrown down nor given to another people. And the people of the world have learned to conclude that the missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ, as well as those at home, are earnest in their endeavors and that it is a marvelous work and a wonder that the Lord is performing with his people, a small handful compared to the countless numbers that inhabit the earth.

It is a marvel how quickly our boys and girls respond to the call that is made of them and how soon they are able to defend the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the ministry. A few days ago I had the privilege of holding a conference in Independence, Missouri, the place which some day will be the great center from which the Church will be governed and controlled. It is a holy place, made holy by those great predictions, blessings, and appointments that the Lord made in the beginning of this dispensation. One of the missionaries at that conference said that he had been a little disturbed as to how he was going to meet a question that he knew would be put to him during a certain appointment, but that he had been on the street going to his work only a few moments when the answer came to him and he was able to defend the Church in such a way that his opponent was led to listen and in a measure accept his explanation of the gospel.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation. It is the plan by which the children of men come unto God, and there is no other. It is the most perfect way of living. The greatest blessing and joy and peace that can come to men and to women is to know the truth and to obey it, and to be filled with the power of God and see his power made manifest in the hearts of those who bear his name and who are worthy and faithful enough to declare it. It has been a joy, a privilege, the greatest thing that ever came into my life, to be associated with the missionaries of this Church in the different parts of the country. There is no place on the earth where there is a better feeling than among the men and women who consecrate their time to the preaching of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. They are sweet, they are beautiful, their influence is heavenly, and the power of the adversary cannot stand in the presence of the Priesthood and power of the Redeemer, that he has given unto his Church in these last days.

I testify unto you that the Lord lives, and that he has revealed this gospel in these last days; that his Priesthood, his power, his authority to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances of it are vested in this Church and are not vested in any other church. I have failed to find any one in all my years of experience in the mission field who has been able to disprove any principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ that the Lord gave to Joseph the prophet. Every attempt to prove them wrong has merely verified their truthfulness and has made the truth of God stronger in the earth.

It is glorious to be here; it is wonderful to live; to be engaged in the work of the conservation of the souls of men in these the last days is a privilege that surpasseth all other experience or understanding. God has been good to me and to those with whom I have had the pleasure of associating in the ministry. They have been noble, wonderful, great characters, and they are in the Church today, the majority of them standing in the testimony of Jesus and for the power of God in the earth, the result of their birth in these the last days and of the faith that their fathers and the mothers have planted within them.

May God strengthen us, give us power more nearly to keep his commandments, I ask in the name of Christ our Lord. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES H. HART

Of the First Council of Seventy

On the day of Pentecost the people were assembled at one place with one accord and witnessed some marvelous manifestations of the power of the Holy Ghost. They heard, as it were, from heaven a rushing, mighty wind—a little different sort of a rushing, mighty wind from that which the people of Illinois and Indiana heard last month. After they had witnessed the outpourings of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost, and Peter, the chief apostle, had given instructions in the prophecies of Joel and David, the multitude were pricked in their hearts and exclaimed, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"—meaning, as the Apostle Peter evidently understood it, What shall we do to be saved? They could have answered that question better if they had been able to answer another question which the Master asked of the Pharisees, when they were together in the multitude. He asked the question saying, "What think ye of Christ? Whose son is he?"—a question, by the way, that was answered very clearly and emphatically yesterday by President Grant, by Brother B. H. Roberts, and others of the speakers. The M. I. A. this year will have as their slogan, "We stand for an individual testimony of the divinity of Jesus Christ." The M. I. A. can find in the conference proceedings of yesterday much rich material in support of the proposition which they desire to establish in the minds of the one hundred thousand members of the M. I. A. during the coming year.

A similar question to that asked by the Master might be propounded in this day, "What think ye of Joseph Smith? Whose prophet was he?" and that question was well answered yesterday, and further testimony will be given today.

But to return to the question at Pentecost, asked by the multitude under the influence of the Holy Ghost, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" It may not be necessary to give to an audience such as this the formula for spiritual salvation. Peter gave some of the essentials at that time when he said, "Repent ye, and be baptized, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And to indicate that it was not a temporary promise or requirement, he added, "For the promise is unto you and to your children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord, our God, shall call." I say you are well acquainted with the formula, if I may use that expression, for spiritual salvation; but may we not anxiously inquire day by day as we return to our homes and are confronted by the practical problems of every-day life, may we not also in anxiety exclaim and do it prayerfully, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Women and sisters, what shall we do? What shall we do to be saved—saved financially, preserved in health, and to correctly solve all the other problems that are so vital to us?

And do you not think this is a part of salvation? The Lord, in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, indicated that salvation was not confined to things that we generally understand to be purely spiritual. He gave a very broad meaning to the term spiritual. Listen to the 34th and 35th verses of the 29th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"Wherefore, verily I say unto you that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal; neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam, your father, whom I created.

"Behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him, for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual."

And some of the philosophers have reached that conclusion; the late Elbert Hubbard put his conviction to the same effect in the form of a question when he said, "If we continue to progress, must there not come a time when we shall cease to differentiate and call some things sacred and some things secular?" And, of course, his question, put in that form, really answers itself in the affirmative, and it is but in confirmation of the information received of the Lord by the Prophet Joseph Smith. And so when we return to our homes, exalted, refreshed, rested, ready to take up the battle of life again,—we shall encounter practical problems. The duty upon the head of the household will be to safeguard the health of members of his family. Various members of the family may be in need of his help—young men going to school, the younger ones passing through the danger period of life, and the still younger ones whose footsteps need to be protected. And he may well exclaim, not only for his children but for himself and wife, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

I saw a poor old man, who appeared, at least, to be very old and decrepit, crippled with rheumatism, agonized, but only 63 years of age. What was the trouble? In a short time he opened his mouth, and I discovered that he had a mouth full of pyorrhea-covered pus-bearing teeth, draining their poisonous cocci into his system every day that he lived; various kinds of germs breeding there and being poured into his body;—and so he was all crippled up. I said, "Why don't you have your teeth taken care of, and get rid of the rheumatism?" His tonsils also were diseased, adding to the supply of germs his body had to deal with. He said, "I cannot afford it." If that were true, it was time for some community assistance, a community dentist or doctor, or for some one to be called upon a mission, if necessary, in order to take care of his case. He was helping to raise the death-rate reported yesterday which we may well be proud of, 7.3 per thousand. We hope that every God-fearing Latter-day Saint may be proud of those figures; but in that connection, we must always keep in mind the credit due to the entire body and due to us as individuals. Let us not go to our homes all puffed up with the thought that we are wonderful and great individually, simply because the people that we are a part of are entitled to great praise because of a birth rate of 33, a death rate of 7.3, and a divorce rate of 15. Let us keep in mind always the distinction which the Lord gave through the prophet Joseph when he declared that he was well pleased with the people speaking of them collectively and not individually. Because good things may be said of this people collectively, let us not take them unto ourselves as a sweet unction to our souls, if we, as individuals, are entitled to none of the credit for these desirable qualities in the Church, because we are working against them.

Again there are financial problems. The father and mother will sit down and try to plan whereby they can meet their just obligations, taking care of their children, paying their just debts, and being careful not to contract obligations they cannot pay. I do not have much patience with the Latter-day Saints who unnecessarily go into voluntary bankruptcy simply because the government of the United States has provided the means whereby a man, under certain circumstances, may protect himself. Let us not unnecessarily take advantage of that to wipe out our debts. What would you think of President Grant if, during the time of financial adversity to him many years ago, he had taken the bankruptcy act and wiped out his indebtedness? What would the people think of Abraham Lincoln if he had not insisted on paying every dollar of his indebtedness? We are called an honest people, a great people, and each one, who shares in the glory which comes to the Church he belongs to, should be very careful to contribute his share and not to do anything to bring down that general average. In addition to these health problems and financial problems there will be wisdom to be used not to unwisely educate, not to send the boy or girl to school at the time when the father and mother are suffering for the want of a little medical attention, for an education that he is not prepared to stand, nor to send him abroad to be educated under an infidel, an agnostic or unbeliever, only to have him lose the faith, when the father and mother have been at home drudging, perhaps, working their finger-nails off almost, to keep those same dear children under that instruction which will be pernicious for them. The problem will be to give our children education as fast as they are able to stand it, but not faster than their moral training will allow.

And so, in these and hundreds of other problems which will concern the parents in their buying and selling, in their sowing and in their reaping, in their safeguarding of their family, in educating of them, and in training them to serve others,—the greatest service that they can engage in—they may well exclaim every day, “Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved—this day and this week and this year?”

And may the Lord help us to solve all problems aright in each one of our households, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A solo, the Ninety-first psalm, “He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty,” was sung by Mrs. Irene Southwell Cummings.

ELDER JOSEPH QUINNEY, JR.

President of the Canadian Mission

This is one of the privileges that I thoroughly appreciate—being called upon to say a few words during this great conference of the Church. I am thankful beyond my power to express for the blessing that has come to me in being called into the ministry—to be upon the firing line of truth, explaining to the best of my ability the plan of life and salvation as taught and practiced by Jesus Christ, the Lord. I am coming to feel more and more the great power of this Church, perhaps it is because my entire life, together with the lives of my companions, is devoted to the very highest and deepest things in life, and these things were only found where truth, spoken or lived, is the dominating power in God's revealed plan of life. The last two years of my life have been the finest years, I believe, that I have ever spent. I think I appreciate more fully the richness of the gospel, what it means, and the relationship it bears to human life. It has been my privilege to witness many manifestations of God's great power through his servants as they have proclaimed and administered the ordinances of the the gospel to those in a foreign land. These young men and women are measuring up to the responsibilities resting upon them; they are choice in spirit and are enjoying the richness of God's holy Spirit, and I want to say to you, especially those of you who have sons and daughters in the mission field, that you can feel justly proud of them because of the disposition and attitude they assume in responding to the responsibilities that are resting upon them as messengers of life and salvation to the country of the north. I said that I was grateful for the privilege of being a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and those who labor with me feel just the same way, and there is nothing that we would not be willing to sacrifice in order to establish this Church or gospel in the hearts of the children of men. It is God's saving truth.

The world today, or that part of the world in which I have been called to labor, comprises some of the finest people that it has been my privilege to come in contact with. The laws of the country are observed; they are good laws, and generally speaking, people have respect for them and those who disobey the law are conscious always of the result. The people in the vicinity of our headquarters are especially good people. They are, as a rule, honest in their dealings, sincere in their convictions, as far as they are able to understand the great gospel plan as it was given by Jesus Christ when he was upon the earth. Many of them seem to be self-satisfied with what they have along these lines. Notwithstanding this fact, however, we are coming in contact daily with people who are not at all in sympathy with the gospel as it has been restored through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The reason for this, or one of the reasons, is because of prejudice and their not understanding our message. Many are pregnant with the thought that Jesus Christ was just a man—not an ordinary man, however, but one of those great men that came into the world and through his teachings and life left a great code of moral teachings. They do not look upon him as the Redeemer of the world and do not credit his literal resurrection. This thought is growing among a certain class of people throughout the world, and they are placing man's wisdom above that which is supposed to be inspired by God through his servants, the prophets. They seem to segregate themselves from that simple, vital faith that is so prevalent among good Latter-day Saints, or at least I hope is prevalent, because I have come to feel that this simple, yet powerful, faith is the only thing that will bring real joy and happiness into our hearts. Indeed, I think the greatest thing that can take possession of the mind and soul is the thought of God, for when we think of God we think of the most holy and divine personal Being of which we can conceive, and having faith in that kind of a Being, it seems to me causes us to understand more perfectly the relationship that obtains between us and him. You can rest assured that this vital, genuine faith is one of the great things that our missionaries begin to learn as they prosecute this great and mighty work in the world.

We heard yesterday that signs were to follow those who believed. I am here to testify to you today that through this simple and abiding faith that comes through humility and prayer the gifts of the gospel of Jesus Christ are apparent. They are distributed among our young men and women who are called from day to day to officiate in the ordinances of the restored gospel; and they witness through their faith, the healing of the sick, making the blind to see, and many other manifestations that bring a perfect response to the idea that God lives, and that through the operation of his Spirit, those who are believing and receiving these blessings are coming into the Church.

I rejoice in this, my brethren and sisters, for the reason that it is building my faith, adding additional testimony to that which I already have, and as I see this testimony growing and developing I praise God, my eternal Father. I am convinced that God lives, that he hears and answers prayers, and that our young men and women, through their diligence, are conveying, with conviction unmistakable, the gospel message to the hearts of those with whom they are privileged to come in contact. You will remember reading the words of Jesus Christ just prior to his crucifixion. He had been giving his disciples instructions, and telling them what would befall them for preaching his name and bearing witness of him as Christ, after which he withdrew himself and engaged in secret prayer, imploring his Father in heaven to keep firm the testimony that his disciples had obtained. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." This eternal life is predicated upon the knowledge we must obtain from God and his beloved Son, and in order to know God, we must have that simple, vital faith in him, and this faith comes to every individual through prayer, humility, and determination to understand the mighty message of the gospel. I am convinced that one of the best things for us as parents to do is to teach our children the necessity of prayer, so that they can cultivate a faith that is inborn within them, and with this faith know Jesus Christ, and God, the eternal Father. I do not know of anything better than for a father and mother to call their family to their knees morning and night and thank God for the preservation of life, for the opportunity that has come to them in this day and time in learning more of the great gospel plan; and the more we know of this gospel plan the more we understand life itself. And understanding life, we become acquainted with God, our eternal Father, and his great creation. Aside from family prayer, I think we should advocate more strongly the necessity of communicating with God when we are alone, and convey to him with a perfect confidence the things that are in our hearts, making him feel and know our gratitude for the blessings of life and the opportunities that have come to us in knowing more about these precious truths. It is during moments of this kind, the solemn hours of life, if you please, where we are permitted to gather up all life and place it in the unit of spiritual power, and with that power grow strong in faith and have constantly the light of God's Spirit with us. And so, my brethren and sisters, let us pray alone to God, take him into our confidence, ask him for his protecting care, to give us light and power, to enable us to understand more perfectly the great truths that have been revealed for the perpetuation of his glorious work.

I desire to bear to you my humble testimony that I know that God lives. Indeed, I know as I know that I breathe the breath of life, that he does answer prayers, and the blessings in signs are following those who have faith in him. The prayer of faith is healing the sick, and they stand as great manifestations and as witnesses to the divinity of this great work. I have been near death's door more than once, and I sometimes marvel how it is that he has preserved my life. I am thankful beyond measure for the privilege that has come to me to bear this testimony in the presence of this great throng of people, and with the help of my heavenly Father I desire, with all the power I have, to continue to bear witness of God's mercy to me and the great testimony I have of the divinity of this great and mighty work. The gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, as it has been restored in this day and time. God bless every one of us, that we may appreciate to the fullest, what we have in this glorious gospel of our Lord and Master, that we might be found worthy of all his blessings. I ask this in his name. Amen.

ELDER JOHN WELLS

Of the Presiding Bishopric

It is a pleasure and a privilege to attend the conference gatherings of the Latter-day Saints, and at every gathering of this character we receive inspiration and encouragement. We get a deeper sympathy with the world and all its problems. It is a great privilege to be a Latter-day Saint. One of the old prophets said that in the latter days there would be a great distinction. Men and women would say they were "born in Zion," and happy are those to whom this blessing has come.

Yesterday, when I heard the statement made by President Grant, showing the progress of this Church, the receipts and disbursements of its funds, converts to the gospel at home and abroad, the number of children baptized into the Church, etc., I thought to myself "What hath God wrought!" Then my thoughts went back to the first prayer of the Prophet Joseph Smith, when he went into a wooded enclosure to inquire of the Lord as to which Church he should join, his family having already become affiliated with some of the sects whose members were proselyting in that neighborhood. I have walked up the little roadway leading from the farm-house, and have tried to visualize and picture the feelings of that boy as he went into that small enclosure to pray. And from that momentous event I again said to myself: "What hath God wrought!"

The time had come when our Father and his Son Jesus Christ should again manifest themselves unto mankind, and the boy prophet became a new witness for God and was able to testify that God lives, that he saw him, that he heard his voice and that he was directed by his Son as to what his future conduct should be.

When we think of the tremendous work the boy prophet did in the few short years of his life, we must conclude that it was no easy task. He reestablished the gospel of Jesus Christ. By the power and gift of God he translated and brought forth the Book of Mormon. Under the direction of the Lord a gathering place was established around Kirtland, and a few devoted men and women erected their house to the Lord—a house which is still holy to the Latter-day Saints.

I wonder if many of us have tried to visualize what it meant to those few people in the way of sacrifice to erect that house and how the Lord blessed them for their efforts. However, there was no rest in Kirtland. Persecution became so severe that the prophet and the leading brethren moved to the land of Zion, the Lord having revealed that this should be the gathering place of the Latter-day Saints. There they met the inevitable conflict between the North and the South and suffered the consequence, being compelled to move from Missouri to Nauvoo, where they settled and developed a community, building a magnificent temple. Here the prophet received more doctrine and principles of government from the Lord, and the city of Nauvoo grew so rapidly that it bade fair to rival Chicago.

But the great conflict between the force of evil and the work of the Lord again developed. The Latter-day Saints were burdened, murdered and compelled to leave their wonderful city and its marvelous temple, and journey yet further westward across the wastes of Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming.

I have often thought of what a weeding-out process this great movement proved to be, for if there were any weak-kneed people, if there were any whose hearts were not filled with a testimony, they could not help but be thinned from the ranks of the Latter-day Saints. Many followed former leaders of the Church and strayed away into various groups. These have gone into oblivion; however, many held on to the gospel with what we might call a "bull-dog grip," coming to these valleys under the masterful leadership of the Prophet Brigham Young. Here they occupied these valleys of the mountains and established a new and higher civilization, based upon the gospel of Jesus Christ. The world has seen many civilizations rise and fall, most of which have been founded upon the lust for power, wealth and dominion over others. We have noticed this in the old civilization of Europe. Such was the condition in other parts of the world, whereas the Constitution of our great country was established by men who were inspired of the Lord, and this land of America was redeemed by the shedding of blood; and upon this continent, this land of Zion, there is being established a better and a higher type of civilization, based upon human liberty and freedom.

In these valleys the Latter-day Saints are building a higher type of civilization, under the guidance and direction of the prophets of old, and in obedience to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The civilization of the Latter-day Saints is based upon the statement made by our Lord and Master to the man who inquired what he should do to inherit eternal life. Our Master said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." Among the Latter-day Saints there is a spirit of mutual helpfulness, sympathy, brotherly love and kindness, a desire to cooperate in all temporal movements. There is also the spirit of homemaking and the love of home and its surroundings; and the people have a desire to own the home in which they live or the land from which they derive their living.

I don't believe in the idea that we should be completely and entirely satisfied with the progress we are making. Neither do I believe in being dissatisfied. All ambitious persons and those who are trying for higher ideals should be unsatisfied with their present condition, for this alone can bring about efforts to reach greater heights.

In the 7th chapter of the gospel of Matthew, there is recorded some wonderful statements made by Jesus Christ. He warned his disciples to

"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

"Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

"Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

"A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

"Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

We Latter-day Saints are willing to accept this standard. With all the weaknesses and frailties of human nature, both inherited and acquired, we are willing to be judged by this standard.

A few years ago an eminent man from the East called at the Presiding Bishop's office. He was interested in the great charity movement that has been developed in the United States. He said to me: "I hear you have a very low death rate." I answered that this was so. He asked if he might see the details of the death report for the last ten years and it was handed to him. He then asked permission to examine it alone, and upon being told that he might do so, he studied the large sheets giving numerous details of the causes of deaths. After a time he said: "I am through. I am astounded at the lack of causes of deaths from sex diseases. I notice very few, if any, deaths from alcoholism;" and he then commented on a number of other causes of death, and finally said: "Deaths are the results of the general habits and conduct of life." He drew his conclusions from figures.

While there is room for improvement among our people, we have reason to be proud of the results that are being brought about through obedience to the gospel. The birth rate among the Latter-day Saints is 7.3 to the thousand. Then, the child born to the average Latter-day Saint home is welcome. This is indicated by the fact that out of each thousand children in the United States, 76 die before they have reached one year of age. Among the Latter-day Saints, out of each thousand children born, only 41 die before they become one year of age.

My brethren and sisters, let us go home not satisfied, but determined to do better than we have in the past to make our home life sweet, to gather our families around us and keep them fond of home. Let us develop a love of our fellow men, sympathy with their misfortunes. Let us teach our children to observe the law of tithing, to observe the Lord's day and keep it holy and reserve that day for worship and rest, as the Lord desires. These are fundamental duties of the Latter-day Saints.

May his blessings be with us in every honest endeavor to maintain the high standard of Latter-day Saints is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang the anthem: "Ye shall dwell in the land."

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

President of the Northern States Mission

I am very grateful, my brethren and sisters, to have the opportunity of being with you in the conference meetings.

I am sure that we all recognize the fact that the teachings of the prophet Joseph Smith have modified the religious views of the world. It is interesting to meet people and see how they have changed their views in regard to the gospel of Jesus Christ. Sometimes our missionaries, as they go from door to door and find so little encouragement go back to their rooms with a thought that perhaps they are not accomplishing just as much as they could accomplish. I tell the missionaries that every time they are able to teach one truth to some one who has not understood that truth before, they have helped to advance the religious thought of the day, and that from this little seed of truth that the people have received they are able to understand another truth. By this means will the gospel of Jesus Christ fill the whole earth, and men shall worship God and honor Jesus Christ, the Son of God, because of the teachings that have been given to Joseph Smith from our Father. There is one thought, however, that people do not seem to be able to grasp, and that is that there is a straight and narrow way to get back into the kingdom of God. They seem to have the idea that by some inexplicable method they will be brought back into his presence, and that irrespective of the things that they have done upon the earth, he will forgive them and finally place them in the celestial kingdom. I hope that we, as Latter-day Saints, are not trying to deceive ourselves in regard to this thing. Men and women will only get the reward that they earn upon the earth, and with all the mercy that God will extend to them there still remains the attribute of justice, and men and women will pay the price of things that they do upon the earth if they are to receive the reward that God would have them receive in his kingdom.

We have in the world a number of splendid Latter-day Saints who are laboring in the cause of Jesus Christ, men and women who are trying to see and understand the value of it and to have it take root in their hearts and give forth fruits that will count in the kingdom of God. Just a short time ago I received at the office a small box. I wondered what was in the box, and in opening it I was very much surprised to find that it contained a few dozen eggs, and inside of the box was a letter from an old man and woman something like eighty years of age living on a rented farm, hardly getting enough to hold things together and perhaps at times going without the food that they might desire. The letter in the box said, "President Taylor, we have no money: we can hardly get along, but we do have a few things on the farm, and we are sending in these few dozen of eggs that we may pay our fast offering to the Lord's poor." I like men and women who have faith to do something and to make the sacrifice necessary to be made to gain salvation.

A while ago I received through the office a letter containing just one or two dollars, and in the envelope was a little statement from a widow down in one of our towns, with a family to support, and she said, "Brother Taylor, this is my tithing—not all that I would like to send, because we are hard up, but I am sure that God will open the way whereby I can pay my honest tithing to him, because I need his blessings. And," said she, "if the worst comes to the worst, I have a guitar here in the home that we have had in the family for a number of years, and it is dear and precious because of the memories of the father and mother and the family, but before the year is closed, if it is necessary we will take the instrument out and sell it and use the money to pay our tithing to the Lord, that he may bless us with the blessings which we as a family so much need."

That is the kind of faith, the kind of people who count most with the Lord, men and women who sacrifice and do things because of their faith in the commandments of the Lord.

My brethren and my sisters, let us not think that just because we are members of this Church it is not necessary to remember to be honest, generous, and sympathetic, and kind; because by these fruits ye are known, not only by men on the earth but by God in the heavens above. And may the Lord bless us and help us and be with us, in our daily lives, that we may be worthy of God's blessings and mercy, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

Of the First Council of Seventy

One of the most delightful things that characterize our general conferences, to my mind, is the presence of our mission presidents. It is always a delight to me when a breeze comes in from the mission field. It bears with it the spirit of testimony, and I delight to hear these presidents as they are called upon from time to time to address the congregations. There are, however, many missions that are of necessity not represented at our general conferences—those beyond the sea, in foreign lands. What a delightful thing it would be if there could come a message from all of these various missions! Who knows but that the time may yet come, through the wonderful modern inventions—through the use of airplanes and otherwise—that they may be brought from those distant lands and have their voices heard in the general assembly of the Church at each conference time?

During the last few weeks it has been my lot to be very much engaged in matters pertaining to the Latter-day Saints that have gathered up to the land of Zion from those lands beyond the sea, where foreign languages are spoken. Efforts are being made to bring them more closely in contact with the general authorities of the Church than ever have been made before. The gospel message has been carried unto them all in fulfilment of that vision that came to the beloved disciple, who saw "another angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to proclaim unto them that dwell upon the earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, and crying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come."

In fulfilment of that great prophecy the messenger came from the realms above; the gospel has been, and is now being proclaimed in many languages and to many people. The honest in heart are being gathered into the fold of Christ, and many of them have come up to the land of Zion to cast their lots and identify their interests among the people of God. Having come here, sometimes I think they have been greatly neglected, through a failure on our part to provide adequate means whereby they could realize the blessings which they hoped for when they left their native lands. They have come up here that they might be taught in the ways of the Lord, that they might learn to walk in his paths; and yet, on account of the, to them, strange language spoken in the country of their adoption, they were unable to understand; and, of course, it became necessary to provide these people with organizations whereby they could hold meetings and hear the gospel and the teachings of it in their own native tongues, long before they would be able to acquire a knowledge of this English language.

In order that they might have increased facilities for the holding of meetings, where they could be taught the principles of the gospel and be brought in closer contract with the presiding authorities of the Church and under its more immediate supervision, the First Presidency appointed a Committee of which Elder John A. Widtsoe of the Council of the Twelve is the chairman, to look into all matters pertaining to our foreign language Saints and to have a general supervision over all such gatherings in cooperation, of course, with the regular stake and ward authorities. In pursuance of this purpose the foreign Latter-day Saints, residing in the six stakes of Salt Lake city and vicinity, have recently been reorganized and consolidated into one separate organization for each separate language and nationality. That is, one for the Danes, one for the Swedes, one for the Norwegians, and one for the Scandinavians (comprising the above three); also one for the Swiss and Germans and one for the Dutch, making six organizations altogether.

In the opening remarks of President Heber J. Grant we learned that nearly 1,800 people were baptized in the Swiss and German mission during the year 1924 (and many will doubtless find their way to Zion in due time) and that favorable progress is also being made in the other missions. It is therefore highly important that adequate provision shall be made to look after the welfare and promote the interests of these foreign language Saints, handicapped as they are by reason of the prevailing language which they are only able to understand after many years of patient study and practice. And in further consideration for these people, the Church has been and is now publishing foreign language papers, the supervision and management of which have also been given to this committee. We who speak our own mother tongue, the English language, the language of America, can hardly appreciate what it means to these foreigners when they are suddenly plunged into a new country, the customs, manners and language of which are to them unknown.

Through the medium of these foreign language meetings and newspapers the Church is endeavoring to render a service of great value, a blessing and a comfort to our foreign Latter-day Saints: By instructing them in the principles of the gospel; in teaching them their duties in the Church; in assisting and encouraging them to affiliate with the regular organizations of the Church; in teaching them loyalty to their adopted country, and how to become real American citizens; in giving news from their native lands and the missions in which they were converted to the truth; in giving news from their friends and kindred both at home and abroad, and also in inspiring them with patriotic love for their adopted country and loyal devotion to the great cause of truth for which they have left their native lands.

There is very much yet to be done in this direction. Not nearly enough has been yet translated into their languages. Of course, the standard works of the Church are published in those foreign tongues, but think of the vast amount of literature that has been written by such men as Elders B. H. Roberts, James E. Talmage and others of our splendid writers, that ought also to be translated and published in those languages.

Thus it will be apparent that the presiding authorities of the Church desire to make adequate provisions for these, our brethren and sisters, who like ourselves are of the House of Israel and have been converted through the labors of our missionaries, and our hearts should go out in love and sympathy for them and in appreciation of the peculiar difficulties which they have to overcome by reason of their foreign tongue. And they should be made to feel that they "are no more strangers and foreigners but fellow citizens with the Saints and of the household of God."

May the Lord help us to appreciate these things and to do our part in helping them feel in very deed that they are our brethren and sisters engaged in a common cause, in the upbuilding of the Church and kingdom of God. I pray that we may all do so, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

The benediction was pronounced by Elder Arthur F. Barnes.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING

A second overflow meeting of the conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 2 p. m., Sunday, April 5, 1925.

Elder David A. Smith of the Presiding Bishopric presided.

Music was furnished by the Highland Park choir, conducted by Elder Gerrit DeJong; organist, Tracy Y. Cannon.

The choir and congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

The opening prayer was offered by Patriarch Milando Pratt.

The choir sang the anthem, "Gloria," by Mozart.

ELDER BRIGHAM S. YOUNG

President of the Northwestern States Mission

My dear brethren and sisters, these occasions are very memorable in the life of a missionary, because he rarely has the opportunity of addressing so large a gathering as the present one. The work in the northwest is progressing. Our baptisms, I am happy to state, are gradually increasing, the spirit among the Saints is better at present than it has been in the past. We are making very strenuous endeavors to erect churches where we lack them in the various places where we have organized branches, for frequently we have only a Sunday School in some places, while in others we have branches with completely equipped organizations, Relief Society, Mutual Improvement Associations, and Primaries. We are rather stressing the work of the Primaries; because we find that we are able to and do gather into our little associations the children of people who will not themselves attend our services. We have some very faithful local as well as missionary sisters, who are engaged in Primary work, and the average of the mission is that two-thirds of the membership is non-"Mormon." The parents in many instances are being interested through their children, the children carrying home to parents some suggestions of the truths that they have acquired in the Primary associations.

The missionary work which is the particular feature that engrosses the greater part of my attention, because of the fact that I have largely to direct the labors in it and do not to the same degree come in personal contact with the brethren and sisters who constitute the various organizations—is of the character that I cannot speak in too high terms of the workers, their excellence, their faithfulness, their cleanness, the beauty of their lives and the strength they manifest in proclaiming the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is an inspiring thing to any one who has the opportunities that I have had to observe it so closely.

We endeavor to teach the missionaries not only the gospel of Jesus Christ (and I refer more particularly to the first principles of the gospel), but we are also endeavoring to implant in their hearts a proper idealism of the greatness of this work with which we are associated. We endeavor to teach them that the missionary experience they are enjoying is only a small part of what is expected of them in the Church of Jesus Christ, that it is merely the laying of the foundation upon which they may build their future lives. We are endeavoring to establish in their hearts and consciousness the ideals of "Mormonism," the greatest ideals that God has ever given his children to enjoy. We teach them that they have come to the earth for a specific purpose, that that purpose is the salvation of the souls of men, that the mere fact that they are in the field for a couple of years is only incidental to the life that they are expected to lead, to the work they are expected to perform. And they are faithful, they are attentive in their desire, and endeavor to acquire a knowledge not only of the gospel but of the things pertaining to the progress of civilized peoples, the history of the world, and the association that men and women have with each other, all of which should have for its object the benefiting of society. These are the fundamental things we endeavor to teach the missionaries. They sometimes come to us crude; they come to us with a lack of understanding; they come to us sometimes with but little education; and to the degree that they lack education, to that degree are they handicapped. We are learning that in order to reach any class of people you must have a man or representative who is capable of teaching that class of people. And, while the boys and the girls are highly successful in their contacts with men of affairs, we find the more highly educated they are, the greater is their sphere of usefulness. I am convinced that the standards of education are being constantly advanced in our community, not alone for the purpose of improving the power of the missionaries, but that also we may rise to the lofty plane that sometime we must occupy in filling our destiny; for, as Brother Stephen L. Richards said yesterday, we are a great people, and there is no power that can prevent us from occupying a high place in the history of the world, if we will be true to the ideals that God, through his servants, has revealed to us.

Speaking again of the Northwest, we have an Indian school on the Fort Peck Reservation, in Montana, which is maintained by the Church. We have at the present time thirty pupils in that school, which is the crowded capacity of the school. We cannot, with our present force of missionaries—for we are limited on the Reservation as well as in other parts of the mission—send out among the people of that tribe, the number of missionaries necessary to have contact with all the residents of the reservation. But we do take as many of their children into our schools as we can accomodate and teach them there the principles of the gospel, while at the same time we are giving them the fundamentals of education. We board them, and we provide lodging for them; they live at the mission home during the entire school year. And while some of the adjoining schools, which are conducted by other churches, have some difficulty in retaining their pupils, keeping them within the confines of the school, we have the same difficulty in getting the Indian children to go home and remain there, owing to the different spirit that characterizes the teaching of your boys and girls as its influence is reflected in the hearts and minds of those little children. I have seen them hang about their teachers in attitudes of almost worship, because those boys and girls love these Indian children, and you cannot touch the Indian heart, any more than you can touch any other human heart, except by the glorious emotion of love. And so the Indian children love your sons and daughters, and there has come to be a great respect for the "Mormon" people.

It was only a few days ago that I was in Wolf Point and had the opportunity of conversing with two of the chief Indians of the Assiniboine and Sioux tribes, George Conners and Meade Steele. I had met with them a year or more ago and they had asked me for letters to our senators and representatives in Congress, at Washington. I had been very glad to comply with that request, particularly as I have the honor of being a personal friend of Senator Reed Smoot, of Senator William H. King, and also of Commissioner Spry, who is located in Washington. My correspondence has been chiefly with Senators Smoot and King, and these Indians testified to me that never had they met with such kindness of treatment as was accorded them by these brethren. And, said they, "We have taken our other Indian friends, of tribes from other parts of the states, Oklahoma, and other places, and introduced them to Senators Smoot and King, and it is our fervent testimony that we have never had the same success in achieving our rights as has been accorded us under the able advice and tutelage of Senators Smoot and King." And so they say, "We know that your people are our friends; the great men among your people have evinced such great interest in the Indian affairs." And they both testified to me that by reason of the kindness they had received at the hands of our brethren they had been led to investigate the faith of the Latter-day Saints, and each of them testified they knew the Book of Mormon to be true, because they had read it from cover to cover, and because it told them, illustrated to them the great truths, in a plainer and more direct manner, of the legends which are so generally maintained among them.

The mission, as I have said, is prosperous. We are, I hope, doing our job. It is the desire of your sons and daughters to do the thing they have been sent there to do, and I would like the parents and the friends of the boys and girls in the mission field to encourage them in their work. But do not send them too much money; they are just as well off without it. The boys and girls who have accomplished missions on the least money have evinced the highest development. So if you would have your boys and girls properly educated as missionaries, do not in the kindness of your hearts, send them too much money. You may even stint them a little and it will not be to their injury. Sometimes young people, not having had previous experience in the expending of money, as is the case with some of them, do not always spend it judiciously. While they are good, they are just young people, and we may not be too lavish with our children, because lavishness in parents has a tendency to break down the finer and better morale of the nature than to increase it. Remember, brethren and sisters, that our fathers worked for what they had, as you doubtless are doing, and as I know in many instances the parents and friends are doing to maintain in the missionary fields their boys and girls, at great sacrifice to themselves; and it is only proper that the boys and girls in the field should share in those sacrifices.

I am grateful to you, to the Church, to the leaders of our community, to God, for the opportunity he has given me for the associations I enjoy with your sons and daughters. They are a great inspiration to any man who observes their faithfulness and the beauty of their lives. Endeavor to encourage them when they shall return, that they may continue in the spirit of missionary labor; for if this people shall once come to realize their real mission in life, they will know that they are missionaries—not missionaries in the word alone but missionaries in every act of their lives. You cannot understand or know how much you affect your environment by your acts, but every man every day writes his impress on the universe by the acts of his life, by the thoughts of his heart, by the words that he speaks; and the highest idealism in “Mormonism” is that we shall save these children of our Father. Let us be worthy of the great heritage that has come to us from our forebears; let us be faithful to God. My testimony to you is that your boys and girls are faithful to God. They are striving to the full, as opportunity is afforded them, to perform the duties that they have gone out into the world to perform.

My testimony is, brethren and sisters, that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ. This is the work of God. And your boys and girls are learning it by contrasting it with other religions, so called, of the world, and they are learning that “Mormonism” is indeed the truth of the Lord Jesus Christ. That we may be worthy of what God has promised us, and that we may live so as to enjoy it, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EUGENE J. NEFF

President of the Hawaiian Mission

I believe my throat was never so dry as it is upon this occasion.

I come from the land of Hawaii, from the land of perpetual sunshine and flowers. I bring to you the love and greetings of our 14,000 Saints who live on those fairy islands. I believe that there is no place in all the world, with the exception possibly of the stakes of Zion, where the gospel has been so firmly established as it has been in Hawaii, among those chosen people of Joseph. I commend the work of the people who were missionaries there in the early days of the Church, and who labored so assiduously to establish the work so firmly upon those islands. I believe that there has never been a man in Hawaii who has done more for the establishing of the cause of truth and righteousness in the Hawaiian Islands (except possibly it be the late Presidents Joseph F. Smith and George Q. Cannon) who has devoted his time, his ability, and talents to the growth of the work there any more than Samuel E. Woolley, who died day before yesterday. I mourn his loss, because I know of the great good he has done among the people on those islands. I know their love for him, and I know the sorrow which will be in their hearts when they learn of his passing away. I believe, however, that it is the will of the Lord that he should go, because his life the last few years has not been as happy as it might have been, and I believe in the spirit world he will have the privilege and the opportunity of laboring with the departed spirits of those people whom he so dearly loved.

During the recent centennial anniversary of the Protestant churches in Honolulu, one of the speakers arose and said that in one hundred years and with the expenditure of vast fortunes, running into millions of dollars, the Protestant church had converted ten to twelve thousand men, while the "Mormon" Church had been there thirty years less time and had expended practically no money but had converted between sixty and seventy thousand people. They came to me and wanted to know why it was that the "Mormon" Church was able to reach the hearts and minds of the people more than they had done, and I told them our system of work among the people. Their representative replied, "I do not see so much difference in that." And I told him that it was not so much, possibly, in that, as in the fact that those people are the chosen seed of Joseph, and susceptible to the teachings of true religion.

I have seen the heathen Chinaman, the Mohammedan Jap, those who had no belief in God, through intermarriage with the Hawaiian people the children of whom have become believers in the living God, who are susceptible to the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have never seen an infidel among the Hawaiian people; I have never seen one who denied a belief in the true and living God.

During a recent convention of sugar men in Washington, D. C., the Governor of the Territory was present.—And I might say that we have labored for the past twenty-five years to be recognized as a part of the United States, as a territory of the United States and not as an insular possession. It has been felt by some people that Hawaii should be merely an island possession of the United States, but it is a territory and has rights as a territory and is today being recognized as a territory. I have come here with the intention of convincing people here in Zion, if I can, that we are no longer a mere island of the sea, set apart from the people of the United States, but a part and portion and an integral part of the United States.—The Governor of Hawaii, made this assertion before some of our Utah sugar men, who were there gathered, "There has never been a church in Hawaii that has done more for the uplift of the Hawaiian people than the Latter-day Saints." And he further concluded by saying, "They are our foremost citizens of the Territory of Hawaii in the work of rehabilitating the Hawaiians."

A law was passed by Congress a few years ago appropriating one million dollars to make possible the return of the Hawaiians to the soil. The Governor of the Territory made application to me to find one of our returned "Mormon" elders, who had labored among the Hawaiians and who was familiar with western farm life, to go there and direct the rehabilitating of the Hawaiian people on the farms.

Mr. Samuel W. Robely, the Scout executive of Hawaii, met Oscar A. Kirkham in one of their conventions. He was found smoking by Oscar A. Kirkham. Brother Kirkham patted him on the back and said, "Robely, I think a great deal of you, but I would think a great deal more of you, and I believe you would make a better Boy Scout leader, if you would not smoke." Mr. Robely told me himself that he has never lit a cigarette or cigar since, but he has been reminded of the words of Oscar Kirkham. In a convention of Boy Scouts in Honolulu he made this assertion, "Before we become successful in some of our Boy Scout organizations, we will have to convert these people to "Mormonism," to make them better Boy Scouts. For the state of Utah leads in the Boy Scout movement."

We have in Hawaii today a man from Wisconsin who claims that he is going to revolutionize the religious world; he is going to take the best out of all the religions and put it together and make a religion that can be comprehended by all—a religion that is modern and not one that was fit and suitable for the Jewish people only. He came to me and wanted to know what there was in our religion that we considered best, that would be fit and proper to make a part of this new religion which he is trying to form. And I told him that I thought that we had that formed just as completely as any man-made religion and more so. He said, "I am not trying to make a religion of my own, but I want to modernize Christianity and make it suitable to the day in which we live." And he told me of the churches in the east who had two of the ten commandments from the Decalogue and substituted two others. The first was, "In six days the Lord made the heavens and the earth, the seas and the fountains of water, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day." He said, "You don't believe that; that would be all right for the Jews in their day, but in our day, these modern times, we cannot accept that doctrine and we have got to modernize Christianity." I told him that it was, possibly, because we did not understand the creation of this earth. We were in our church building at that time, which is built of concrete and lumber. I told him to examine those timbers and tell me how old the meetinghouse might be, but he told me it was but a few years old. Then I said, "How old are the timbers in this meetinghouse?" And he told me they might be many years old. And I said, "How long has it been since those timbers grew on the mountain side? How old was the seed from which those timber grew? And before that, where was the tree which produced the seed that grew the timbers which we sawed into lumber and made into that building?" I said, "It can go back to eternity! In fact, all matter is eternal; there is no creation of matter, but merely an organization." He said to me, "It is the first time I have ever understood it in that way; I supposed the Lord created and brought these things to pass by the word of his mouth." And I told him that I thought he did not, any more so than we organized the building out of materials which did not exist.

The other thing, he said, that we have got to substitute another thing for is the statement that the sins of the parents rest upon the children unto the third and fourth generation. He said, "this is unkind, unjust; no loving God would ever be so unkind and unjust to his children." I said, "All that I would ask you to do is make a trip to Molokai, the island of the lepers, that prison which is bounded by the ocean on three sides and a perpendicular precipice of 2,000 feet on the other side—a natural prison, where all those who have contracted leprosy are placed—and upon this island I will prove to you that the sins of the fathers do rest upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." I have seen those who have been afflicted with this dreadful disease, whose children have not had the disease, whose grandchildren have not had the disease, but in the third and the fourth generation I have seen leprosy break out among the descendants of those people who had that disease before. No one can tell me, I said, that the sins of the parents do not rest upon the children unto the third and the fourth generation of men.

I am happy to be engaged in the missionary work. I come from the firing line, from the front, where we are battling to establish the kingdom of God and righteousness among the children of men. We have arrayed against us Satan and his forces; we have come in conflict with them many times, but I am thankful to say that nearly every time we have come out victorious, and the splendid sons and daughters you are sending into the mission field are valiant fighters for the cause of truth and liberty in the world. I am happy in the thought that I have been called to labor among such splendid young men and women. The early part of my life was cast among people who were not devout religionists, who were not given to religious worship; but today my whole life is devoted to the cause of truth and the labor among these splendid boys. I have heard them testify many times of the inspiration and love which they have from me. I want to bear testimony also that I receive inspiration from them; the love which I have for your sons and daughters in the mission field is almost akin to brotherly love, to the love which I have for my own brothers and sisters.

The Hawaiian mission is prosperous, one of the biggest missions in the Church. I believe there are no sincerer, truer Latter-day Saints in all the world than we have upon the islands of the sea. I pray God that the spirit of the missionary work may penetrate the hearts of you fathers and mothers who are here at home, that you may be able to let your sons and daughters go into the mission field, that you will be willing to make the needed sacrifice to maintain them in the mission field as long as their services are needed.

May the Lord bless us all. I testify to you that God has again spoken from the heavens, that his Church is again established on the earth, and that all that learn to obey his commandments and walk in obedience to the laws, will receive the blessings of eternal life in the celestial kingdom of our heavenly Father. May this be our happy lot, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A quartet consisting of Mrs. Irene S. Cummings, Mrs. Madeline Calloway, Milton Fisher and DeVon Meacham, sang, "Send out thy Light."

ELDER A. WILLIAM LUND

Assistant Church Historian

I most humbly desire, my brethren and sisters, an interest in your faith and prayers for the few moments I may occupy this afternoon. I am thankful for the privilege I have had of attending the meetings, thus far, of our wonderful conference, and to have received the instructions of our president and other elders of the Church who have spoken to us. I rejoice in my membership in the Church of Jesus Christ. I value it above everything I have. I hope and trust that I may always be faithful and true to the covenants which I have made, with my Father, and that we all may be true to the covenants we have made with our Father when we accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ and took upon ourselves his name.

The beautiful song just rendered, "Send out thy Light," seems to have been fulfilled in the sending forth of the missionaries of this Church, sending them out to preach the everlasting gospel, the light of the world, which will lead us back into the presence of our Father. These missionaries are clothed with his power to go into the world and preach unto men the gospel of life and salvation having the same Priesthood and power that have always made clear to the world the difference between the Church of God and all other churches. This Priesthood is the distinguishing feature which makes us the Church of Jesus Christ. It is God's power unto this people to act in his name, so that they may carry forth the message of salvation, perform the ordinances of life eternal, so that men and women, obeying the gospel message, may enter his Church. This power of God has always been with his people from the very beginning. Whenever there has been a prophet of God among the children of men, he has been clothed with the power, the Priesthood of God, to act in his name. It is through this Priesthood that the revelations of God are given to men. It is the channel of revelation, it is that which constitutes a man the president of his Church and his prophet upon the earth.

The power of this Priesthood has been manifested in many different ways. It is manifested in the organization of the Church; the healing of the sick; the raising of the dead; the wonderful prophetic utterances, and in the miracles that the prophets performed when they were upon the earth.

It was by the power of the Priesthood that Elijah sealed the heavens, so that for three years no rain fell in the land and a sore famine afflicted the people. It was by this same power of the Priesthood that Elijah raised the dead boy. You remember the story of how he went and lived with a widow and her son, during this famine; that they had just a little meal and oil which lasted until the famine abated. The son was taken sick and died. The mother came to Elijah complaining that he had come to call her sins to remembrance and slay her son. The Prophet asked for her son and took him to his own room where, by the Priesthood he held, he raised this boy from the dead and brought him back again to his mother.

It was the power of this Priesthood which gave Moses the ability to do the wonderful miracles that he did. Moses was called of God and was ordained, we are told in the Doctrine and Covenants, under the hands of Jethro, the priest of Midian, a man having the authority of God, and who gave it to Moses. When Moses was instructed by God to go down into the land of Egypt and bring out of bondage the chosen people, the Israelites, he went clothed with the power of the holy Priesthood, and he made manifest to these people more than once the power of God in their behalf, that they might be taught again that there is a God in heaven, the God of Israel. They had lived for some hundreds of years in Egypt, under the teachings of the Egyptians, and had departed from the true and the living God in that they were worshipping idols. This is evidenced in the fact that when Moses was away from the camp in the mountains, a short time, about forty days, receiving from God instructions to take back to the people and teach them the plan of life and salvation, the people prevailed upon Aaron the brother of Moses, to make a calf which they might worship. Now, the calf represented one of the gods of the Egyptians and Israel returned to the worship of idols while Moses was away. When Moses came down to the camp and heard the people singing, he asked what was going on, and when Joshua told him of the conditions, he cast the tablets of stone to the ground and broke them, even though they had written upon them, by the finger of God himself, the commandments which he desired taught unto his people. He went into the camp, destroyed the calf and scattered about the broken pieces, and then went back into the mountain to appeal to the Lord to forgive his children.

Here is an example of strength and character that the Priesthood of God gives to a man when he obeys the principles and teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for no greater temptation can ever be placed in the path of man than was given to Moses at this time. The Lord offered to make of Moses a mighty nation; offered to make his seed numerous as the sands upon the seashore; offered Moses the right that, through his seed all nations might be blessed, but Moses said, Not so, O God, thou hast made this covenant with thy servant Abraham and thy servants Isaac and Jacob, that of them thou wouldst make many nations and that through their seed should all nations be blessed. Moses refused to accept of this wonderful blessing. He proved himself true to the trust and calling that God had given to him. He came back into the mountains and prayed to God, that he would forgive the people of Israel, and pleaded with him and wanted to know what the people of Israel would think of this kind of a God, that would take his children out into the wilderness and then destroy them. Moses offered himself that God destroy him and blot his name out of the book of remembrance, that he should never be numbered more among the children of men, if only God would forgive the children of Israel. God did not withstand the pleadings of that faithful man, and he forgave the children of Israel their transgressions.

This power of the Priesthood, when exercised rightly, heals the sick and raises the dead. You remember the wonderful miracles that Jesus Christ himself did among the children of men. When the apostles after him went among the people, preaching unto them, they, too, did many wonderful things in the name of God. One striking example: after Peter and John had been away preaching for some time, they were returning to the city of Jerusalem, and as they neared the gate of the temple, called "Beautiful," there was a lame man there begging alms. He had been lame from his childhood, and begged alms of Peter and John. Peter said to him, "Silver and gold I have none; but such as I have, give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." And he arose, was made whole, through the exercise of this Priesthood of God which Jesus Christ himself had given to Peter and to John.

In the days in which we live, I testify to you in humility, this same power of the Priesthood of God has been made manifest. In the early history of the Church, one member of the Church, Elijah Fordham was lying very ill, in fact, he was upon his death bed. The Prophet Joseph came into the room and asked him if he knew him, and he said "Yes," then the prophet asked him if he had faith in God that he could be healed, and he said, he had. Then Joseph, taking him by the hand, said, "Brother Fordham, I command you, in the name of Jesus Christ, to arise from this bed and be made whole." And he arose from his bed and was made whole.

This power also brings to the prophets of God a knowledge of things that shall come to pass. On the sixth day of August, 1842, the Prophet Joseph made a prophecy that the people should be led to the valleys of these mountains, that many would die from exposure, some from hardships that would befall them, but the Saints would come and build a wonderful colony here in the tops of the mountains. It has been literally fulfilled. This same spirit of prophecy rested upon President Brigham Young, the man who succeeded the Prophet Joseph in the presidency of God's Church. Out on the plains, in 1846, he told the brethren that a temple of God would be erected in the tops of the mountains, and that endowments would be given in the tops of the mountains, which has been literally fulfilled. After the Saints had been driven from Nauvoo, where the people had received the blessings of God in that wonderful temple, built by the sacrifice of our people both in time and means, and after suffering untold hardships, they came into this valley. Just a few days after their arrival, President Young with some other members of the Twelve were standing upon this Temple block, when President Young struck his cane in the ground and said, "Here we will build a temple unto God." President Wilford Woodruff bears testimony that the temple was built upon the spot where President Young drove his cane into the ground. How did President Young know that the people would even stay here when they got here? How did he know that they would give of their time and their means, amounting to about four millions of dollars, for the erecting of that temple, except by the revelations of God, and by the witness of the Spirit of God to him that this was true?

And so, if time permitted I could enumerate many other instances, showing that this Priesthood of God is with this people. I bear you my humble testimony, my brethren and sisters, that I do know that this is God's work, that this is his Church, that the men who have stood at the head of this Church are prophets of God, that the man who stands at the head of the Church today has the keys of the Holy Melchizedek Priesthood, the power of God to open the door of life eternal to all the world, the power to save every child of God if he will obey the gospel of our Lord and Master.

I bear you my witness that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that his gospel is the power of God unto salvation, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANDREW JENSON

Assistant Church Historian

I have enjoyed the remarks made by the previous speakers and have listened with attention to the reports from the two presidents of missions and to the historical narrative by Brother Lund.

After listening also to the excellent discourse delivered this morning by President Ivins, in which he recited the beautiful story of the Israelites, and also referred to the return of the Jews to their land—their original land of inheritance—I was led to reflect upon an event which took place in Kirtland, Ohio, on the 3rd of April, 1836, when Moses appeared in the Kirtland temple and delivered unto Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the keys for "the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth and the leading of the Ten Tribes from the land of the North." We understand by this that it referred not only to the Jews, but to the other tribes of the House of Israel as well, and that it means a general gathering dispensation. Many centuries ago, the children of Israel were scattered to the four corners of the earth, but in the last days God, according to prophecy, will cause them to be gathered again from the islands of the sea, from the lands of the north, and from wheresoever they have been driven. In connection with this, I was thinking of some notes that I made recently regarding the preaching of the gospel in the different nations of the earth, as the question may consistently be asked: Have the Latter-day Saints been faithful and diligent in preaching the gospel to the nations and in gathering Israel?

Jesus instructed his apostles, shortly before he ascended into heaven, to go out into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. John, in his vision upon the Isle of Patmos, saw an angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to every nation, kindred, tongue and people. We see the fulfilment of that prophecy in the visit to Joseph Smith by the angel Moroni through whom the elders of the Church in our dispensation received their first commission to preach.

While Joseph was engaged in translating the Book of Mormon, assisted by Oliver Cowdery, in Harmony, Pennsylvania, and in Seneca county, New York, in 1829 and 1830, they testified of the restoration of the gospel to the people in these localities and when these men had been ordained to the Priesthood by John the Baptist, and, according to the command that he gave them, had baptized and reordained each other, they commenced to baptize others. The next to be baptized after Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery was Samuel H. Smith, a brother of the Prophet Joseph. From that time on until the 6th of April, 1830, about thirty people were baptized altogether, and on the day mentioned, as you remember, the Church was organized, with six members. Of those baptized only six members seem to have been present when the organization was effected at Fayette; at least the Church was organized with six members whose names are known.

As soon as that was done, the preaching of the restored gospel commenced in earnest. Oliver Cowdery preached the first public discourse ever delivered by a Latter-day Saint elder in this dispensation, on Sunday, the 11th of April, 1830, and I venture to say that since that memorable Sunday there has never been a Sabbath day but what the elders of the Church have lifted up their voices and borne testimony to the truth of the gospel. At the present time several thousand elders raise their voices every Sabbath day preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ in the various stakes of Zion as well as in the missionary fields.

Among the first elders of the Church was Peter Whitmer, Jr., who, together with Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, as early as April, 1830, commenced missionary journeys away from Fayette. One of their first trips was to Colesville, in Broome county, New York, about thirty miles from Fayette, where the Church had just been organized. In Colesville, the first convert to the restored gospel was Newel Knight, who afterwards became prominent in the Church. Soon a number of others embraced the gospel in that neighborhood, and so it is recorded in Church history that the Colesville branch was the first branch of the Church organized after the first organization in Fayette, New York, and it was also the first branch of the Church that fulfilled the command of "gathering to Zion." The Colesville branch led the van of the gathering of Israel in these last days by traveling as a body about 1300 miles from Colesville, New York, to the place designated for gathering, in Jackson county, Missouri.

Soon after that, other elders entered the missionary field preaching the gospel. Thus Samuel H. Smith also became one of the first missionaries of the Church. He went to Lavonia, Livingston county, New York, and after suffering much persecution, the elders succeeded in getting a foothold there, and branches of the Church were soon afterwards raised up in that neighborhood.

In August of the same year, Joseph Smith, Senior, and Don Carlos Smith performed a mission to St. Lawrence county, New York, where they converted a number of the Smith family. It seems that all of these except two became members of the Church, and most of them remained faithful and true adherents to the faith the rest of their lives.

In October, 1830, Oliver Cowdery, Parley P. Pratt, Peter Whitmer, Jr. and Richard Ziba Peterson were called by revelation on a special mission to travel to the far west to preach the gospel to the Lamanites, and thus a few months after the Church was organized, our missionaries had gone as far as 1300 miles away from Fayette preaching the gospel on the way, not only to the Lamanites but also to the whites.

I am relating these things, my brethren and sisters, that you may know that we have been diligent in keeping the commandments of the Lord in regard to preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. First we preached in the United States, but after the keys had been given by Moses for gathering Israel, as has been referred to, the Elders also went into foreign lands.

It may be interesting to know who the first elders in the Church were, and not only that, but who were the first missionaries of the Church—the first of the many thousands of missionaries who since have preached the gospel in nearly all parts of the world. We have between 1500 and 2,000 elders out in different parts of the world preaching the gospel at the present time. It has always been interesting to me to know who preceded me in preaching in the different localities where I have labored, and I imagine that the same is the case with others. The first sixteen missionaries in the Church were Joseph Smith, Jr., Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer, David Whitmer, Samuel H. Smith, Joseph Smith, Sr., Don Carlos Smith, Parley P. Pratt, Hyrum Smith, Newel Knight, Richard Ziba Peterson, Peter Whitmer, Jr.,

Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G Williams, John Murdock and Orson Pratt. These elders all labored as missionaries in the year 1830.

It may be interesting for Patriarch Milando Pratt, who is present with us in this meeting, to know that his father, Orson Pratt, was among the first missionaries of the Church, being only nineteen years old when first called into the ministry. He had been baptized on his birthday and soon afterwards was ordained to the Priesthood and sent out to preach. Orson Pratt died in 1881, a faithful elder in the Church, and one of the twelve apostles.

Time will only permit me to refer very briefly to what has been done by our missionaries, but it seems important that we should know how diligent the elders of the Church have been from the beginning in introducing the gospel into the different states of the Union, and into many nations.

First they preached in New York and Pennsylvania. In 1831, they went as far east as Vermont, where Joseph the prophet, Brigham Young and many others, who became prominent men in the Church, were born. Elder Jared Carter organized a branch of the Church at Benton, on the west side of the Green Mountains—the first branch in Vermont. The restored gospel was also preached in Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Indiana and Michigan, in 1831; and even some of the elders entered Kentucky and Virginia the same year.

The next year (1832) Orson Hyde and Samuel H. Smith filled an important mission to the Eastern, or New England, states, and during that year the gospel was first introduced in New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Maine. In the last named state, Elder Wilford Woodruff later performed a splendid mission upon the Fox Islands.

In 1834, the elders entered Tennessee. David W. Patten, Warren Parrish, Wilford Woodruff and Abraham O. Smoot were the first missionaries in that state. Wilford Woodruff and Henry Brown preached the gospel in Arkansas, in 1835. Into Maryland the gospel was introduced as early as 1837; and North Carolina was entered by Jedediah M. Grant (father of President Heber J. Grant), in 1838. The same year missionaries visited Iowa and later organized branches of the Church in that state, which afterwards became the home of many of the Latter-day Saints after their expulsion from Missouri.

The first Latter-day Saint missionaries entered South Carolina, in 1839. The first elder in that state was Lysander M. Davis. Missionaries entered Wisconsin, in 1840, and that state has been a fruitful field of labor ever since.

The first Latter-day Saint missionaries entered the states of Mississippi, Louisiana and Delaware in 1841, Florida about 1842, Georgia (where we now have the headquarters of the Southern States mission), Alabama and Texas, in 1843, and California, in 1846. The first Latter-day Saints in California were that company who, after sailing from New York in the ship Brooklyn, landed where San Francisco now stands, July 31, 1846. They found there only a small Spanish village, called Yerba Buena, which the Brooklyn people soon turned into a thrifty town called San Francisco, and made it not only an ordinary Anglo Saxon town, but with "Mormons" in the majority.

In what is now South Dakota we find our people, in 1846. They entered at or near the point where the Vermillion river empties into the Missouri. An elder of the Church, by the name of James Emmett, tried to lead a company of Saints astray at the time the Church had lost its first leader and prophet, and the people did not know exactly whom to follow. James Emmett spent the winter of 1846 and 1847 in what is now South Dakota with a number of people who followed him, and while he himself never became a faithful elder in the Church afterwards, most of his company returned to the fold.

The Latter-day Saints were introduced into what is now Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona by the Mormon Battalion, in 1846 and the Saints were not only the first representatives of the Church in what is now the state of Colorado, but they were also the founders of the first Anglo-Saxon settlement in that part of our great country. The sick detachment of the Mormon Battalion, and a small company of Saints from the state of Mississippi, spent the winter of 1846-1847 at Pueblo, which up to that time, was a small Mexican and Indian village.

In Nebraska, Winter Quarters (built by the Sanits in 1846) was the first Anglo-Saxon settlement of any importance. We were just as much the first Anglo-Saxon settlers of Nebraska as we were the first pioneers of Utah.

Some of the exiled Saints from Nauvoo, Illinois, found themselves, in 1846, traveling west and passing through what is now the state of Wyoming (it was not Wyoming until 1868), but the pioneers of 1847 were the first Latter-day Saints in that part of the country; they located Great Salt Lake City the same year.

Members of the Mormon Battalion, after having served their country faithfully one year, returned eastward by way of Carson Valley, in Nevada, in 1847, and in 1851 our people made the first real settlement in Nevada, where Latter-day Saints have resided ever since.

We entered Idaho in 1847. Samuel Brannan, who had led the Brooklyn company from New York to the Bay of San Francisco the previous year, being anxious to intercept Brigham Young and the pioneers, crossed the mountains to tell President Young what a beautiful country the San Juquin Valley, in California, was. After meeting President Young on Green river, he became very much displeased when the president, as he entered the valley of the Great Salt Lake, said, "This is the place," and then stopped here, instead of going (according to Brother Brannan's advice) to locate in California, which in reality had many attractions at that time as compared to the Salt Lake country. In Idaho also we became the first settlers. Samuel Brannan, coming from California over the Sierra Nevada mountains by way of old Fort Hall passed through the southern part of what is now Idaho. Some time afterwards the Saints located the first Anglo-Saxon settlements in Idaho (Fort Limhi, in 1855, and Franklin, in 1860).

The president of the Northwestern states mission, who is present with us today, may be interested in knowing that as early as 1850 Charles C. Rich appointed Boyd Stewart to take a mission to Oregon, and that is the beginning of the missionary work which we have since carried on in that state and the great Northwest. We cannot tell exactly at the present time when the first elders entered what is now the state of Washington, from Oregon. We entered Indian Territory (now Oklahoma) in 1855, and we have carried on missionary work there ever since, both among Indians and whites. We entered Montana in 1869, Minnesota as early as 1875, and North Dakota about the same time.

This covers all of the United States, and proves that the Latter-day Saints have preached the restored gospel in every state in the Union. In some states they have done more work than in others, because of the tolerance or intolerance of the people. The Church has always had elders who were on hand to preach in all parts of the United States and elsewhere.

I shall now briefly refer to our foreign missions. As early as 1832, the missionaries of the Church crossed the St. Lawrence river and lake Ontario into Canada and commenced to preach the gospel in that part of the British Dominions, and from that time until the present there have been Latter-day Saints in Canada and at times also flourishing branches of the Church. At the present time we have a well established mission in Canada.

In June, 1837, the first Latter-day Saint missionaries crossed the Atlantic Ocean and opened the door for missionary work in Great Britain. I need not give details of that mission, for you know what Great Britain has been to the Church. Tens of thousands of Saints have gathered from England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, to the gathering places in America, and the Church would look very much different to what it does today if it had not been for the acquisition that has come to it from the British Isles.

Our missionaries entered British India in 1840, and in 1853, a regular mission was established there. Some of our brethren went there as sailors; we have still members of the Church in India.

In 1841, Orson Hyde arrived in Palestine as a missionary from America. He dedicated the land for the gathering of the Jews. In 1843 Elder Noah Rogers, Addison Pratt, Benjamin F. Grouard and Knowlton F. Hanks started from Nauvoo, Illinois, for the Pacific Islands on a mission. Brother Hanks died at sea on his way to the Islands and was the first Latter-day Saint elder who found a watery grave. The other elders of that mission were successful in preaching the gospel on the Society Islands and neighboring groups, and about the time that Joseph Smith was mrytred in Carthage jail, Addison Pratt organized the first branch of the Church on the island of Tubuai—the first branch organized among a non-English speaking people. One of the missionaries who left Nauvoo in 1843 for the Pacific Islands, namely, Noah Rogers, stayed on the islands only a short time. Getting somewhat discouraged, he returned to America and was the first elder of the Church to circumnavigate the globe. He arrived in Nauvoo in time to become a victim of the persecutions then raging against the Saints, was exposed to the cold weather and the hardships on the plains of Iowa and took sick and died; he was the first Saint buried at Mt. Pisgah, Iowa, where later about 250 Latter-day Saints found, so to speak, martyrs' graves.

Erastus Snow, accompanied by John E. Forsgren, Peter O. Hansen and George P. Dykes, arrived in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1850, as the first Latter-day Saint missionaries to that land. Elder Snow baptized the first converts August 12, 1850, and organized the first branch of the Church in Scandinavia (the Copenhagen branch) Sept. 15, 1850. John E. Forsgren arrived in Sweden in June, 1850, and baptized his first convert in Gefle. July 26. 1850. From the beginning Denmark, Sweden, and Norway became known as the Scandinavian mission, which so far has been the most flourishing mission of the Church established among non-English speaking people. It is estimated that nearly one fifth of the present membership of the Church are of Scandinavian origin.

In December, 1850, a number of Elders arrived in the Hawaiian Islands. We are pleased to have listened to the president of the Hawaiian mission today, telling us that this mission has grown until it now has 14,000 members. I have had the pleasure to write the history of the Hawaiian mission, as well as the history of all other foreign missions of the Church, and it is indeed interesting to note how our missionary work has progressed in many lands and climes.

In Italy, Lorenzo Snow opened the gospel door in 1850. In Switzerland, Thomas B. Stenhouse first preached in 1851. Gudmund Gudmunson commenced to preach the gospel in Iceland and John Murdock in Australia, in 1851. In Norway the gospel was first introduced in 1851, by Elder Hans F. Peterson, who died many years ago in Ephraim, Sanpete county, Utah. To Chile, in South America, Parley P. Pratt and Rufus C. Allen went in 1851. They spent about seven months in Valparaiso and vicinity, but came away without baptizing anyone. It seems that they were unable to learn the Spanish language. One reason why so many young men are called on missions to the islands of the sea and other places, where foreign languages are spoken, is that people learn languages easily when young. For-iegners who come to America from some old countries when they are over twenty years of age usually find it a hard task to acquire the English language so as to speak it without brogue. You can generally detect that they are foreigners. We invariably acquire new languages when we are still in our teens better than later in life.

In 1852, Lorenzo Snow and others visited Malta (the same island where the Apostle Paul preached the gospel centuries ago) and established a mission there.

The first Latter-day Saint elders went to Siam in 1853 and also to Gibraltar, Germany and South Africa. Other elders, the same year, went to the West Indies. New Zealand became a missionary field for our elders in 1854, Holland in 1861, Austria in 1864, Finland in 1875, Mexico from 1875 to 1879, the Samoan Islands in 1888, Belgium in 1889, the Friendly Islands (Tonga) in 1891, and Japan in 1901.

I am hurrying to give you the merest outline. I have compiled many more details of these missions which perhaps may be used in Church publications later.

In my endeavor to cover so much ground, I neglected to explain that while the Jews are being gathered to Palestine in their unbelief as to the mission of Jesus Christ, many of the Ten Tribes, who were taken to the Tigris country in the neighborhood of Nineveh, Assyria, and afterwards traveled northward (where they are now found in the lands of the north and upon the islands of the sea), become converts to true Christianity. Our elders have baptized many of them, and they gather as believers to the places which God has appointed for that purpose. Most of us here assembled are of Ephraim, or of the Ten Tribes; we are of Israel. This we are generally told in our patriarchal blessings and tradition bears out the same idea. There may be Gentile blood in our veins, but the blood of the House of Israel, we believe, predominates within us. Thus—while parts of the Ten Tribes gather as converts, the Jews gather to Palestine in their unbelief, and will not know the great Redeemer of the world until he shall place his foot upon the Mount of Olives and it shall be rent asunder; then, and not until then, will they recognize their Shiloh, or Messiah, in Jesus of Nazareth.

May God continue to bless and prosper the missionary labors of our elders. May you who are younger than others of us who are fast growing old, continue to preach the gospel of Christ with unabated zeal until the heavenly message of salvation shall be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, until Israel shall be gathered in fulfilment of prophesy, until Zion shall be fully established upon the earth and until Christ shall come and reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. May our children and grandchildren after us have occasion to rejoice exceedingly in contemplating the integrity and faithfulness of their seniors, and, finally, may we all rejoice together in the celestial kingdom of our God and ever glorify him who has used us as humble instruments in his hands to labor for the establishment of his Church and kingdom upon the earth. May God bless us, I humbly pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

A devotional anthem, words by Willard Done and music by Gerrit DeJong, was sung by the choir.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

Of the Presiding Bishopric

It is now time for the dismissal of this meeting, but let me take just a minute to give one or two more thoughts for consideration.

During the last half hour many have left this building, undoubtedly for the purpose of avoiding the crowd they would encounter when the meetings now being held are dismissed. Many of them have been standing for the past two hours and perhaps feel justified in leaving. To my mind this should not be. We should enter a house of worship with a spirit of reverence. We should endeavor to keep order and should consider others above our own personal desires. In leaving a service before its conclusion we do not show this consideration, for we disturb the congregation and make it difficult for the speaker to follow his subject. It is hardly fair to remind you of this, for those who really need this reminder are on the outside, but I am sure we can all render a service to the Church by trying to encourage one another to avoid making such disturbances when attending a religious gathering.

During this conference; a number of the mission presidents have called our attention to requirements for missionary work. President Young has just reminded us that there is a tendency on the part of parents to send missionaries more money than is actually needed for their missionary labors. The Savior's admonition to the Twelve was to go into the world, "And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

"Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give.

"Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, Nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: for the workman is worthy of his meat,"

The records of the missions justify the statement that those engaged in this work of preaching the gospel, and who follow as nearly as possible this admonition, are doing the best work. This should be an evidence that the Lord is willing to assist his missionaries and will reward their faith and diligence. Let me suggest to those of you who have sons and daughters in the mission field that you communicate with the president of the mission and ask that he advise you as to the amount needed for those you are supporting. If you will then follow the advice given and endeavor to impress upon your son or daughter the importance of doing so, too, the burden now placed upon many who are struggling to maintain missionaries, who are laboring with companions who have more than they need, will be greatly reduced, and a condition of equality will be more nearly brought about in the mission field.

One more suggestion and I am through. The First Presidency have caused to be established a home where missionaries about to leave for the mission field may receive a course of instruction before their departure, and where returning missionaries, who stay in Salt Lake City to report their labors, may find lodgings. Although this home has been in operation for only a month, we find that some of the out-going missionaries, especially the young men, find it difficult to adapt themselves to the discipline and regulations, apparently not being accustomed to having their freedom curtailed. This, in my opinion, is a reflection upon their home training.

The examinations given and the course of instruction pursued indicate that many are reporting for missionary work who have bodily defects which could and should be corrected before the missionary reports to Salt Lake City.

We are also led to believe that the courses of study prepared especially for the lesser priesthood are not being followed with a view to preparing young men for missionary service. It is not sufficient that they meet in class once a week to study an outline, but we should also provide daily, or weekly, labors for them to perform. Young men and young women should not be called to the mission field until they have labored in the Church organizations, and have become familiar with the principles and ordinances of the gospel. I hope mothers and fathers will not leave this training wholly to the officers of the wards, but will cooperate with them and endeavor as far as possible to see that their children take advantage of every opportunity given to prepare themselves for the great missionary service.

Now, may the Lord bless you and help you in your efforts to serve him, which we should do in the spirit of faith and humility. We cannot serve the Lord without serving our fellow men. May we always be united in our efforts to advocate his gospel and always have his holy Spirit to guide us, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow," was sung by the choir and congregation.

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Horace H. Cummings.

THIRD DAY

MORNING SESSION

The conference continued in the great Tabernacle on Monday, April 6, 1925, at 10 o'clock a. m., President Heber J. Grant presiding. The choir and congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints."

Elder Henry A. Gardner, president of the Palmyra stake, offered the opening prayer.

A reading and song number, "The plan of salvation," from the oratorio by H. E. Giles, was rendered by Grace Emery, and Ray M. Haddock, with a double quartet.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

Ninety-five years ago today the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized. One of the fundamental teachings of this organization is supported by the following scriptural passages:

A FUNDAMENTAL TEACHING

"Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." John 7:16, 17.

In accordance with this teaching, you who have done his will, you who have kept his commandments, and therefore are entitled to and have the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, have recognized, I am sure, the voice of the Good Shepherd, in the remarks that have been made during this conference. That same spirit has testified to our souls that the words of the hymn just sung "An angel from on high, the long, long silence broke," are words of truth. This spirit has borne testimony to us not only that the words spoken are words of inspiration, but also that the work in which we are engaged is truly the work of the Master.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE Y. M. M. I. A.

On the 10th day of June, 1875, under divine guidance, as we believe, President Brigham Young gave instructions to Junius F. Wells to organize the first Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association. The great fundamentals which this pioneer leader said should characterize the instructions given in these organizations is, faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ as it has been revealed to the world through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

The fundamental he emphasized is supported by the scripture above referred to: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." He who does not "know" should examine his own thoughts and conduct carefully for the reason why he does not know, for the instruction is positive that those who will do his will shall know.

On the 10th day of June, 1925, it is proposed to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of this great young men's organization. I cannot help but wonder if that seer, that revelator, that prophet Brigham Young even with his unusual vision could look into the future and see what these Young Men's Mutual Improvement organizations have accomplished in this comparatively little time.

AN EXPERIENCE

Let me relate an experience which indicates the effectiveness of the work of the two Mutual organizations—Young Men's and Young Ladies'. At a conference one week ago yesterday—about this very hour—I asked all those present who were, or had been, officers in any of the Church organizations or in any of the Priesthood quorums to please stand. It seemed to me that all of those in that crowded meeting arose. So many stood that none could be seen seated except a few children in front.

I asked again that all those leaders who have been trained in the Mutual Improvement Associations as officers or teachers, members of committees, or speakers on the program please stand. It appeared as if the same number arose the second time as the first.

M. I. A. OBJECTIVES

These great institutions appear to be operating effectively in every portion of the world where the Church is known. The purpose of the great pioneer leader in establishing these institutions is being accomplished. Young men and young women are being made better. They are being taught the fundamental principles of the gospel, as these are laid down in the scriptures, they are being trained in public speaking and in bearing testimony, they are having instilled into their hearts that knowledge which comes from doing God's will, from living strictly in accordance with Christian teachings. They are demonstrating that "if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

When, throughout the whole Church, I observe the intense activity of great groups of our young people, when I see the phenomenal work they are doing in the mission field, when I observe the army of devoutly interested workers in the Sunday Schools and Mutuels, when I see the effectiveness of our work in debating, in public speaking, and in various other forms of recreation, I wonder if fifty years ago even the Prophet Brigham Young himself, with his inspired vision, could see how great, how influential and how effective the work of these institutions would be today.

The excellence of the characters of the young people the Church is producing with the aid of the Mutuels and other Church agencies, prompts me to read one other passage of scripture:

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

"Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

"And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

"Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock:

"And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock." Matt. 7:21-25.

A PEOPLE OF STERLING WORTH PRODUCED

The more I study the doctrines of the Church and Church organization, the more beauty and perfection I find. It is nearly a hundred years since, under the direction of the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Church was originally established. It is now practically fifty years since the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Associations were organized and their work was begun, under the inspired leadership of the great pioneer prophet. A careful study of the results of these two great movements shows that a hardy people of sterling worth has been produced, I have analyzed these institutions and judging them by their fruits, I have concluded that I may fail, or you may fail, or others may not be able to live in accordance with the doctrines, teachings and commandments of the Church, yet the best judgment I have tells me that the Church and its organization and its effective work will go on indefinitely. As far as the welfare and progress of these organizations are concerned, we need have no fear, for the faith of the people to whom these institutions are entrusted is founded on a rock.

When June 10th comes, and you see our great Jubilee commemorating and celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Young Men's Mutuals, your hearts, like those of all other Latter-day Saints, will be thrilled with justifiable pride. The Young Ladies' organization is joining in this celebration. In it they will play an important part. You will see thousands of our members, young men and young women, marching through the streets of this city. The various divisions will be carrying great banners, indicating the strength and power of the young people who are workers in these two institutions of the Church. When you see them in the pink and vigor of manhood and womanhood, your souls will be stirred with the feeling that they cannot fail, for their faith is founded on a rock.

THRIFT AND FINANCIAL SUCCESS

The generation of young men and young women that the Church is producing is expected to be well nigh perfect. Among their own commendable characteristics they must have the spirit of, and they must practice, thrift. I was greatly interested in what Senator Smoot said upon that subject Sunday. I believe in thrift. We cannot have a great generation of strong characters unless they practice thrift. We are to be a people of power, we are to be empire-builders. We can only secure the means necessary to attain these ends if we live within our incomes and in accordance with the principles of economy and thrift.

Many years ago, when I was a young man and an officer in the Mutual Improvement organization of the Utah stake, when that stake covered all of Utah county, I asked a wise man who had been a financial success what I should teach the young men with whom I came in contact as a Mutual Improvement officer, and as a teacher in the B. Y. Academy, at Provo, what lessons I should teach these young people in order to make them successful financially.

"This is an easy matter," said the wise old pioneer. "All young people need to be taught is to spend less than they make."

Are you spending less than you make? Are you teaching those with whom you are associated to live also in accordance with this splendid teaching?

If the faith and integrity and real worth of the people are to be founded on a rock, they must practice economy and thrift.

It is said that automobiles may be responsible for many financial failures, that: "The sheriff has put many a man on his feet financially by taking away his automobile."

AUTOMOBILES AND SUCCESS

If the faith, the integrity and the real worth of the people are founded on a rock, they will not buy automobiles or other luxuries they cannot afford.

I was told recently by a dealer in automobiles that when they sent a messenger to the home of a man who was purchasing a machine on the installment plan—the monthly payment plan—he found a home bearing evidence of poverty. In it were a woman and a family of children without the real necessities of life. The purchaser of the automobile was behind in his payments some two or three months. When asked concerning their financial condition the lady explained that they were not able to keep up their payments on the automobile, that all they had had to live on for the last three months was what they had secured from the Church. It is such as these who need to learn the lessons of thrift and economy.

I appeal to you and to your children and to your children's children, and to your neighbors, and to your friends, and to all the people, not to purchase automobiles until they have the money with which to pay for them. Heaven bless you with sufficient wisdom to be able to see that the making of monthly payments on automobiles is tremendously expensive.

If we have integrity founded on a rock, we shall prize our good names more than money, and our word will be as binding as our bond.

QUALITIES REQUIRED OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS

If there are people in the Church who are willing to assume obligations they cannot meet, then we are in need of more teachers like

Doctor Karl G. Maeser. We need to have impressed upon the minds of the people that life itself is no more precious than honor. We must have a people with vision, a people with judgment, a people who will meet their obligations and will assume no obligations they cannot meet.

When students came to the B. Y. Academy at Provo that great teacher, Karl G. Maeser, had them give their word of honor that they would live in accordance with the teachings of the Church and obey the rules of the school.

He explained that many students came to him and asked what he meant by "word of honor." That great teacher with high ideals explained that if he were placed behind prison walls ever so high and ever so thick, extending to any depth in the ground, there would always be a possibility that at some time, in some way he would be able to escape. "But," said this splendid saint, "place me in the middle of that floor, draw a chalk line around me, have me give my word of honor never to cross that line. Can I ever escape? No, never! I die first." That is the sterling worth that is founded on a rock. It is qualities like this the people must have if the purposes of the Divine Master are to be accomplished.

Faith and testimony, honor, integrity and mercy, these are qualities required of Latter-day Saints according to the gospel which, through the Prophet Joseph Smith, has been restored in these last days. The Mutuals and other auxiliary organizations have been established also under divine inspiration as helps in government. The fundamental aim of these institutions is to teach the members of the Church to "do his will." For if they "do his will," they shall know of the doctrine.

KNOWLEDGE MUST BE FOLLOWED BY WORKS AND HONOR

Nor is knowledge concerning the doctrines of the Church enough. We are to be judged not by our faith but by our works. Character is essential. Frugality is important. Economy must be practiced. Honor of the quality described by Dr. Karl G. Maeser must be a characteristic of the people. God himself has not power enough to accomplish his purposes with a people who are without honor. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, and virtuous. The Mutuals and other organizations throughout the Church are doing their utmost to bring up a people who live in accordance with all these virtues. Our progress may appear to be slow, but actually it is rapid. The work is the work of Divine Providence. We need fear only for our individual selves. The cause being divine, will triumph finally. For the whole people we need have no fear, for their faith, their works and their integrity are founded on a rock. God bless you. Amen.

ELDER J. GOLDEN KIMBALL

Of the First Council of Seventy

There has never been a time in my life, or any period of my life, when I felt better spiritually and more willing to do my duty and serve the Lord and labor for his cause and for his interests. I pray God that the time shall never come in my life when I fear the face of man. The Lord at one time, in the early history of the Church, in a revelation, re-proved the elders because they would not open their mouths and use the talents which the Lord had given unto them, and I am praying, as some old prophet prayed, "that the words of my mouth and the meditation of my thoughts be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah, my Rock and my Redeemer."

I appreciate the fact that we are not all alike. I have not been reared in the same pasture as some men have in this day and generation. Neither do I speak the same language, but I try to make myself understood.

I have been away for a short time in California. I have not associated with the Gentiles, they did not seem to recognize me. I cannot remember now of any of them speaking to me, but I have learned a number of lessons. During my loneliness I have sought after God. I love God; I love him for his kindness, mercy, patience, and for his forgiveness. I sustain this work as best I know how, and I love the brethren, because they are kind to me, because they have patience, and because they are forbearing.

I often ask the question, "Why do I live?" That puts me in mind of a story by Eugene Field, that master of tender verse. He tells the story of a young man, an ambitious poet, who sent him a poem, "Why do I live?" And he immediately answered, "Because you sent your poem by mail."

During the time of my poor health my family were very much concerned. They wanted me to go through a physical examination. Nothing in the world frightens me like a scientific examination. I went to the clinic of the Stanford University, to a young physician of some considerable renown. I passed through an examination—the X-ray, and all that stuff. This young doctor did not believe in God, man, or the devil. I found that out. I told him I was a "Mormon." He said, "You will never get any better." I said, "O, yes, I will. I have a greater physician than you are." He said, "Who is he?" And I said, "The Lord Jesus Christ." He said, "There's nothing in it." He was drowned last year, and I am still alive.

Whenever I am called to speak in the tabernacle, I always put up the danger signal, "Safety first," because I am always in danger.

Now, brethren and sisters, in all solemnity, I want to read to you a little. I am sure I will be safe if I stick to the text. I was acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith, only through the testimony of my father. No man in this Church has greater faith, greater respect, and did greater honor to the Prophet of God than Heber C. Kimball. His knees never trembled, his hand never shook, he never failed to sustain the Prophet of God. I have known every prophet of God, who has been the president of this Church since the Prophet Joseph Smith. I have personally talked to them; I honored them; they were always kind to me. I have often spoken of President Woodruff. Occasionally, when I was presiding in the South and returned home with an emigration, he said, "Brother Kimball, sit down by me. Now, Brother Kimball, I have had visions; I have had revelations; I have seen angels, but the greatest of all is that still, small voice." I have heard that voice, I am a witness, and I know that God lives.

I desire to read to you something, not new, not startling—the idea that we are the chosen people of God: Joseph Smith, the Prophet of the living God organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the members became the chosen people of God to perform a great and lasting service for mankind. To preach the gospel of Jesus Christ; they were entrusted with a mission which carries with it suffering, sacrifice, sorrow, hatred and persecution, but the message brings to the human family, if they will have faith in God, repent of their sins, and be baptized by immersion and have hands laid upon them by the authorized servants of God for the reception of the Holy Ghost—there will come to them joy, happiness, virtue, goodness and godliness. To accept this mission is to fill a high place in the world's history. To be a chosen people we have gone forth through trials, tribulations, suffering, sorrow, hate and agony, sacrifice and humiliation, and have humbly and faithfully performed the heavy, responsible tasks laid upon us by Jesus Christ for the good of his Father's children. Surely we ought to be blessed, rewarded and entitled to recognition. A chosen people should not indulge in the thought that God's whole attention is absorbed in watching over and caring for a favored few. Let the righteous of all nations rejoice in God's grace and exult in his justice, which means that the righteous of all other nations have a share in the teachings of the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

Brethren and sisters, I know we have had a great deal of praise. I have been deeply interested in what has been said—that we are the best people on earth. But a short time ago, a brother of mine, whom you know, a humble man at the wicker gate of the temple block, went down to Los Angeles to look around and see what the prospects were, as he was given a vacation. He is a gardener and a great lover of flowers, and he has helped beautify a great many places here in the city. He was working for a great florist down there in Los Angeles, and they sent him to a multi-millionaire's home, and he worked there six weeks. This wealthy man came out and talked to him. Kimball had no fear and told him he was a "Mormon." The man looked at him and said: "Well, I am awfully glad to have a 'Mormon' work on my place." Kimball told him he was a son of Heber C. Kimball. The man said, "Do you know that those old men, (that is the way he phrased it) Brigham Young, and Heber C. Kimball and those pioneers were the greatest people on earth, and we love to have"—he was speaking generally of the "Mormon" and Gentile—"these Utah people come down here, because they are honest, because we can trust them." And he said, "I do not know but what the Gentiles associating with the 'Mormons' has helped the former to be honest. That is the testimony of a multi-millionaire. I saw mighty few "Mormons" down there—if there were very many they did not make themselves known.

I know I have spent a good deal of time, brethren in trying to live. About Christmas, 1923, I thought I was dying. I had a hemorrhage of the lungs, and I bled quantities of blood. I thought I had hardly a pint left in me. I sent for my wife and handed her the keys to my safety box and said: "Here is the key to my safety box; there is nothing in it. God bless you." I then sent for a great specialist to examine me and see what was the matter. He examined me and said, "How old are you?" I said, "I am seventy years old." "Well," he said, "I thought you were forty-seven." I replied, "If that is the way you look at it, I am going to get out of here," and I did. I lay in bed for two weeks, and I thought of a testimony, and I could not get it worded right; I could not link it together. I knew how I felt, so one day I got the Sunday edition of the San Francisco Examiner, a wonderful paper, and there I found my testimony, worded as I would have liked to word it, as I did not know what was going to happen to me, but if I die tomorrow, which I do not intend to do, this is my testimony:

"For he was the Son of God."

The divinity of God was in Christ, in his life and his death, and the power that he has wielded among men for their good, since his death, all prove it.

He was God's Son, and he recognized all men as his brothers.

"The common people heard him gladly." He was their friend, their brother, he walked with them, talked, lived and worked with them, all the few short years of his life. And in the end he died for them.

He suffered physically and mentally as they suffered, his Gethsemane was torture of the spirit, and his Golgotha was dreadful torture of the body.

No miracle was done to save that noble spirit from the horror of physical pain. He not only lived and died but suffered fearful agony for the millions of his brothers then living, and untold millions of those brothers that were to come.

* * * * *

He knew the agony that was preparing for him.

"Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me, nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt."

That was the Son of God, humbly pleading with his Father.

"Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

That was the Son of God, reconciled to his Father's will.

* * * * *

Who dares deny that Christ is the Son of God, he to whom all men and all women were as brothers and sisters, who, himself sinless, forgave the sinful woman that sinful men would have stoned to death?

He who spoke first for the children, for the poor, for the sick, whose acts of miraculous power were all for the hungry, the dying or the dead. He was the Son of God.

* * * * *

One "scientific historian" will tell you that in all the world's authentic histories there are but few words actually written concerning Christ—in real history. That may be true. But for nearly two thousand years his name has made history. It has been written on every page, in the laws, in the lives, the hearts and histories of men.

Ten thousand steeples pointing to the sky, hundreds of millions whose daily prayers end, "For Christ's sake. Amen," prove his mission.

Millions of the poor and unfortunate, all over the earth, who turn their eyes to heaven, trusting and finding comfort in his goodness and in his promises—all these are more important than any books of ancient history, any testimony of changing men.

* * * * *

Christ was the Son of God, he was his own witness, and his works are the proof of his divinity. His spirit covers the earth and gradually redeems it from barbarism, as the sunlight covers the earth and gradually dissipates the night, when the morning sun rises.

The learned historian assures you that, admitting the historical existence of Christ, it is certain that he was a poor youth among poor people, never in his life able to read or write,

Let that pass, let the "higher criticism" make the most of it. He could read the mind of God and interpret it to wicked men. He could read the hearts of children, of poor women, and share their sufferings, and die to help them.

He was indeed the Son of God.

* * * * *

What was his work on this earth? It was a work of redemption, of light-giving, of comfort, justice, mercy, and above all, forgiveness.

Dying in agony, his poor body hung upon the cross, nails in his feet and hands, and thorns piercing his head, he turned his eyes to heaven and said, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Were not these the words of God's true Son?

* * * * *

Nineteen hundred and twenty-three years ago he came into this world, bursting and tearing asunder the ancient high wall of hatred, cruelty, slavery, misery.

His glory came to the world like the sun shining through the clouds upon a troubled sea at the end of a great storm.

His name is the hope of millions. His teachings, of which we are all so unworthy, possess the power that will one day raise us above our present low condition of selfishness, meanness, hatred and war.

"Go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me."

Those were the words of God's Son, words unheeded yet among men who still take from the poor to increase their own store.

But the words were spoken, the power behind them can never die, can never be supplanted.

"Woman, where are those thine accusers? Hath no man condemned thee?"

"No man, Lord."

"Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more."

Those words were spoken by the Son of God.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

"Take heed that ye hurt not one of these little ones, for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

That was said by the Son of God.

* * * * *

Where do we find words of comfort for the poor, the unfortunate, the humble among God's children?

"Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

"Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled.

"Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God,

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

Christ was the Son of God and his teachings will rule this world. "Rejoice and be exceeding glad" on this return of the season of promise, this opening of another year."

God bless you, my brethren and sisters, God bless his Church forever, and his servants, and may God inspire them to be prophets, seers and revelators unto the children of men, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A baritone solo, "Come unto me," was sung by J. H. Wood.

ELDER TAYLOR NELSON

President of the Oncida Stake of Zion

My brethren and sisters, I assure you that I feel very keenly the responsibility of this moment, yet I am happy to know that I am counted worthy of membership in this great Church, and that through the mercy and blessing of my heavenly Father I enjoy the testimony of the divinity of his work.

I was impressed yesterday with the singing of that remarkable hymn by Parley P. Pratt:

"Lo, in Cumorah's lonely hill
A sacred record lies concealed."

As the choir rendered the final hymn the spirit of it bore testimony to me again, as it has done on many occasions, and I now appreciate the divinity of that great work which was translated by the gift and power of God through the Prophet Joseph Smith, from the ancient records delivered to him by the angel, Moroni.

I have never seen Moroni, but I know that such a man lived. I have never seen the records from which the Book of Mormon was translated, but I know that such records were in existence. I know today that the Book of Mormon is divine. I have put to test the promise made by the writer of one of the closing chapters of that great record, wherein he said,

"And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost."

I have put this to the test, and I know, through the whispering of the still small voice, that the Book of Mormon is divine. I know also, which would follow naturally, that he who was instrumental in the hands of our heavenly Father in translating that record was a prophet of God.

This is my testimony to you here today, that I know this record is divine, and I know this work is our Father's work, established upon the earth in these latter times for the salvation and exaltation of his children. This is my testimony, which I bear in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOHN W. HART

President of the Rigby Stake of Zion

I desire an interest in your faith and prayers this morning, that I may be supported by the Spirit of the Lord in the few moments that I stand before you at this time.

I have enjoyed this conference, as I always do enjoy them, and have rejoiced in the opportunity that I have of attending them and associating with you, my brethren and sisters, and those whom the Lord has chosen to direct the affairs of his Church in the earth today. I rejoice that we have men who are not afraid to speak the truth. No honest man sitting in the audience and looking into the faces of the General Authorities of the Church can help but say, that they are sincere and honest.

I was forcibly struck this morning at a meeting of the Board of Education by a remark made by Elder David O. McKay, wherein he drew a little comparison to drive home his point. He said, "Latter-day Saints should not be ashamed of the gospel, nor should they hesitate to stand up and defend it at every opportunity."

Last June it was my privilege to go to the city of Cleveland, I attended a convention there. My son, who was presiding over the Northern Indiana conference, came down and visited a few days with me. The business men were very kind to us. They went out of their way to do everything to make our visit pleasant while we were in that city. They would send their automobiles around to our hotel and place them at our disposal, in order that we might enjoy our visit with them. I told some of them that I did not want them to do that, that I was busy. I thanked them, however. But I said I would like to go out to the Kirtland temple, if it was agreeable to them. "Certainly," they said, and at the appointed hour they came, not only the chauffeur of the car but three of the business men of Cleveland, and they in company with the Governor of our own state and one or two others journeyed to Kirtland, and we were escorted through the temple by an elderly gentleman there, who said he was a patriarch in the church. Of course, the main thing that was talked about by him was in the nature of a criticism of the "Brighamites" and the Latter-day Saints in general. We listened to him, we were his guests, and when we left the building I turned to him and said: "My friend, I want you to know that I preside in one of the stakes of Zion. Now," I said "I have listened to you. Why didn't you tell us what happened in this building? Why didn't you tell us that the Savior appeared here to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and that Elijah appeared and conferred the keys of the turning of the hearts of the fathers to the children, etc.; and that Moses appeared and conferred the keys of the gathering; and Elias appeared also? Why didn't you tell something about that?" "O, well," he said, "we only do that when people ask us." I said "Well, I am going to tell these gentlemen."

We left the building and went to the car. "Now, my friends," I said, "I do not want you to get our Church and this church confused. There is a vast difference between us," and I proceeded to tell them what happened in that temple, and why it was of so much importance to us in the history of the Latter-day Saints. And before I got through one of the gentlemen from Cleveland said, "Why, Mr. Hart, you know more about it than this man does." "I most certainly do, because he doesn't know anything about it."

We journeyed to the city and about nine o'clock my son and I retired to our room, and were going to retire for the night. I had taken my coat and collar off, when a knock came at the door. I answered it, and there were the three gentlemen who went with us to Kirtland. They came to my room. They wanted to excuse themselves and tried to leave, but I insisted that they stay, and assured them the only reason that I was going to retire was that I didn't have any other place to go that night. They came in, and, of course, I knew what they wanted. I had given them a pretty good talk at noon that day, and they came there and inquired most earnestly regarding other things pertaining to our Church, and I had the privilege of relating to them some of the fundamental principles of the Church to which we belong. I entertained them there until 12:30, and during our talk I explained to them briefly the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the organization of the Church, etc., and during my talk along that line, at intervals one of the gentlemen raised his hand above his head and said, "Mr. Hart, that is the most wonderful story I ever heard." I said, "It is, it is one of the greatest miracles of modern times." I said, "If we should strip the divine claim from that book, we could not publish it half fast enough for the world to read it." "But," I said, "it is divine, it has stood the test of a hundred years, and we want the people to read it, we are not hiding it from them."

When the time to separate came, I gave them a Book of Mormon, with a distinct understanding and a promise from them that they would read it. Since returning home I have had several letters from them to the effect that the first one had read the book and passed it on to the next one, and that they were enjoying it.

Now, I simply state this, my brethren and sisters, to further testify to the fact that was stated this morning by Elder McKay, that we should not try to hide our light beneath a bushel, because the world is hungering and thirsting after the gospel of Christ, and I thank God that we have leaders here who are able, and not afraid, to present it to them upon every opportunity. It did my heart good when I heard President Grant state in his opening address where he had been, how he had traveled in the world, and visited, and embraced every opportunity that was presented to him to preach the gospel to the children of men wherever he went, and I know that he rejoiced in it, and that the Lord will bless him and every other man who will take this opportunity.

Now, my brethren and sisters, I do not fear for these men. God will take care of them, but I am fearful for myself, and I hope and pray, and do pray continually, that the Lord will keep me in the path of rectitude, that I may be able to endure to the end. And may we all do this, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER LARS OVESON

President of the Emery Stake of Zion

I have rejoiced exceedingly, my brethren and sisters, during this great conference, and I feel it a privilege to have the opportunity to come here upon this great occasion to listen to the inspired instructions that are given from the servants of the Lord.

When we contemplate the wonderful things that have been accomplished in the short period of time since the organization of the Church, ninety-five years ago, we cannot help but realize, it seems to me, that some divine power has operated and guided the Church from its earliest organization until the present time.

In listening to the reports of the advancement and progress that have been made, as in the report that was made by President Grant at the opening session of this conference, and the reports that were made last evening in the Sunday School conference, and the reports that have been made of the Mutual Improvement organization, and in short in every organization of the Church, it has seemed a wonder. It is a wonder to the world, and they cannot understand how it is that a people who have met opposition all the way along the line have been able to advance and progress as they have done. To us, my brethren and sisters, it is clear, because we are engaged in the work of the Lord, and the Lord has guided and directed the movements of this Church and has inspired its leaders from the earliest organization to the present time. So we are not depending upon the wisdom of men; we are not depending upon the strength of men, but we realize and know that we are in the service of the Lord, and that we are working to accomplish the great purposes that he has established in this day and age of the world.

I have been associated with the Church all my life, so to speak. I came to this country in my early boyhood. Though I was born in a foreign land, I have been associated with the people in these valleys of the mountains for more than sixty years, and I have had a little experience and observed a few things that have transpired during that length of time, and I want to say, my brethren and sisters, that every word that has been spoken in this conference has found an echo in my soul, which makes me think that I am somewhere near right.

I rejoice in the testimony of the truthfulness of what is called "Mormonism." I know that it is the work of the Lord; I know that it is the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that if we will live up to our privileges; if we will live up to our duties, brethren and sisters, there is no power can stay our progress, our advancement and our exaltation finally in the kingdom of our God. I rejoice to be here to partake of the spirit which comes to us through these wonderful gatherings. I rejoice to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of this work of the Lord to the world, for I know it is true; I know it is for the uplift and the advancement of the children of God, and I pray that the Lord will help every one of us that we may remain faithful and true, that we may be found valiant workers in the cause of righteousness and help to build up his kingdom upon the earth, which I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JAMES W. LÉSUEUR

President of the Maricopa Stake of Zion

"If I were a voice, a persuasive voice,
That could travel the whole world through,
I'd fly on the beams of the morning light,
And speak to men with a gentle might,
And tell them to be true.

"I'd fly, I'd fly, o'er land and sea,
Wherever a human heart might be,
Telling a tale, or singing a song,
In praise of the right, in blame of the wrong."

My brethren and sisters, I feel that such is the spirit of the Latter-day Saints. Our mission here upon this earth is to preach righteousness.

Coming as I do from the Maricopa stake of Zion, we may have conditions there that are different from some of other stakes. We have a ward there made up of Indians, or Lamanites, and I want to say something in regard to that people. We find that they are the most faithful Saints that we have. For the last ten or twelve years they have been setting an example to us in many things. A report that we had some time ago from that ward shows that one hundred per cent of the members observe the Word of Wisdom and that for the last ten or twelve years they have done one hundred per cent ward teaching; that they set an example in attendance at sacramental meetings, some coming a great distance, walking several miles to attend their meetings.

A little over a year ago we held a conference with them. These good people are not hypocritical. When we asked them to sustain the bishopric, four of the Lamanite women voted against the bishopric. But when we asked them why, after the meeting, they said they would like to meet with the stake presidency and tell them why. So we made an appointment with them. They came and they said, it is because the bishopric did not see that the ward teachers did their full duty. The ward teachers went to their homes, and as they saw them out in their fields, they would say, "How are you today?" and if we said we were all right, they would say, "Well, we must be going on, so we can make one hundred per cent."

Then we asked them what they should do?

"Why," they said, "they should ask us to come into the house, they should sing with us, and pray with us, and then a subject should be assigned to them, and they should treat that subject and tell us something about the gospel, and about Jesus."

We asked them if they would not give the bishopric another chance to make good?

"Why," they said, "an Indian does not forget, and it is hard for an Indian to forgive."

I showed them the necessity of forgiving the bishopric and giving them another chance. They finally said they would, and so the bishopric, who were there and heard what they had to say, promised this people that they would do good work among them, and that the ward teachers would do their full duty. Later on, these sisters came and reported to us that the bishopric was doing an excellent work. The result of that is that the people have been visited in the Indian ward every month faithfully, not only by the teachers but by the bishopric. Last year we had thirteen converts made in that ward. We feel that it has resulted from the excellent work done by these good sisters who made their report.

We are very much favored in the Maricopa stake of Zion in having the privilege of having a temple built in our midst. The work is progressing nicely. We are going to have a wonderful temple there in that pleasant climate, an excellent place for many of the people in this northern country to go in the winter time and do their temple work. This is going to be a very beautiful building, it will probably be a year before it is entirely completed, but it will be something that the entire Church can be proud of. A great deal of good is being done there at the present time. People are coming from all parts of the world to visit that temple, as it is near the main highway from ocean to ocean, and we have a great many visitors. A great many tourists come to that land in the winter time, and they all desire to visit the temple and see the wonderful work done there. It is a great credit to our Church.

My brethren and sisters, this is a wonderful work and the Lord is at the helm, and he is blessing us greatly. We ought to be the best people in all the world. I want to bear testimony to you that I know that the gospel is true, and that this is the Lord's work, and I pray God to bless each and every one of us, that we may be faithful and true to it, which I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Announcement was made by President Heber J. Grant that a military honor parade and program on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of the "Mormon Battalion" monument would be given Tuesday, April 7, 1925, at the Capitol building, Salt Lake City. The public are invited. The program follows:

CLOSING SESSION

The closing session of the conference was held in the Tabernacle on Monday afternoon, April 6, at 2 o'clock.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation."

Elder James P. Jensen, president of the San Luis stake of Zion, offered the opening prayer.

A sacred baritone solo, "Come, Holy Spirit," was sung by Walter A. Wallace.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

I desire to read a few words from the 133d section of the Doctrine and Covenants, the same being a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the month of November, 1831:

PREACHING THE GOSPEL AND THE GATHERING

"Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the Lord your God, and hear the word of the Lord concerning you—

"The Lord who shall suddenly come to his temple; the Lord who shall come down upon the world with a curse to judgement; yea, upon all the nations that forget God, and upon all the ungodly among you.

"For he shall make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of their God.

"Wherefore, prepare ye, prepare ye, O my people; sanctify yourselves; gather ye together, O ye people of my church, upon the land of Zion, all you that have not been commanded to tarry.

"Go ye out from Babylon. Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord.

"Call your solemn assemblies, and speak often one to another, and let every man call upon the name of the Lord.

"Yea, verily I say unto you again, the time has come when the voice of the Lord is unto you: Go ye out of Babylon; gather ye out from among the nations, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

"Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; first upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews.

"And behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: "Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about.

"Yea, let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom; behold and lo, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord.

"Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour.

"Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles flee unto Zion.

"And let them who be of Judah flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house.

"Go ye out from among the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon.

"But verily, thus saith the Lord, let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you; and he that goeth, let him not look back lest sudden destruction shall come upon him.

"Hearken and hear, O ye inhabitants of the earth. Listen, ye elders of my church together, and hear the voice of the Lord; for he calleth upon all men, and he commandeth all men everywhere to repent.

"For behold, the Lord God hath sent forth the angel crying through the midst of heaven, saying: Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight, for the hour of his coming is nigh—"

The balance of the revelation continues in a declaration of the Lord as to his purposes concerning the gathering of the Jews to Jerusalem, and the mighty power which he shall manifest in their delivery; also concerning the restoration of the lost tribes of Israel, and their return. Continuing I shall read from the same section, beginning with verse 36:

"And now, verily saith the Lord, that these things might be known among you, O inhabitants of the earth, I have sent forth mine angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, who hath appeared unto some and hath committed it unto man, who shall appear unto many that dwell on the earth.

"And this gospel shall be preached unto every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people.

"And the servants of God shall go forth, saying with a loud voice: Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come;"

In the same connection I desire to read a few verses from the 88th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, commencing with the 88th verse:

"And after your testimony cometh wrath and indignation upon the people.

"For after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground and shall not be able to stand.

"And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds.

"And all things shall be in commotion; and surely, men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people."

Returning to the 133rd Section again I wish to read in conclusion of these quotations the 60th verse:

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CHURCH IN MISSIONARY WORK

The remarks of our President in the opening session of this conference, and the interesting statistics which he read us concerning not only the affairs of the Church at home, but those in the mission field, awakened in my heart some thoughts and feelings concerning our missionary work and its responsibilities that I should like, if the Lord will help me, to express to you. I think that there is probably no responsibility greater than that which the Lord has placed upon this Church, as indicated in the words I have just quoted, to carry this gospel to all flesh. I believe that the record of the Church reveals the fact that we have looked upon it as one of our chief responsibilities. When the President was quoting the statistics and the amounts expended in the stakes of Zion and in the mission fields, I was impressed when he said that if we should compute the time of the missionaries and the means required to maintain them in the field that that item alone last year would have amounted to approximately two millions of dollars. And then in addition to that, the further statement of the amount which the Church itself has expended in the mission fields approaching another million dollars. No other single item in which the Church is actively engaged, therefore, has received such contributions of service and means.

THE SPLENDID RECORD OF THE PAST

We are certainly giving the greatest of our contributions to discharge this great, sacred and holy obligation which the Lord has placed upon this Church. I think as we look over the past we have some reason to feel grateful that the generations that have preceded us, with us have looked upon this responsibility as of deep importance, and there has not been wanting men, nor women, when they have been called, to go into the world to discharge this great obligation. We learned some few conferences ago from President A. W. Ivins that we had sent into the world approximately sixty thousand missionaries since this Church was organized. Figuring the expense of sending them and maintaining them there, with a very reasonable allowance for the value of their services, I would conclude that in means and in service rendered, this Church has contributed upwards of one hundred millions of dollars in discharging this great obligation to the world. It has not only cost the services of men, it has cost sacrifice on the part of many thousands of wives and mothers and fathers at home who have borne the extra burden. Many have suffered themselves to be denied the necessities of life, in order that they might maintain their sons in the mission field. And not only that, many of these precious sons have given their very lives to the great cause. We have held back nothing from this great call that the Lord has made upon us to carry these glad tidings to all men.

THE LABORS AHEAD FOR THE FUTURE

Splendid as our record has been in the past, I am concerned now about the future. I read in these words that this message must go to all flesh. We have not yet, with all our zeal, with all our earnestness and desire to do this work, reached all flesh. I am looking forward to the fulfilment of that commandment of the Lord on the part of the willing, faithful seventies and elders of this Church.

While Russia, as referred to in this conference, has not yet received this message, and Russia is passing through the crucible, she will come out when she has paid the price, and find liberty and freedom. That is my faith, and when that day comes I hope and expect that we shall have sufficient men and women, if need be, to go into that great nation, that they, too, may hear the glad news, and I believe that countless thousands shall receive it.

I am looking also to the great South American republics, where we have no servants of the Lord today. Only one brief visit has been made there in the history of the Church. Here, too, there are millions waiting the coming of this message. When the Lord is ready he shall inspire his servants to call for men to go and open up these fields. I am not worrying about the time when the call shall come. My only fear is that it shall come all too soon for many of us, who will not be prepared to respond.

The great nation of China, is a heathen nation. I do not expect to see great numbers of people join the Church in such lands, but the obligation is upon us to carry the news to them, for it must go to all flesh, whether they receive it or not; and whosoever shall receive it shall find the full salvation of God, through their obedience and repentance, but they must hear the glad news; otherwise the Lord has not fulfilled his promise to the peoples of the world, and this obligation I say is yet resting upon the elders of this Church.

MATURE MEN AS WELL AS THE YOUNG MUST PREPARE!

I would not deny the splendid young men who are going into the missionary field today the right and the privilege to preach the gospel. They are principally boys in their teens, however. It is the greatest blessing that could come to them. I hope, however, that fathers and mothers shall not be looking upon the missionary field as a mere training school for their boys. Naturally this is a by-product that comes from sending a boy upon a mission. He finds himself and finds the Lord. It is a miracle. The greatest miracle of "Mormonism" today is the miracle of the "Mormon" missionary. The marvelous transfiguration through which he goes under the influence of the Spirit of God, as he goes forward to preach this gospel. But what I am anxious for is that we shall have mingled and associated with these striplings, these youths, more of the mature men of the Church, you men who have heretofore preached the gospel. I know from my experience in the missionary field that your help is needed and is of great value to the younger missionaries. Your wisdom, your courage, your judgment will greatly increase the usefulness and efficiency of these younger men, and I would like to appeal to you, men, who have been upon missions years ago, and are still in good health, to begin to plan in the budget of the next few years to set aside a portion of time and some means which may be accumulated to provide you another opportunity to go into the world and help to discharge this great obligation.

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES

President Ivins, yesterday morning, read to us some scriptures concerning the times of the Gentiles, that in the day when this gospel shall burst forth, and its light should be seen, it should be the beginning of the times of the Gentiles, and that that generation that saw the light come forth should not pass away until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled. I do not know how many years that means, but I do know that there is a limited time, wherein we are given the opportunity to preach this gospel to the Gentile nations, and then cometh the day of the House of Israel. And it seems as if the day of the House of Israel—and President Ivins called our attention to it yesterday—is already dawning. Therefore we must be awake and about our Father's business, that we may stand acquitted before God and before men. I recognize that it is a day of settlement, a day of reckoning. The cry is, "This is the hour of God's judgment." I know the Lord does not wish to send judgments upon an unwarned and unprepared people. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man. This is a day of warning. The ark was the means of salvation in those former days, it shall be the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in these latter-days. God has never let his people go into wickedness, sin and transgression, and into peril, without warning them, and in connection with the warning there has always been the means of escape.

THE GREAT OBJECT IN SENDING MISSIONARIES

There are two great objects we have in mind in sending these missionaries out into the world. There has been scattered, as President Ivins indicated in the scriptures and the prophecies which he read, among the Gentile nations the blood of Israel, and they are to be gathered, one of a city and two of a family, a few here and a few there. They who receive and accept the gospel are the ones in that household who have the blood of Israel in their veins. By some process which I may not understand, nevertheless, it is true, we are to find them. There are many of them yet that we have not found, our own kindred, our own brothers and sisters in our own blessed household. We are anxious to find them. We will discover them in the isles of the sea, in the Old World and in the New World. Many of them are here, for the Lord is calling many of these sons of Israel to the American continent, though they know not why; but he is bringing them to the rising of the brightness of Zion's glory, where they have an opportunity to find the truth, such as they do not have elsewhere. I was impressed with that when I listened to the statistics the President read, that one-half of the missionaries of this Church are in America, where but one-seventh of the people of the world are, and yet here is where the greater number of our baptisms are being performed. The Lord is bringing from the islands of the sea and from the continents of the Old World men and women to this country where they may have better opportunity to hear the truth and embrace it, and then they will be where the Lord wants them. Nevertheless we are to search diligently and then we are to warn them that all men may be left without an excuse, and that we may be under no obligation. It isn't the obligation entirely of the man who happens to have a son, however, it is an obligation resting upon every man and every woman in this Church, and we apportion the missionary calls out among the wards and stakes of Zion, so many per thousand.

DUTY OF QUORUMS AND WARDS IN MISSION WORK

It is the duty and obligation, therefore, of each ward not only to see that its quota is filled and these missionaries are sent into the field, but that they are kept there, and if the finances of the father who happens to have a son in the mission fails him, it ought to be a matter of reproach to a ward that would allow their representative to come home merely because the father of that boy cannot furnish the means. There must be a spirit of co-operation, on the part of the men and women of this Church to discharge this obligation the Lord has placed upon us. I have often thought of some of our professional brethren. I recognize from my experience in the missionary field that these young men that we send out are not always able to deliver the message to certain groups—the educated classes. They feel abashed and ashamed. Like attracts like, and they naturally go to their own kind, where truly we have found the bulk of the members of this Church. Nevertheless, our obligation is to teach this truth to kings, to presidents, senators, governors, bankers, teachers, lawyers, and to men and women in the professional world. And many of these young men feel wholly unqualified. I have felt many times not justified in saying that we had fairly and fully warned men when we have done our best, because our best was not a good presentation always.

THE USE OF SHORT-TERM MISSIONS

Since this Church has offered men the privilege of going on short-term missions to preach the gospel, I would like to see some of our brethren who could not go for a long period of time prepare themselves to go for a shorter period. It is the best vacation in the world that you could take, to go into the mission field for six months and preach this gospel. You would come back physically strong, mentally alert and spiritually recharged, and it would be the greatest blessing that could come to you. I would like to see more of it.

THE JUDGMENTS OF GOD

I do not want to see the judgments of God come upon men, and yet after the testimony, as I have just read, of his servants, shall come the testimony of thundering and of lightning and of earthquakes and peril and disaster. I was impressed two weeks ago as I read the dreadful story of the cyclone that swept through the southern part of the states of Illinois and Indiana, with these words that I have just read. Particularly was I impressed with it because the city of Murphysboro, in Southern Illinois, where one-half of the city was destroyed, and more than two hundred of our Father's children lost their lives, happens to be the very identical city where I preached my first gospel sermon twenty-eight years ago. I had the privilege of tramping over that entire belt of country, where this great disaster swept the land, for over two years without purse and without scrip, preaching this gospel, warning men. A few obeyed, but the majority turned a deaf ear.

A LOVE FOR THE SOULS OF MEN

Do I rejoice to see days of sorrow like those which befell the peoples of this land? No, I feel like weeping, I feel like the Master did as he wept upon the Mount of Olives over Jerusalem that had rejected him. No man can spend, as you men have done, years of your life in the missionary field—I was privileged to labor thirteen years,—and carry this gospel message to the children of men without a love for mankind. I have preached this gospel in sunshine, in dust, through the mud, I have wandered in the cold of winter, as well as the heat of summer, and have sought men. No man can do that who does not have in his heart a love for the souls of men. I love them. I would stay these dreadful days, but I cannot. All I can do is to warn them, that they may repent and find the salvation which we offer them. The wedding is prepared. We are bearers of the invitation calling men to come to the wedding feast. Let us not be slack in continuing to give ourselves freely, as our fathers have done, not only to send our sons, but give ourselves, and discharge this great obligation, which yet rests upon this Church. For I bear witness to you that fast and swift moving events are happening and transpiring, and unless we shall be alert and awake we shall be behind in the Lord's great program. God help us to be fully up to all his expectations of us, and find ourselves fully justified in the efforts that we put forth, though men may reject us, in seeking to bring men unto Christ, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen. ,

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

Patriarch of the Church

It is indeed a wonderful and glorious opportunity to bear the holy Priesthood which has been restored to the earth, and to be a servant of the Lord, to be a bearer of the message of life and salvation. In the brief service which I have been able to render, in the name of the Lord, I have learned that he is very kind and merciful to his children, that he has placed in the Church, officers to take care of every department and phase of his work. In his great Sermon on the Mount the Lord himself comforted the hearts of those in the different walks of life, for he realized that there were men and women in the world who needed comfort and guidance and consolation.

I desire to express my appreciation of the strength the Lord has given to me in his service while officiating for him in further comforting his children in the different walks of life. Day after day, week after week, month after month, individuals, members of the Church from the different walks of life, have been strengthened and encouraged and comforted through a humble ministry which the Lord has placed in the Church. I regret, however, to express the thought that while many seek advice and council and comfort, they do not always follow it. We are very much like other people—we are mortal, we have our weaknesses, and our faults. We are like a good many people in the world, we know much better than we do. We believe in the gospel, but we do not practice it quite as well as we believe it. There are many people in the world who believe the gospel, but they are afraid of the water, or something else; and there are many people who believe in the religion of the Latter-day Saints who are afraid to so express themselves. There are good men and wmen in the world who believe and obey the gospel and receive its comforting and consoling blessings. The Lord inspired the Prophet Joseph Smith to declare these words.

“There is a law, irrevocably decreed in the heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated.”

Therefore, we must learn the law upon which our blessings are predicated and when we render obedience to that law, our blessings will be forthcoming.

In conversation with one of our good sisters who had raised a large family, and had made many sacrifices, for she was the mother of eleven children, I learned that she had never been to the House of the Lord, and so I persuaded her, or attempted to persuade her, to go and encourage her husband to go with her and receive these important blessings. She advised me that she thought she had already done all that was necessary. She had reared her family, and through her faithful labors and sacrifices she had fulfilled what she thought was a good mission, and now she wanted to have some blessings of her own. But I tried to teach her, and did teach her, that her sacrifices and all of her many blessings that she hand enjoyed in the past would come to an end at her death, unless she went and had her blessings sealed upon her by the authorized servants of the Lord, at a place which the Lord has prepared, and that we call his house. I encouraged her to do the right thing that her blessings might be received, and her comfort come in due time; for the Lord has declared that unless we obey his law, which is his word, all vows and contracts have an end at death. Therefore, if this good woman does not seal her vows and contracts, of course, in company with her companion, according to the law of the Lord, which is his word, the blessings which she craves will in time come to an end, and she will not have a claim upon those blessings which her heart desires. Therefore the law which the Lord has established for the comfort, salvation and union of homes, with mothers and fathers and children must be complied with before we can receive these eternal blessings.

I have heard a good many people say: “Well, what is the use of having blessings pronounced? We get our blessings any way, if we live for them.” That is very true, because we must live for our blessings if we get them, but there comes great comfort and consolation from having our blessings both pronounced and sealed upon us by authorized servants of the Lord in obedience to his word and his law. For the Lord has placed in his Church authorized agents to bear his power and his authority not only to pronounce, but to seal these blessings, that the Lord may have an anchor upon the souls of men and women forever, for neither death nor the destroyer will end these precious blessings, but the receiver will possess and enjoy them forever and ever.

And so I appreciate the privilege that has come to me as an humble servant of the Lord officiating in his name, not only encouraging, persuading and urging my brethren and sisters, my fellowmen to come unto Christ, and to serve the Lord and to keep his commandments, but to receive blessings, privileges and opportunities that will never come to an end, because they are of an eternal character and rendered in obedience to the word and law of the Lord. They will belong to them forever, just the same as the children of this good mother I referred to, will belong to their parents, provided they go to the house of the Lord together with those children and are sealed at the altar of the Lord forever, thne death will not separate them, nor will any other power, except the power of sin and transgression; for the Lord has declared that his blessings will come when we obey the laws upon which they are predicated. Only today have I ministered in this important calling for the comfort and blessing of those who are distressed in spirit; many seek blessings for comfort because they have been wayward and indifferent, many because they have not lived up to their privileges in keeping the commandments of the Lord. I regret to say that too many of us fail to call upon the Lord or his servants until we are in distress, as the song which has been sung has reminded us that we call upon the Lord in our distress. How much more pleased the Lord would be if we would go to him in our gratitude, when we are showered with blessings, in our health and in our vigor and in our usefulness, rather than go in distress and sorrow, at the eleventh hour of our distress, perhaps!

And so I would like to bear my testimony, my brethren and sisters, to the kindness and mercy of the Lord to his children, to the members of his Church, those who have come into his fold. I know that the Lord does comfort those who seek him, in faith and in true devotion, and that the blessings will come to those who render obedience to the commandments and the laws upon which their blessings are predicated. I have witnessed the joy and the great comfort and satisfaction that have come to the hearts of fathers and mothers when they have received their blessings in the house of the Lord. I have also heard many testimonies of my brethren and sisters who have declared in their humility and in their faith that the Lord has heard their prayers, that he has fulfilled the promises pronounced upon their heads through the servants of the Lord, because they have rendered obedience to the laws which govern their blessings.

Now my brethren and sisters, I exhort you to look upon the gospel in all of its phases in a practical sense; learn the laws upon which your blessings are predicated, for they are simple enough and will be made clear to your understanding if you seek to know them. Let me exhort you also to hold yourselves in keeping with the commandments of the Lord, concerning the laws of health known to us as the Word of Wisdom. I should like to refer you, both old and young, to the many examples that are written in the old scriptures as well as to the lives of those who are before you today in the ministry as general and local authorities of the Church, these men who are here before me today, the bearers of the Priesthood, the standard bearers in the stakes and wards of the Church, men who are free from the contaminating influences of the world, from habits that would prevent the reception of the precious blessings of God, men whom we believe and know to be clean and upright in their habits through observing the teachings of the gospel, and the laws of God which bring to them the joy, the comfort and the satisfaction of knowing that they are keeping his commandments and receiving his blessings.

Among the examples recorded in ancient times I should like to refer you to the example given us by that Hebrew character who was taken from his home in Jerusalem with three other Hebrew boys at the time of the destruction of the temple and the capture of Jerusalem under the Babylonian chief. Daniel was taken to Babylon as a captive with the intention on the part of the great chief to feed and care for him well that he might grow up and become a wonderful and worthy servant, coming from the best and choicest of all the Hebrew families, but the boy refused the food that was offered him, because he had learned that it would defile his body and make it unfit for the blessings of the Lord. And so if you will read the story of his life to the very end, you will see a complete fulfilment of the promise of the Lord that is made to you and to me and to all Israel who will obey the commandments of the Lord concerning the Word of Wisdom; for Daniel was able to find hidden treasures of knowledge, and he was able to pass by the destroying angels; for when he was placed in the lions' den and the king watched during the night and at the dawn of the morning shouted out to Daniel to know if he was still alive, and Daniel answered back:

"O king, live for ever.

"My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me."

I pray God to bless you, my brethren and sisters, bless all the officers and members of the Church, in all the stakes and wards of Zion, and in the mission fields, and in all the places and capacities which the Lord has placed his work, that his name and work may be honored and glorified, that his children may receive his blessings through learning and obeying the laws upon which the blessings of the Lord are predicated, both spiritual and temporal.

God bless you my brethren and sisters, throughout all the Church, and throughout all the land, that his peace may be in your homes, in your dwelling places and his blessings be upon your fields and flocks, that you may not forget the Lord, for he will not forget you, so long as you are true and faithful in keeping and observing his commandments, and I bless you my brethren and sisters, by the authority which the Lord has given me to bless all Israel, that peace and health and happiness may be in your homes, until your mortal missions are finished, and I do it humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

"Open the Gates of the Temple," was sung by William Russel.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

Of the Council of Seventy, and President of the California Mission

I do not suppose, my brethren and sisters, that anyone in attendance at this general conference of the Church has had as trying an experience as I have had during these meetings.

The President, in calling upon the brethren to address the conference, has gone from stand to stand. I know the brethren that occupy the stand that I have the honor to sit in, have felt several times that they were about to be called upon to speak, only to discover that they were mistaken. My companions for the past three days have been taken from either side of me as they in turn have been called to speak, and now at the last moment I am to have the pleasure after speaking for a brief time of sitting without any further anxiety for a few minutes during the closing moments of this general conference. It does create in the minds of men who are called upon to address these great assemblies a very great feeling of anxiety. President Charles W. Penrose upon one occasion made a remark of that character and heaved a sigh of relief when he came into one of the stake conferences, here in the city, and expressed to me personally the pleasure he felt when he thought that he would be under no responsibility to address the people. There were other brethren who had been especially appointed to attend that stake conference and the responsibility of speaking would be upon them. I have heard President George Q. Cannon in his life time more than once make a similar declaration. You are all acquainted with the fact that it is quite a common thing for these brethren who belong to the presiding authorities of the Church to intimate when they stand up before the people that they have a feeling of anxiety, and desire the help and the assistance that can be given by the congregation through their faith and their prayers.

I am very happy, my brethren and sisters, notwithstanding the rather trying experience that I have had during the conference, to say that my spirit is in harmony with the teachings that have been presented during these meetings. I respond in my soul to the testimony and teachings and information imparted by President Heber J. Grant in the opening meeting, and as I have listened to the brethren who have been called upon to speak to the people I have felt in my whole being that I could say Amen with all my heart to the counsels and testimonies that have been delivered.

I have the pleasure, my brethren and sisters, of laboring as a missionary in California. The mission covers the state of California passed away considerable anxiety because of sickness. We have had in that mission during the year that has just passed an average of about one hundred and twenty-five missionaries. Of this number I believe at the close of last year, or at the opening of this year, there were about thirty-nine lady missionaries, and the balance of the force is made up of young men such as have been spoken of here during these conference meetings. I am happy to say that these men and women, speaking in a general sense, at the present time are in the enjoyment of good health. There are some minor troubles, but no serious illness. We have had, however, during the year that has passed away, considerable anxiety because of sickness. We have had both men and women who have submitted to surgical operations for appendicitis, and in one or two instances the cases were very serious, and the surgeons and nurses that waited upon them despaired of their lives. We are very thankful, however, that through the blessings and mercy of the Lord our God the lives of the missionaries who have been thus in danger have been spared, and they have been raised up to health and vigor and have been able to again take up the prosecution of the work resting upon them as ambassadors of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I would like to say to bishops and stake presidents, that I fear at times there is not sufficient attention given to the physical condition of men and women who are being called to labor as missionaries. I think possibly in some instances there is a wrong impression in the minds of some people regarding the nature of missionary work. I am quite satisfied that some times there is a feeling that an individual who is run down can be called into the mission field and there recuperate. Such a thought I am sure is a very great mistake. Missionary work, when it is faithfully performed, is hard work, the strongest men, and the strongest women, who come into the California mission find in the performance of their missionary duties that they have all that their physical powers will enable them to do; and it is a very great mistake to send into the mission field, either men or women, who are not possessed of good physical power, for they not only are unable themselves, as a general thing, after prosecuting their work for a brief season to continue that work, but they demand also attention of other missionaries in nursing them and this interferes with the service that the healthy missionary might render. I am very glad to have received the information since coming to attend this conference that more careful attention than ever before is being given to the health of missionaries to make as sure as possible that they are in good physical condition before they go out to preach the gospel.

The California mission is probably unlike any other mission. Some eighteen months ago, or such a period, the presiding authorities of the Church felt that it would be for the advantage of the work of the Lord to organize a stake of Zion in that mission. That is something that has not taken place heretofore in any mission field. In the city of Los Angeles, which is the most populous part of the California mission, a stake of Zion was organized. That stake, I am glad to say, has made very splendid advancement. It was organized with six wards and three branches, and it has grown now to have seventeen wards and twenty-two Sunday schools. I do not suppose that in any other mission it can be said that there was received and recorded, during the year 1924, over thirty-six hundred Church members, who had come in from adjoining communities from the stakes and wards here in Utah and Idaho, and from Arizona and from other sections, but that is what took place in the California mission last year. Over thirty-six hundred members were recorded in the books of the stake of the mission, who had come from other sections of the country. I do not suppose that thirty-six hundred Latter-day Saints actually came into California during the year. Possibly many of them had been in the state for a considerable period of time, some of them no doubt may have been there for some years, but they have only now been recorded as members of the Church on the records of the mission or on the records of the stake.

There have also been a large number who have been transferred. probably thirteen hundred or fourteen hundred Church members have received their certificates of membership during the year, and have been transferred to other communities. This, of course, causes changes in officers. There have already been in the Los Angeles stake since its organization changes in four or five different bishoprics, and there have also been a number of changes in the high council. This is brought about by the fact that the Latter-day Saints who are in California as a general thing are not in the condition as home owners indicated by the report made by President Grant at the opening of this conference. They are not home-owners. There is but a very small percentage of the members of the Church in the California mission who own their own homes. They are wage-earners as a general thing. They are living, many of them, in rented apartments, in fact the great majority of them are in rented apartments, and many of them are living in furnished apartments, and it is an easy matter when one doesn't own a home if he hears that there is a little better prospect in some other section to pick up his grip and call for a drayman to take his trunk to the railroad station and go elsewhere. I am glad to say, however, notwithstanding the large number of people who have come to California who are Latter-day Saints, there has been work as a general thing in the past for all of this great influx of people as well as for tens of thousands who have come from all parts of the nation. At the present time, however, conditions are not as desirable as they have been, from a working point of view in the past.

I would recommend that if there are any Latter-day Saints who have the thought in their minds of coming to California for the purpose of finding employment they be a little slow in putting such thought into execution. I think I can safely say that there are more men in California at the present time than there is work, and that there are many idle men in California. Rents are very high. California is a wonderful state, a beautiful country, a desirable place for habitation in many respects, but it is not a very desirable place for men and women to come to who do not have money in their pockets, and I would like to say that Latter-day Saints without money will be altogether better off, and they will be altogether safer, in these well-established communities where the people own their homes, than to migrate to California.

We have the experience in the California mission of having our headquarters in the city of Los Angeles and that is also the headquarters of the Los Angeles stake of Zion. We are performing missionary work just in the same manner that we conducted missionary work before the stake was organized. I think that our missionary service has been of very great value to the stake organization, for the local brethren who are tied up with their employment could not have gone out among the people and looked up these hosts of strangers and have established the organizations that have been established by the labor of the missionaries, and which has increased the organizations within the stakes from nine to twenty-two, as I have stated.

There are at the present time about six thousand members in the Los Angeles stake of Zion. There are a little less than nine thousand members in the California mission outside of the Los Angeles stake of Zion, so that we have there some fifteen or sixteen thousand enrolled members of the Church within the California mission, when we include the membership of the Los Angeles stake. There are thousands possibly in the state that are still unknown to us. We also have gone out into the Maricopa stake by the expressed desire of the bishopric of the Phoenix ward and the presidency of the Maricopa stake, and have performed some very effective missionary work in the city of Phoenix. Phoenix is the capital of the state of Arizona. I am glad to say that I recently heard from the lips of Bishop Price the very highest words of praise and commendation for the splendid services that were being rendered in the city of Phoenix, by California missionaries who through their labors are strengthening the hands of the bishopric, and drawing many strangers into the meetings. He reported to me that they had more strangers coming to their meetings since the last missionaries were sent into that city than had ever been in the habit of attending their meetings before.

We have also gone out during the same period into the northern part of the state, and at times have labored to some extent in communities that form part of the Snowflake stake of Zion, but we have only gone there by the invitation and with the full permission of the authorities who preside over that stake. These things, I take it, are a little different to conditions that prevail elsewhere in the missions here in the United States or in other sections.

I am proud to be a missionary, my brethren and sisters. I am proud of my companionship. The young men and the young women who make up the missionary corps of the California mission, are not experienced men, they are not experienced women. They come into the mission with a very great degree of anxiety. They come oftentimes wondering whether they have any right or authority to speak in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, whether they have authority to administer the sacred and holy ordinances of the gospel, but thanks be to God through faithful labor almost without a solitary exception they have found God, they have learned that by keeping the commandments of God, our heavenly Father is not very far from any one of us. They have received manifestations of the Spirit of God, they have laid their hands upon those who have been seriously afflicted and the Lord our God has heard their humble prayers, and by his mysterious power he has healed those who have been afflicted. He has poured into their souls understanding in relation to the doctrines of the gospel, until they have soon come to be able to stand upon their feet and bear witness of the truth as it has been revealed in the dispensation in which we live. And they are not doubting, they are full of conviction, they are full of understanding, they are full of determination, they are full of humility, they are full of willingness and ready to go and come and anxious to labor to the very best of their power that the message of the gospel may be preached among the people. We are trying to impress upon the minds of men and women with whom we come in contact that there has indeed been this revelation of the gospel that has been spoken of so frequently during our conference meetings, that in our own time the heavens have been opened, that the Lord our God has made his appearance, with his Son, our Redeemer, and that by the sending of holy angels he has conferred authority upon men to call people to repentance and that the missionaries speak legally in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. The missionaries believe that they have that authority, and in the fear of God they are going among the people, calling men and women to repentance, expounding to them the principles that have been revealed, ready and willing and anxious to administer to them the holy ordinances of the gospel, if people will believe and repent. I am glad to be one with them.

My soul is filled with joy and thanksgiving and praise. The hands of the servant of God who presides over this Church were laid upon my head before I went to California, and blessings were pronounced upon my head that it seemed to me when I commenced my ministry in the midst of that people never could have fulfilment, yet

I stand here before this great congregation this afternoon and bear witness that in the mercy and providence, and through the power of God, he has fulfilled marvelously the promises that have been placed upon my head, and I feel that I am under obligation to give my service to my Father in heaven for the building up and advancement of his work.

God gave me my life in the days of my young manhood, and raised me up from a deathbed by his power, and I have covenanted with my Father in heaven upon many occasions that I would try to manifest appreciation for the marvelous power that was manifest in my own behalf when he raised me from that condition of death. I know that Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God. I know that this Church is in very deed the Church of Jesus Christ. I know that the power and authority of the Priesthood has been conferred upon men, and that by that authority men minister and expound and preach the gospel of the Redeemer of the world. Jesus Christ himself taught that it was in vain to teach for doctrine the commandments of men—"In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." That is just as true today as it was when those words fell from the lips of the Lord Jesus Christ, and we are not teaching the commandments of men, we are teaching the doctrines that have been revealed by the Lord, and we are under obligation to teach and maintain the truth. God help us to do it, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LAWRENCE G. KIRKMAN

President of the Twin Falls Stake of Zion

This is a new experience for me. I am rather young in my office and rather young in the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and yet in humility I appreciate this wonderful privilege. It seems to me that the Latter-day Saints have experienced a multitude of sensations during this conference. It seems to me that never in my life have I had so many thrilling sensations during meetings of a conference as I have had during the last two or three days.

We live in sunny southern Idaho, an altitude a little lower than this, and a wonderful climate of about sixteen or seventeen hours of sunshine. In the summer time the sun rises at about 5:00 o'clock in the morning and at the longest day we have a most glorious sunset at about 8:20 in the evening. Perhaps that would be strange to you people in the mountains, but where we live there is scarcely a mountain either east or west of us, but some small mountains south and north; therefore the sun comes almost at is does in the east, from the ground, and sets in the ground in the west in the evening. We have been blessed wonderfully, it seems to me, in this splendid country, with the most wonderful soil, I think, in the United States, the most productive land

I have ever seen, and it is undoubtedly a selection of the best people from all over the United States, progressive men who have been willing to pioneer, leave their homes and their business and risk their fortunes in a new country. Such people seem to comprise the personnel of this country, and I have had a great deal of pleasure in explaining the gospel of Jesus Christ to a number of these broad-minded, sensible men. There is not the prejudice there that you would expect in a country of this kind. I believe we are treated almost as generously as any other church in that locality.

About eighteen years ago when we moved to Idaho, if you will pardon the personal reference, we had a membership of about two hundred people in the city of Twin Falls. Today we have two thriving wards, one with a Sunday school of two hundred twenty-five to two hundred and fifty members, and another Sunday school with about one hundred sixty or one hundred seventy-five members. A number of good Latter-day Saints have gathered in that locality and are making their homes there, and with the best prospects, and I feel that the Latter-day Saints have been fortunate indeed to cast their lot there. The gospel of Jesus Christ, it seems to me, is dearer to the people there than in other communities where I have lived. I can safely say there is not a member of the stake presidency, high council or any other stake officer who does not observe the Word of Wisdom. There perhaps are two or three stake members who do not pay a full tithing. I say this very humbly without the least degree of boasting, because I feel that the atmosphere in which we live is rather conducive to that condition, that we are forced to live the gospel of Jesus Christ because of the demand made of us by our neighbors, and it is a good thing, and the missionary element which President McMurrin has just mentioned is very noticeable there.

I wish the President would see fit to send missionaries into that country—the greatest missionary field in the world. I have traveled many days and many nights, sometimes for weeks, without an opportunity of preaching the gospel to a single soul during my missionary labors, but in Twin Falls every day we could have hundreds of opportunities. Men are commencing to inquire about the gospel; they are reading the Book of Mormon. We are giving out a great number of tracts, and I wish we could have ten or fifteen missionaries constantly to help us in that splendid field.

I pray for the success of the Church of Jesus Christ. I pray that the gospel may spread and that the honest in heart may gather out, that they may have this thrill that you people have been experiencing during the last two or three days. That sensation is not known to the person outside of the Church. He may seek other thrills and other experiences that are sometimes unwholesome. God bless us that we may cultivate and enjoy these pleasing, happy, stimulating thrills that will make men and women better. I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HARRY L. PAYNE

President of the St. Joseph Stake of Zion

My beloved brethren and sisters, I assure you it is with a feeling of timidity that I stand before this vast audience today, and I humbly pray that the few words I may utter may be guided and directed by the Spirit of the Lord. I rejoice in the opportunity that I have of being a humble servant in the work of the Lord. I am indeed grateful for the testimony which I have of the divinity of this work in which we are all engaged. My heart has been touched, and I have been thrilled, during the services of this conference in listening to the wonderful testimonies of our brethren, in listening to the words of inspiration which have been given to us through the power and blessings of the Lord, and his warning, advice, and admonition to this people.

Reference has been made by many of the brethren to the fact that as a people we stand upon our individual testimony. I want to say, my brethren and sisters, also that with this individual testimony there comes an individual responsibility to every one who has named the name of Christ. No one else in all the world can save me but myself. No one can work your salvation except yourself. It is after all an individual work, and we have embarked in the service of the Lord, and we have made covenants with the Lord that we would keep his commandments and do his will. The Master while here on the earth said: "I must do the works of him that sent me, while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." My brethren and sisters, the responsibility of doing this individual work is upon us today, not at some far distant time, and I am wondering, and have wondered, during the services of this conference, how many of us are going home and reduce to practice the admonitions and instructions that have been given us from the servants of the Lord. After all we have each and every one an individual work to perform. I think it was Emerson who said: "No man is born into this world whose work is not born with him." No one is born into the work of God whose work is not born with him.

"There is surely somewhere a lowly place,
In regions of a field so wide,
Where I may labor through life's short day,
For Jesus the crucified."

Surely my brethren and sisters, in the work of God there is a place, there is opportunity for every one of us to do that work which God and Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, our Master and Captain, expects us to do. I am reminded of the words of the poet who said:

"Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be,
For my unconquerable soul."

In the fell clutch of circumstance,
I have not winced nor cried aloud,
Under the bludgeonings of chance,
My head is bloody, but unbowed.
It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul."

God help us, my brethren and sisters, to realize the responsibilities resting upon us individually. May we be able to carry to our wards and stakes the words as they have been given to us from the servants of the Lord, and inspire anew a determination upon the part of our brethren and sisters who have not been favored to be here, to be more faithful in the future than they have hitherto been in the work of the Lord, for I bear you my testimony in humility, in fear and in trembling that I know as I know that I live that this is God's work. I know that Jesus is the Christ, I know that Joseph Smith was and is in very deed a prophet of the living God, and I know that Heber J. Grant who stands at the head of the Church today is God's mouthpiece and prophet. May God help us to realize the responsibilities resting upon us, and to discharge them faithfully and well, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JAMES B. LARSEN

President of the Shelley Stake of Zion

My brethren and sisters, when I came into the meeting this afternoon I met a lady on the grounds with whom I lived when I attended school at Snow Academy, and, of course, I was very grateful and happy to see her, and she said to me: "I suppose when you were living with me you did not think that some day you would be a president of a stake," and I can assure you that I did not think, and had not thought, at that time, that I would ever occupy this position. But I can truthfully say that I am grateful that I have been called to this position, and I hope that I will be able to give real service in this work.

I have a testimony of the truthfulness of this gospel. I know that the Lord hears and answers our prayers. This testimony came to me while I was at that school, the Snow Academy, down at Ephraim, Sanpete county. I remember, on a certain occasion, that I wanted very much for the Lord to hear my prayers, and he did hear them, and all night long, or nearly so, I poured out my soul to him. Finally I went to sleep, and in the morning I awoke with an assurance that has never left me throughout all the years that have passed since that time. I knew somehow that the Lord had heard my prayer, and that my prayer was answered, and it has been answered and fulfilled to the letter. Everything that I asked for in that prayer has been brought about, and I knew that morning, when I awoke after having slept just a very little while, that it would be just as I am telling you that it has been.

I rejoice in being privileged to be in attendance at this conference. Like the other brethren who have spoken, I have been thrilled. My eyes have been filled with tears many times during this conference, and the Spirit of the Lord has borne testimony to me, every fiber of my body has responded and said Amen, and what has been said is true. I add my testimony, my brethren and sisters, to those which have been borne already, that this is the Church of Christ, that this is the work of the Lord that we are engaged in, and I am grateful with you to be privileged to be of service in this great and glorious cause. I know that the Lord can bless us, I know that he can make us equal to whatever call is made of us, and if we will only humble ourselves, if we will only put ourselves in condition the Lord will bless us and make us equal to these responsibilities and duties and calls that come to us, and they are blessings to us.

I am grateful to have the privilege of working with our people. We have a wonderful people, in our section of the country, and my testimony is strengthened in everything I do, and the more I do, and the more I serve, in this Church, the greater becomes my testimony of the divinity of this work.

I leave my testimony with you that this is the Church of Christ, that we are engaged in the service of the Master, and I only hope that I may remain steadfast. I know that the Church can go on without me, and I do know that I cannot go on without the Church; so I hope and pray that I may be able to continue steadfast to the end, because I know that this is the work of God. May God bless us and help us that we may be able to remain faithful to the end, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

CLOSING REMARKS

I desire to express my gratitude and thanksgiving to the Lord for the rich outpouring of his spirit during our conference. It seems to me that we have never had as large an attendance at any other conference within my recollection as we have had during this conference. I feel that all those who have spoken here have been blessed of our heavenly Father. As nearly as I can judge, the people have been deeply interested in what has been said to them and their hearts have responded to the teachings of those who have addressed them during the conference. I regret that we did not have at least another hour, so that I could have announced that during my presidency every stake president has had the privilege of speaking or of uttering a prayer from this stand. As it is, I believe all our 94 stake presidents have had that privilege with the exception of those chosen last year—not more than half a dozen.

SOURCE OF OUR POWER, SUCCESS AND UNITY

I know of nothing that I have enjoyed more in our conference than the brief testimonies of the men who stand at the head of the various stakes of Zion. There was a burning power in those testimonies of their individual knowledge regarding the divinity of this work. It is that personal knowledge, that still, small voice of revelation coming to every honest, prayerful soul, in answer to prayer, which gives the power to this Church. Without this individual testimony, coming as it does to men and women all over the world when they hear this gospel and supplicate God for his spirit, we would not be what we are today—a united people, one in heart and soul, one with God and one with our Savior.

That God our heavenly Father may help us to be loyal and true to him and that we may ever show by our faithfulness, by our honesty to men and women, and by the uprightness of our lives that we are in very deed the servants and handmaidens of the living God, striving for the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, is my earnest prayer.

A PRAYER FOR THE PEOPLE AND THE LEADERS

I leave my blessing with the people who have assembled in this conference, and with all Israel, as well as the honest the world over. I pray God from the bottom of my heart to bless the president of the United States of America, to bless his cabinet, to bless the senators, to bless the representatives, to bless those who stand at the head of all the states of our great country, that they may supplicate their God and their Redeemer for guidance, so that this country may in very deed be under the guidance of the Creator of the universe. This is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder William H. Gallahan president of the Wayne stake of Zion, and the conference adjourned for six months.

President Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing, assisted by B. Cecil Gates. Professor John J. McClellan played the accompaniments, interludes, etc., on the great organ, assisted by Edward P. Kimball, Tracy Y. Cannon, Alexander Shreiner, and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic reports of the discourses were made in the Tabernacle by Franklin W. Otterstrom, assisted by Joseph Anderson; and in the Assembly Hall by Frederick G. Barker.

EDWARD H. ANDERSON, clerk of the conference.

Ninety-Sixth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

FIRST DAY

The 96th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Sunday, October 4, 1925.

President Heber J. Grant announced the opening of Conference at 10 o'clock a. m.

GENERAL AUTHORITIES OF THE CHURCH PRESENT

Of the First Presidency: Heber J. Grant, Anthony W. Ivins and Charles W. Nibley.

Of the Council of the Twelve: Rudger Clawson,* George Albert Smith, George F. Richards, Orson F. Whitney, David O. McKay, Joseph Fielding Smith,† Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, Melvin J. Ballard, John A. Widtsoe.

Presiding Patriarch: Hyrum G. Smith.

Of the First Council of Seventy: B. H. Roberts, J. Golden Kimball, Rulon S. Wells, Joseph W. McMurrin, Charles H. Hart, Levi Edgar Young, Rey L. Pratt.

Of the Presiding Bishopric: Sylvester Q. Cannon, David A. Smith, John Wells.

OFFICERS AND OTHER AUTHORITIES PRESENT

Church Historian and Recorder: Joseph Fielding Smith and the following assistants; Andrew Jenson, B. H. Roberts, A. William Lund.

Presidents of stakes with their counselors were well represented from the ninety-four stakes of Zion, and many other prominent officers representing the quorums of the Priesthood; also general, stake and ward officers of the Church auxiliary organizations were present.

Mission Presidents were in attendance as follows: B. H. Roberts, Eastern States; John H. Taylor, Northern States; Samuel O. Bennion, Central States; John M. Knight, Western States; Joseph W. McMurrin, California; Brigham S. Young, Northwestern States; Rey L. Pratt, Mexico; Joseph Quinney, Jr., Canada; John G. Allred, North Central

*Reed Smoot, absent in Washington.

†James E. Talmage was absent, presiding over the European Mission.

‡Junius F. Wells, absent in the East.

States; Chas. A. Callis, Southern States, and Benjamin Goddard, Bureau of Information, Temple Block, Salt Lake City.

All available seats, and all spaces where people could stand, were occupied. Others were gathered in the Assembly Hall and Barratt Hall where overflow meetings were held. The services in the Tabernacle were broadcast and sent by radio to the large crowds gathered on the lawns on the Tabernacle grounds.

President Grant announced that the choir and congregation would begin the services by singing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet." Following the singing, in which all took spirited part, the opening prayer was offered by Elder Hyrum G. Smith, presiding Patriarch of the Church.

The choir and congregation sang: "The morning breaks the shadows flee."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I think the hymn to which we have just listened is entitled to the place it occupies in our hymn book, namely, the first hymn—the place of honor. It was written by the late Apostle Parley P. Pratt:

A FIRST PLACE POEM

"The morning breaks, the shadows flee;
Lo! Zion's standard is unfurled!
The dawning of a brighter day,
Majestic rises on the world.

"The clouds of error disappear
Before the rays of truth divine;
The glory bursting from afar,
Wide o'er the nations soon will shine.

"The Gentile fulness now comes in,
And Israel's blessings are at hand;
Lo! Judah's remnant, cleansed of sin,
Shall in their promised Canaan stand.

"Jehovah speaks; let earth give ear,
And Gentile nations turn and live,
His mighty arm is making bare,
His cov'nant people to receive.

"Angels from heaven and truth from earth,
Have met, and both have record borne;
Thus Zion's light is bursting forth,
To cheer her children's glad return."

I earnestly desire the faith and prayers of this vast audience to assist me in that which I may say to you today. I sense the great responsibility of addressing so large an audience—for this building is filled to overflowing—and I desire that my remarks shall encourage and bless the Saints here assembled.

A TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT PENROSE

Since we last convened in general conference one of the great and faithful laborers in the Church has departed this life—the late President Charles W. Penrose. Perhaps no man in all Israel has written more in defense of the people than Charles W. Penrose, and I believe that the literature from his pen has been more widely distributed than the writings of any other of our leading men. He spent nearly twenty years of his life as a missionary in his native land. As I announced at his funeral, during the last nine months that I presided over the European mission we distributed about eight million pages of the writings of Charles W. Penrose. I have been thrilled by his discourses from this stand, from my childhood days until the time of his last public address. He was inspired in his utterances, and he had the capacity and the ability to make plain the principles of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as perfectly as any of our speakers that I have ever heard. We also rejoice from time to time in listening to the inspired hymns that he has written. We mourn his loss, but we rejoice in the wonderful record of labor and service that he made in the spread of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ at home and abroad.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN'S VISIT TO SALT LAKE CITY

At one of our general conferences some years ago we were honored with the presence of Senator Owen from Oklahoma and Honorable William Jennings Bryan. These gentlemen remained until after the conference session, when an informal organ recital was given in their honor. Perhaps a hundred or a hundred and fifty people were present and following the recital, requests came from different parts of the small audience that Senator Owen and Mr. Bryan make some remarks. They did so, and from the press reports of the occasion we read the following:

HIS ESTIMATE OF "MORMONISM"

"Mr Bryan said the truths he had heard expounded there that day he should endeavor to carry with him throughout life, and he believed that through him many people might hear the truth concerning 'Mormonism,' for he would endeavor to give an exposition of what he had heard in plain truth to the people with whom he associated. Mr. Bryan said he had been undecided about coming to Salt Lake. He had been asked to speak in Los Angeles Monday, but he had obeyed a whim almost and had come to Salt Lake. He did not know why, but now he said he believed it was providential. At any rate he said he had heard truths uttered that impressed him deeply, and he knows that he is better equipped to perform his work in the world for having heard 'Mormonism' expounded. Particularly was he impressed, Mr. Bryan said, with the 'Mormon' belief in the personality of God. It is a beautiful belief, he said, and one by which the world might profit. He referred to the application of the gospel in the lives of the 'Mormon' people, and said such principles applied to the problems of the world would in very deed solve the difficulties with which the world is beset.

He referred to the single standard of morality, as expounded by one of the speakers, and said that in very truth that is a principle that might well be applied to the lives of all men."

HIS LAST SPEECH SHOWS HIS PERFECT FAITH IN GOD

The publishing house of Revell & Co. have published a book containing the last address of William Jennings Bryan, which address was prepared for the celebrated evolution case in Tennessee, but was never delivered. I have had the privilege of reading and re-reading the book. It shows that he had perfect faith in God our heavenly Father and in my judgment it is a very strong defense of the divinity of Christ and of the Godhood of our Father in heaven.

I had the pleasure of visiting with Mr. Bryan, after his remarks following our conference, and he said that he was expected to deliver three speeches in California before leaving, but that he believed the world at large would get more benefit from what he had learned in our conference than the people would have received had he remained in California and delivered those three speeches. He promised to send me a little pamphlet containing his ideas about God. After reading it I remember saying to my family that William Jennings Bryan ought to be a Latter-day Saint, because many of his views were in perfect harmony with our faith. Every Latter-day Saint upon the face of the earth believes in the individuality and personality of God our Father, and of the Lord Jesus Christ. A man who does not so believe has no right to be called a Latter-day Saint. Every Latter-day Saint believes absolutely that God conversed with Joseph Smith, and introduced to him the Lord Jesus Christ as his well-beloved Son.

PRESIDENT GRANT PRESENT AT HISTORICAL EVENTS

During the past six months I have had the privilege of visiting in California and meeting with the Saints there. I had the pleasure of being present at the official opening of Zion's National Park in southern Utah, and of attending the general conference in June of the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement association, and also the Primary association. That great celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement association was one of the grandest that we have ever had. It was a marvelous outpouring of the youth of Israel upon the streets of this, the central city of Zion. The parade was an honor to the Mutual Improvement association and a credit to the Church. I believe that special credit for that parade was due to the insistence of Junius F. Wells, the man called originally by Brigham Young to organize the Young Men's Mutual Improvement association. For the very splendid and orderly way in which it was conducted, credit is due to Governor Mabey and to each and every one of those on the committees. Credit is also due to the various people who took part in speaking, singing, or giving orations or the various contests, musical and otherwise, at the conference. My heart was filled with gratitude and thanksgiving to know that we have today one hundred thousand young men and young women in these Improvement associations interested in laboring with zeal and energy for the advancement of the work of God.

I had the pleasure of being present at a celebration in connection with the great dam that is to be erected at American Falls, where millions of money will be expended and a vast empire redeemed through utilizing the waters of the Snake River. It was also a pleasure later to attend the Burley stake conference. Saturday evening I held a meeting at Oakley at which thirty odd per cent of the people of Cassia stake were in attendance. I first visited that section of the country forty-four years ago this fall, when it was only a branch of the Grantsville ward of the Tooele stake of Zion, numbering perhaps a hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty Latter-day Saints. There are now in that section of the country a number of stakes of Zion, among them the Twin Falls stake. The city of Twin Falls has over eight thousand inhabitants. None of our people were located there at that time, but I rejoice in the wonderful growth of our people and others in redeeming that section of the country.

I was requested to go to Pocatello and dedicate an amusement hall—a fine large building. I thought back to the time when I first went there and met with just a handful of Latter-day Saints in a little rented hall, and when I contemplated the fact that there are now six organized wards of the Church at Pocatello, and thought of the wonderful growth of Latter-day Saints in that section, I rejoiced in the material and spiritual advancement of the people there.

VISITS MANY SCENIC WONDERS

I was requested to send a speaker to hold a meeting at the West entrance of the Yellowstone National Park the Sunday evening that I was at Pocatello. I made several efforts to secure a speaker to go there, but all those to whom I applied were engaged. So I decided to drive from Pocatello myself Sunday afternoon, and attend the meeting at West Yellowstone. The next day and the day following I had the privilege of going through the Yellowstone Park, and then driving down to Driggs, where I held a meeting Tuesday night. Yellowstone Park can be reached from here in a night's ride on the train and the scenery there is among the grandest in all the world.

Upon my return home Thursday I found an invitation from my son-in-law to climb Timpanogos the following Saturday, which I did. From the top of that mountain, the view of Wasatch, Utah, and Salt Lake counties, the cities therein, and other sections of the country in the distance, is one of the grandest that my eyes have ever beheld.

The following Sunday night I left for the scenic wonders of southern Utah, reaching Cedar Monday morning with President Ivins and wife, Sister Grant and my niece. We visited Cedar Breaks and Zion canyon, and the next day going to the Grand Canyon, or at least to the V. T. ranch in the Kaibab forest. We saw between two hundred and three hundred deer that afternoon as we were traveling to this ranch. The next day we visited Point Sublime and saw the Colorado river and that wonderful gorge in which you could drop about one hundred Grand Canyons of the Yellowstone. It is twelve miles wide and one mile deep as compared with the gorge thirteen hundred feet deep and two thousand feet wide at the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone. It is a sight that beggars all description. It is a marvel; it is a wonder! We drove that afternoon to Kanab and in the evening held a meeting with the Saints. I rejoice in the fine meeting house that they have erected there.

The next day we visited Bryce Canyon, and I was more charmed with it than the first time I visited this, one of the scenic wonders of the world. The next morning, Friday, September 11, I parted with Brother Ivins; he returned to Salt Lake by way of Fish Lake, and I returned to Cedar City via Cedar Breaks and was present in the afternoon at the opening of the bridge over Ash Creek, which connects with the Black Ridge. I had the privilege of traveling over the road fifty-nine years ago, when the wagon in which I was riding jumped from one black rock to another, seldom finding any ground to light upon. On that old route which was selected by the pioneers who first went into St. George there is now, over the Black Ridge, one of the finest dirt roads that I have ever had the privilege of motoring over. It is a real delight to travel upon it. The bridge over Ash Creek is certainly a very creditable structure indeed.

In my travels (in Europe) from Scandinavia on the north to Italy, on the south, and from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south, in Hawaii and in Japan, I have witnessed many wonderful scenes; but if they were rolled in together they do not compare with the Yellowstone and these wonderful sights in southern Utah—Bryce Canyon, Cedar Breaks, Zion Canyon and the scenic points from the north rim of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

THE GREAT MISSION OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

Saturday and Sunday following the opening of the bridge over Ash Creek I attended the Parowan stake conference and enjoyed visiting there with the Saints and taking part in one of the conferences.

I rejoice in the wonderful growth in all the stakes of Zion from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south, and in the increase of interest and faith on the part of the Saints throughout the world. I rejoice that there is a cry for more missionaries, from all parts of the world. The one great mission of the Latter-day Saints at home and abroad is to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, to preach the individuality and personality of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to preach the restoration again to the earth of the plan of life and salvation. There is nothing that qualifies a man so much for preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as to study the revelations that the Lord has seen fit to give us in our day. In them he says:

"For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape; and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated. * * *

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled. * * *

"What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and earth pass away, my word will not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same. * * *

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength; that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. * * *

"And now, verily, verily, I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good—yea to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously; and this is my Spirit.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy. * * *

"Seek not for riches but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich. * * *

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, even as you desire of me so it shall be done unto you; and if you desire, you shall be the means of doing much good in this generation. * * *

"Behold, I speak unto all who have good desires, and have thrust in their sickle to reap. * * *

"Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world. * * *

"Say nothing but repentance unto this generation. Keep my commandments, and assist to bring forth my work, according to my commandments, and you shall be blessed."

A CENTRAL THOUGHT APPLYING TO US

This last revelation from which I have read was given to Hyrum Smith, the brother of the Prophet Joseph. He was martyred with Joseph Smith, as you all know, in Carthage jail.

I wish to emphasize one passage in this revelation:

"Behold, I speak unto all who have good desires, and have thrust in their sickle to reap."

So that it applies to you, to me and to all the Latter-day Saints. The central thought in this revelation is that we are to keep the commandments of God. It is reiterated in this one revelation some three or four or five times, that the duty was upon Hyrum Smith to keep the commandments of God and to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The previous revelation from which I quoted was given to the father of the prophet. I will repeat the words of that part of it, as I did before, and I wish to emphasize it with all my heart:

"Behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men." (As I look at this marvelous audience and think of the people on the outside, who are hearing what I say, as well as the audiences in Barratt Hall and the Assembly Hall, surely I can say that this revelation, given to the father of the prophet and the patriarch, has been literally fulfilled.)

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day."

WORTH OF SOULS GREAT IN THE SIGHT OF GOD

I am well aware of the fact that it is tiresome to any audience to listen to a speaker when most of his time is occupied in reading; but when I contemplate the fact that my words uttered here today will be published in The Deseret News, which goes into the homes of the Latter-day Saints from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south; when I realize that what I am saying here is to be published in a conference pamphlet, copies of which will be sent to the missionaries all over the world, then I am far more anxious to have the words of the Lord and the Savior of the world published in this address than to make remarks myself. I desire therefore to read what the Savior said:

"Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; For, behold, the Lord, your Redeemer, suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

"And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance.

"And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth!

"Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people.

"And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!

"And now, if your joy shall be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me!

"Behold, you have my gospel before you, and my rock, and my salvation.

"Ask the Father in my name, in faith believing, that you shall receive, and you shall have the Holy Ghost, which manifesteth all things which are expedient unto the children of men.

"And if you have not faith, hope, and charity, you can do nothing."

This quotation is from the 18th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants.

TESTIMONIES OF RETURNED MISSIONARIES

It fell to my lot two weeks ago today to sit upon the stand in the Assembly Hall and listen to the testimonies of five young men who had just returned from missions, and then listen to the testimony of James H. Moyle, the father of one of those young men. My heart was thrilled with the testimony they bore, and their undoubting knowledge that God lives, that Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of the true and living God, and that the gospel, commonly called "Mormonism" by the world, is in very deed the plan of life and salvation again restored to the earth.

A TESTIMONY OF THE DIVINITY OF THIS WORK

I rejoice in the absolute knowledge which I possess, of the truth as contained in section 76 of the Doctrine and Covenants, which is known among us as "The Vision." I have been thrilled with the testimony there borne by the Prophet Joseph Smith, as I have repeated it itme and time again; and if it were repeated every day of my life, as I supplicate God from day to day, it would do me no harm:

"This is the gospel, the glad tidings, which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us—

"That he came into the world, even Jesus, to be crucified for the world and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness;

"That through him all might be saved whom the Father had put into his power and made by him;

"Who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him." (Thank God they are few and far between.)

"And now, after many testimonies which have been given to him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives!

"For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father.

"That by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

When preaching to those not of our faith, in different parts of the world, I read, whenever I have the opportunity, the articles promulgated by Joseph Smith known as the 13 Articles of Faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I rejoice in reading them and in testifying to those who know not the truth that in very deed those articles have been vindicated; that we believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and I testify to the world that we know that they live, because they appeared to Joseph; that we believe men must be called of God, and we know that they have been called of God in our day, because the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. We believe that men should receive the Holy Ghost, and we testify to all the world that they have received it in this Church. I rejoice that all the gifts and graces, that were enjoyed in ancient days—the speaking in tongues, the interpretation of tongues, the healing of the sick, and kindred gifts as enumerated in the Articles of Faith, are enjoyed by the Latter-day Saints all over the world, wherever this gospel has gone. I rejoice in the wonderful faith and knowledge of the Latter-day Saints regarding the divinity of this work. I am thankful beyond expression that wherever this gospel has gone, in answer to humble, faithful prayers, God has given to individuals all over the world a knowledge of themselves concerning the divinity of this work. What kind of men and women should we be, as Latter-day Saints, in view of this wonderful knowledge that we possess, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God? We should be the most honest, the most virtuous, the most charitable-minded, the best people upon the face of the earth.

That God may help us to live up to the knowledge we possess, that we may grow in the light and knowledge and testimony of the gospel, and that our lives shall be a bright and shining testimony of the divinity of this work in which we are engaged is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

MISSIONARY CALLS

President Heber J. Grant made the following additional remarks at the close of his opening speech, concerning missionaries, and missionary calls decided upon:

OPENING OF SOUTH AMERICAN MISSION

One announcement I intended to make, which undoubtedly all of you have seen in the paper, is that Elders Melvin J. Ballard, Rulon S. Wells and Rey L. Pratt, have been called to go to South America and open a mission there.

APPEAL FOR ONE MAN FROM EACH WARD FOR MISSION IN THE UNITED STATES

In addition to opening a mission in South America, as the President of the Church and the Apostles, we desire to make an appeal to the Latter-day Saints throughout the Church, from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south, that a special effort be made to secure in every ward, from among men of mature years and sound judgment, who have had experience in the preaching of the gospel, one missionary, and where possible more than one, who is financially able to go forth and labor in the mission fields of the United States, Canada or Mexico for at least six months, at his own expense, both going and returning.

MEN OF MEANS AND EXPERIENCE WANTED

Since there are a thousand wards in the Church, this would mean a thousand or more men of experience to perform this labor. We feel that men who have been prospered and blessed should be ready and willing to respond to such a call. We know more than a thousand, more than two thousand, have been so blessed. Many of them may have come to this land without a dollar. Some may have borrowed the money to come here. The parents of some of them were perhaps assisted by what was known as the Perpetual Emigration Fund. Many of these men are now worth twenty-five thousand, fifty thousand, one hundred thousand, and some more than one hundred thousand dollars. We ask, in view of the wonderful material blessings which God has bestowed upon them, that they be and proclaim this gospel, and if they can stay longer, all well and good.

Many of them have gone on trips, time and again, for three and four months, for pleasure only, and spent large sums of their money. Now we want during the coming year to have the greatest of all the great missions that the Church has ever had, given to the people of the world by one or two thousand men who have been thus wonderfully blessed financially—men of experience, ability and testimony. We believe, in view of the wonderful harvests that will be of such great benefit to the people in all sections of the country where the Saints are located, that we are not asking too much when we, as the Presidency and Apostles of the Church, make this great appeal for missionary service.

The choir and Hyrum Christensen, and Alvina Ridges, grand daughter of Joseph Ridges, builder of the Tabernacle organ, sang the hymn, "An angel from on high," after the hymn had been announced and read in full by President Heber J. Grant.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. NIBLEY

Sensing very deeply this great responsibility, I approach it in humility and with a desire in my heart that I may be assisted by your faith and by the Spirit of the Lord.

ENDORSEMENT OF THE MISSIONARY CALL

I wish to endorse most heartily the remarks of our president. He has given an outline of the great work in which we are engaged—the "marvelous work and a wonder" which the Lord said, through the prophets in olden times, that he would bring to pass in the latter days.

I believe it will be an easy matter for the Latter-day Saints to comply with the president's request to send out an additional 1,000 missionaries to the United States and Canada and probably some to Mexico, to labor for six months, or longer, if the missionaries feel that they would like to remain longer, and many of them will, no doubt. I believe it will be the greatest missionary effort that has been put forth in the history of the Church, and no man can foresee the great good that will be accomplished thereby. Some of the wards, many of them indeed, can easily spare two or three mature, competent, capable men who have had experience, and who will not only be willing, but glad to go. We may therefore have considerably more than one from each ward, in which event there will be more than 1,000 missionaries.

MATERIAL PROSPERITY AND BLESSINGS

I rejoice very much in the growth and development of this great work. I am thankful to the Lord for the privilege of assist-ready and willing to respond to the call of the Bishops of their wards and the Presidents of their stakes to go out for six months ing in it. I have been thankful for that high privilege all the days of my life, and I have tried in my weak way to assist wherever I have been called.

President Grant has referred to the wonderful productivity of the soil during the past season. We have never experienced anything like it in our history. The earth is fairly teeming with riches, in its products of every kind, and they are bringing fair prices. May I turn from the very splendid spiritual talk that the president has delivered, to the material things for a few moments. "Mormonism" comprises both the temporal and spiritual; they go hand in hand, but the spiritual is first. If for a few moments, therefore, I talk about temporal things, I hope you will pardon me and that that advice and counsel may not be lost.

CAUTION TO THE PEOPLE TO WISELY CARE FOR THEIR WEALTH

What are we going to do with these great blessings of the earth that the Lord has given and is giving us this season? I was told only a week or two ago that down at Delta, and over in the Vernal country also, where they were threshing alfalfa seed, in fact, wherever it was known that a farmer had a little surplus money, certain individuals were swarming like vultures, seeking to present every sort of scheme imaginable to try to separate that farmer from his money. They were going to make him rich "quick." All he had to do was to invest his little surplus in some scheme which this glib talker could portray in glowing terms, and it would make him rich. The talker did not know how to make himself rich—of course not—but he was going to make the farmer rich.

TAKE COUNSEL BEFORE YOU INVEST IN PRESENTED SCHEMES

I have had some experience with this class of people, and with such schemes. I have been fooled myself more than once, though once ought to be enough for any man. I have tried mines, and I have tried oil—not the flow that Andy Gump pictures, but oil spouting from the ground, assuring riches quickly; and I have been fooled in every one of them. It is my advice, my counsel to you, my brethren and sisters, that you "pass up" the people that come with these get-rich-quick schemes. Otherwise you will be deceived; and you will be disappointed; you will lose your money. If you have surplus means to invest—and I hope you will have, consult the president of the stake, consult the bishop of the ward, consult your banker. Usually the banker in a community is a safe man to consult in respect to investments. There are plenty of safe and sane investments that may be made on which you can be absolutely sure and certain to receive a fair return. So my advice, my counsel is to turn away from men who are trying to make you rich over night. It can't be done.

THE SOUND COUNSEL OF BRIGHAM YOUNG APPLIES TODAY

President Young used to counsel the Saints in his day to invest in something that they knew about, such as land, cattle, sheep and the like. "Make your investments," he said, "in something you know about, and keep out of mining." The time, he said, had not come to develop mining. Mining, of course, is a legitimate business, we cannot do without the minerals and the precious metals. The world could not get along without copper, lead, zinc, tin and other minerals; even silver and gold are needed also. President Young's counsel at that time was, as you may read in his sermons: "You, brethren and sisters, who will stay here at home and attend to your farms, look after what you have, I promise you that you will be richer and better off than if you go away hunting mines."

Brethren and sisters, that counsel is just as sound today, to the Latter-day Saints, as it was the day President Young gave it. It is good sense yet. Let me say here that "Mormonism" is good sound sense. I know of investments that have been made in coal mines which have not turned out very satisfactory. Some fellow comes along, and he has a coal mine prospect. If you will only invest your money in a coal mine you are sure to get rich quickly.

Well, people invested up in Cache valley and in southern Utah. What is the result? Hundreds of thousands of dollars were frittered away and lost in that way. That is not good judgment, nor does it show good sense. And this is not only the case in coal mines; we have communications come to the president's office sometimes about "dream" mines. Some brother or sister has dreamed about a mine located in a certain place, and it is a sure thing, because it has been "revealed." Well, now, don't take any stock in such "revelations," they will not "pan out." You will only be disappointed. Save your means and use them wisely. If we have means, and we owe any debts, our first duty is to pay our debts. If we owe a mortgage, for goodness sake wipe out the mortgage before we buy a new car. It is fine to have a new car, and I rejoice to see the many thousands that are parked in the streets around this block. Every street seems filled with automobiles. I am glad you have them, but don't buy any new cars while there is a mortgage on the home or on the farm.

CULTIVATE THE SPIRIT OF THRIFT AND SAVING

Try to economize, try to save. We have almost lost the spirit of thrift and saving. We hardly know what it is. Our children run wild to picture shows. It is only 25 cents to attend a picture show, and there are only four or five children, and they only go three or four or five times a week, and the money is gone, frittered away. What good has been done with it? "Well," one says, "do you want the children to be shut up and not have any amusement?" No, people will have amusement; children need it; but we are going to extremes foolishly, spending money in excess of our means. We do not save; we have lost the old-time spirit of New England thrift or of Scotch thrift. We don't know what it means.

REMEMBER YOUR OBLIGATIONS TO THE LORD

Then there is another debt that we will owe this fall, not to our neighbors, but to the Lord, who has given us this wonderful harvest. Will we remember and pay our tithes and our offerings to him, to help build up this work? If you could see the stack of applications for the building of meeting houses all over the world, you would realize that we will never get more than is needed. There will always be more applications, I believe, as this work grows and extends, than there will be means in hand to fill them. We cannot do better with our tithes than build good church edifices for the Saints to worship in, places where our young people may meet, instead of running here and there, wasting our money.

COUNSEL TO THE YOUNG TO MARRY

When boys and girls arrive at the age of manhood and womanhood they should be counseled to marry, to settle down and raise families. That is the very purpose of our being here. We are sent to this earth to pass through this stage of experience, to bring to pass the work of the Lord, and to make it possible for the spirits that are waiting to come and tabernacle in the flesh, to have the opportunity. So it is much better for the young people to get married and settle down rather than to be running hither and yon, spending their means, not knowing how to save, or how to curtail expenses. But today the tendency is, not only here but all through the country, to put off marriage. "We haven't means enough," they say; "we haven't saved enough." Well, a good young man and a good young woman, working together, can save money anywhere and any time, if they will only make up their minds to do it. All it needs is work, application and saving. Just five words spell prosperity, success and happiness—five words only—and they are these: "Spend less than you get."

SACRIFICE FOR THE GLORY OF THE LORD AND THE CHURCH

Brethren and sisters, shall we not sacrifice for this work? Are we losing the spirit of sacrifice that existed in the Church in years gone by? Are we forgetting what our fathers and mothers did, and the sacrifices they made? Are we not willing to respond to the call of the president and to work in the spirit of sacrifice for the glory of the Lord and the credit of his Church, that it may be built up and made glorious? Let us make this place the best there is in the world, as I believe it is now, in point of citizenship. A community of this kind, without a single beggar of our membership on the street, is the best I know of. A community of this size, with as low a death rate and as high a birth rate (although not high enough), is a community that I don't know the like of anywhere in the world. So the Lord is working through us and is making us a little better; but we are forgetting, I fear, that spirit of sacrifice with which our fathers and mothers built up this country and passed through all the struggles and trials incident thereto. I hope we will try to impress that spirit upon our own minds and upon the minds of our children.

WE ARE ENGAGED IN THE LORD'S WORK

The Lord bless you, my brethren and sisters, and may he bless Zion. The Lord will comfort Zion, and will establish his kingdom. He is doing it. It is not the presidency and apostles, the seventy and bishopric, the presidents of stakes and the bishops of wards who are doing this great work, let me tell you. They are faithful servants, willing to be used, willing to help, willing to devote their lives to the upbuilding of the kingdom; but it is the Lord God Almighty who is building up this work, caring for it and leading it; and his power of leadership is just as strong in it today, through the president of the Church, as it ever was in the history of the Church. The Lord Almighty lives. He is the only true and living God, and we believe in him, and in Jesus Christ whom he has sent. May that faith in him and in his Son and in the Holy Ghost be increased in our hearts, and may we turn our hearts and minds to him and say: "Lord, take me and use me. I will devote myself and my energies to the upbuilding of thy cause and kingdom in the earth." I humbly pray that we may be endowed with this spirit, and I ask this blessing and all blessings upon this Church, upon this people, and upon this nation as well, and those who administer its affairs, as well as upon all the nations of the earth, where righteousness is sought, where the people desire peace on earth and good will towards men. I ask blessings upon all, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

My brethren and sisters, this is a tremendous gathering of Latter-day Saints. I trust that by the aid of the radio my voice will reach you.

WHO CAN DRAW THE LINE BETWEEN SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL

In times past, and perhaps to some extent up to the present time, criticism has been offered against the leaders of the Church for being engaged in business affairs. It is said, by some people, perhaps even by some who are in the Church, that the General Authorities of the Church ought to be devoted entirely and wholly to spiritual affairs, and not be engaged in temporal affairs, or in business. I think the stand is taken through a misunderstanding. I am of opinion that, if the leaders of the Church should withdraw entirely from business affairs, the purposes of the Lord concerning Zion would fail. I grant you, brethren and sisters, that the spiritual takes the precedence. It is of greater consequence than material or temporal things, but who among us has the wisdom to draw the line between the spiritual and the temporal, and to say where the spiritual ends and the temporal begins? I am sure that I haven't that wisdom, and really I don't think it can be done.

JOSEPH, THE PROPHET, THOUGH SPIRITUAL, HAD MUCH TO DO WITH THE TEMPORAL

About a hundred years ago the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized, and in those early days, a leader was needed who had eminent spiritual talents and ability. It was necessary that that man should be in constant communication with the heavens, and should have the gift and power of revelation, that by this spirit he might declare the will of God to his people. He would necessarily occupy a parallel position to that which was held by the Apostle Peter when the Lord said to Peter that he would give unto him the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, that whatsoever he should bind upon the earth should be bound in heaven, and that whatsoever he should loose upon the earth should be loosed in heaven. Such was the spirit and power and gift that rested upon Joseph Smith. The Lord said to him in a great revelation, Sec. 132 of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And verily, verily, I say unto you, that whatsoever you seal on earth shall be sealed in heaven; and whatsoever you bind on earth, in my name and by my word, saith the Lord, it shall be eternally bound in the heavens; and whosoever sins you remit on earth shall be remitted eternally in the heavens; and whosoever sins you retain on earth shall be retained in heaven.

"And again, verily I say, whomsoever you bless I will bless, and whomsoever you curse I will curse."

And so, in this manner, the keys to the kingdom of heaven were delivered to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Shall we say that he was spiritually minded? Yea, verily, for he had to do largely with spiritual things. The Lord said to him that his strength was not in temporal things, but in that which was spiritual. Nevertheless—and this is a thing I want to emphasize at this point—nevertheless the Prophet Joseph Smith had to do with temporal things. He with his associates founded the city of Kirtland; he founded the city of Nauvoo, which was sometimes called "Nauvoo the Beautiful." Truly it was a beautiful city, and surely it was a modern city. Joseph Smith, the Prophet, was a member of the first city council of Nauvoo. When the Nauvoo Legion was organized Joseph Smith, the Prophet, was elected Lieutenant General, which position he held until his death. He had occasion many times to counsel the people in temporal things, as well as to deliver to them the great spiritual commandments of God. Where can you find a separation there? Where is the line between the temporal and the spiritual?

BRIGHAM YOUNG WAS GIFTED IN BOTH SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL THINGS

When Brigham Young was called to lead the Latter-day Saints out of bondage, out from Missouri, out and away from Illinois, and away from Nauvoo the Beautiful; to lead that people into the wilderness, it was needful, I apprehend, that he should be endowed with high spiritual attainments, that he could counsel the people for the welfare of their very souls. It was needful also, surely it was needful, that he should have a practical view of life, that he should have some knowledge of temporal things and temporal conditions, and such was the case. Let me tell you, brethren and sisters, as Joseph Smith the Prophet was the man of the hour in his day, surely Brigham Young was the man of the hour in his time—a man of destiny, who led the people across the plains under the direction and inspiration of the Spirit of God. Brigham Young was a great leader of men. He brought them into these mountain vales, and here it was that he, with his associates, founded a great commonwealth. Cities and towns sprang up and were laid out in a spirit of wisdom and most excellent judgment. Look at Salt Lake City, with its wide streets, and noble shade trees, with ample room for turning around and getting through. Great foresight and wisdom were exhibited in the founding of Salt Lake City, Ogden and Logan on the north, Provo on the south, and other cities and towns. It was under the direction of Brigham Young that this intermountain region was pioneered and colonized. He had superior temporal gifts and superior spiritual gifts. Brigham Young was one of the first to recognize the advantage of cooperation. But he was not the first in this great latter-day movement. Joseph Smith the Prophet was the first, because he gave the people, by the gift of revelation, the principle of the United Order, which is a very high and advanced form of cooperation. Cooperation you might say is the lesser law. The United Order is the higher law. The Lord declared in unmistakable language that if we would become one in heavenly things we must also become one in earthly things, but when that will be I do not know. Cooperation is a step in that direction. President Brigham Young and his associates, the apostles and others, preached that doctrine both loud and long. All the day long and all the night long for years, the people were advised to come together and combine, and cooperate in their business affairs, in handling temporal matters, building grist mills, building woolen mills, in manufacturing sugar, in establishing a life insurance company, banking and in carrying on the mercantile business. This they have done.

THE PRINCIPLE OF CO-OPERATION APPLIES TO BOTH RELIGION AND BUSINESS

It will be conceded, I think, by those who are familiar with present conditions in Zion, that the business of these enterprises and institutions has been wisely administered, and the tremendous strength and power exerted by them are due mainly to the principle of cooperation. The principle of cooperation enables us to live rapidly and accomplish much in short periods of time. It might be illustrated in this way. One hundred men can accomplish as much in one day as one man can accomplish in one hundred days.

The cooperative principle applies as logically to farming and fruit raising as it does to banking and the mercantile business, or the manufacture of sugar, or the insurance business.

Dixie on the south has long been regarded as a somewhat desert country, dry and unproductive. Brethren and sisters, that is a fallacy.

CO-OPERATION IN FARMING VS. INDIVIDUAL EFFORT

At a priesthood meeting in St. George the other day, at which I was in attendance, several brethren, notably bishops, gave their experience regarding the matter of fruit raising in such places as Hurricane, LaVerkin, Santa Clara and St. George. By actual test on their part it was found that one acre of a hundred Delicious apple trees would produce four hundred bushels, which if sold at $1.90 per bushel would bring $760.—that one acre of Jonathan apple trees would yield fourteen hundred twenty-eight bushels, which if sold at $1 per bushel would bring $1,480. That an acre of apricot trees would bring $1,093. That an acre of 100 trees of French prunes, dried, would produce a value of $2,048. That an acre of 160 pear trees would produce a value of $1,012. That one acre of grape vines would produce a value of $556. Remember these figures were taken from actual tests. With wise and intensive cultivation it can be done. What is needed in Dixie as in other places in Utah, and other parts of Zion, is a united effort among the farmers and fruit growers, a careful grading of fruit, and the establishment of packing houses at convenient places by the fruit growers where they could bring their fruit, and from which places it could be shipped in carload lots to the market. In this matter cooperation means success—individual efforts often lead to failure, or partial failure.

The Lord bless you and prosper you, brethren and sisters, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang: "Watching over Israel."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Henry H. Rolapp, of the Church auditing committee.

Conference adjourned until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

At 2 o'clock p. m., President Heber J. Grant stated that the choir and congregation would sing, as the opening hymn: "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

After the song, Elder George Ray Maycock, president of the Kolob stake, offered prayer.

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

It is a source of gratification, my brethren and sisters, that another opportunity is afforded us of assembling in general conference under the favorable circumstances which exist.

I stand before you this afternoon with great trepidation, facing this large congregation of people, and pray that I may have your support, and the support of our Father in Heaven, during the few moments which I expect to occupy.

THE SPIRIT OF PROPHECY VS. THE WISDOM OF MAN

As a basis for the remarks which I desire to make I will read briefly from the second general epistle of the Apostle Peter to the Church. He had been bearing testimony to the divinity of the mission of the Redeemer of the World, had recounted the many evidences of his divinity to which the people were witnesses, and concluded with these words:

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

"For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

The spirit of prophecy, my brethren and sisters, to which the scripture I have read refers, is the word of the Lord which comes to the Church, through the agencies he has provided.

It must always continue with the Church if one purposes of the Father, as they apply to his children, here upon earth, are to be accomplished, for without the word of prophecy, which is the word of the Lord, expressed through those whom he has appointed, and who have been sustained by the voice of the people who make up the membership of the Church, we are left to depend upon the wisdom of man, and if we are to judge the future by the past, the time will never come when the wisdom of man alone will be sufficient to lead us on to the ultimate ideal of the perfect life, to which we aspire.

At the afternoon meeting, on Tuesday, if we follow our usual mode of procedure, the names of the men who have been designated to direct the affairs of the Church at the present time, will be presented to you, and you will vote to sustain them as prophets, seers, and revelators.

I sometimes wonder if the keys of authority which belong to the office and calling of one who occupies this exalted position in the Church, is fully understood by the people.

CHARACTER AND DUTY OF PROPHETS, SEERS AND REVELATORS

A careful study of the etymology of the word and of the lives, works and character of the prophets of old makes clear the fact that a prophet was, and is, one called to act as God's messenger. He is to teach men the character of God, and define and make known to the people, his will. He is to denounce sin, and declare the punishment of transgression. He is to be above all else a preacher of righteousness, and when the people depart from the path which he has marked out for them to follow, is to call them back to the true faith. He is an interpreter of the scripture, and declares its meaning and application. When future events are to be declared he predicts them, but his direct, and most important calling is to be a forth-teller, or director of present policy, rather than a foreteller of that which is to come.

There is but little difference between the calling of a prophet and that of a seer, or revelator. Saul, who had been sent by his father on an errand which appeared to be impossible of accomplishment, said to the servant who accompanied him, let us return; but the servant, knowing that Samuel, the prophet of the Lord, was in the city where they chanced to be, replied: Let us go thither. Peradventure he can show us the way in which we are to go, and here we are told that before-time in Israel, when a man went to inquire of God, thus he spake: "Come and let us go to the seer, for he that is now called a prophet, was before time called a seer."

The scripture also tells us that when King David was up in the morning, the word of the Lord came to the prophet Gad, David's seer, instructing him to deliver a certain message to the king.

It will thus be seen that the words prophet and seer are used inter-changeably, and have practically the same meaning. In the revelations which have been given for the direction of the Church, in the present dispensation, the Lord says:

"The duty of the president of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole Church, and to be like unto Moses, Yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator and prophet, having all the gifts of God, which he bestows upon the head of the Church."

I have made these introductory remarks, my brethren and sisters, in the hope that you may better understand the calling and responsibility which develops upon these men whom you sustain as the presiding authorities of the Church, to be prophets, seers and revelators to it.

As I have defined the calling and responsibility of a prophet, you are my witnesses that these men who are before you today are discharging the responsibility which has been placed upon them. They are expounding the scriptures, calling men to repentance from sin and transgression, and pointing out the way which, if you walk in it, will lead you back into the presence of our Heavenly Father, and Jesus Christ, his Only Begotten Son.

OUR PERILOUS TIMES NEED THE DIRECTING POWER OF PROPHECY

I believe that you, my brethren and sisters, and you my friends who may be present, who are not members of the Church, but are interested in and carefully studying existing conditions in the world, will agree with me in the conclusion which I have reached, that if there has ever been a time when the spirit of prophecy has been needed to compose and harmonize the conflicting forces which are warring one against the other. when the word of the Lord is necessary in order that these questions, which are shaking the very foundations upon which our religious, social and political structures are builded may be settled, it is the day in which we live.

In some localities the social laws which have from the beginning of time, as we count it, given protection to the family relation, and made possible the development of the world to its present social condition and civilization, are entirely ignored, while in others they are perilously near chaos.

The world war, instead of bringing the allied nations closer together, as we had hoped that it might, threatens, because of the financial complications which have arisen, to drive us farther apart, while in the school of religion conflicting opinions threaten to bring chaos to existing theories regarding our relationship to God, and the present and future state of man, as it applies to eternal life.

Already the people are assembling in two hostile camps, one calling itself fundamentalists, the other modernists, one professing to base its conclusions on the truths brought out by modern scientific research, the other on the Word of the Lord, as it has come down to us in sacred writ, regardless of its harmony, or lack of harmony with modern thought, or the onward march of scientific investigation.

It is not a new controversy, but one which has characterized every gospel dispensation which has existed from the beginning to the present.

Men highly educated, and trained in certain fields of scientific research, with but limited knowledge of the great plan of human redemption, provided by the Lord for the blessing of his children, proceed to point out certain obscure passages which may be found in the Bible, and which may have no bearing at all on the relationship of man to his Maker, thus seeking to bring the entire book to ridicule, and destroy faith in it as a divine revelation from God.

On the other hand men knowing little of the great truths which have come to the world through the investigations of men, denounce all modern thought, sometimes even when it is demonstrated truth, if it does not appear to harmonize with their interpretation of the written word of the Lord.

The controversy, it appears to me, is one which might be more readily composed if the parties to it better understood both sides of the question under discussion, and were governed by a spirit of tolerance and reason, rather than one of dogmatism.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN FUNDAMENTALIST AND MODERNIST

What is the difference between a fundamentalist and a modernist? If asked this question I would answer somewhat as follows: A fundamentalist is one who believes in the teachings and customs of the past, as they have come down to us by means of the written word contained in sacred writ, or secular history, preferring, where the ideas and teachings of today conflict with the past, and where definite evidence is lacking to establish one or the other theory to accept the old, rather than the more modern interpretation.

The modernist prefers, and accepts, the customs, philosophy and thought of the present in preference to that of the remote past.

The fact that a person may profess to be a fundamentalist is no evidence that he is either right or wrong, and the same rule may be applied to the modernist. Fundamentalism is that upon which a system or structure is builded.

In the first century after the ministry of the Redeemer of the world many conflicting opinions prevailed upon the subject of religion. Numerous churches were established, each professing to be followers of Christ, while differing greatly in creed. Paganism and idolatry were almost universal except among the Hebrew people, and even among them some were converted to the various systems which prevailed.

In the confusion which ensued, Mohammed, a descendant of Abraham, through his son, Ishmael, seeing the danger which threatened, arose and declared that there was but one God, the God of his father, Abraham, and called his people away from the worship of idols, to the worship of a living but invisible God. To the present day this doctrine remains the fundamental faith of Islam.

Buddha established a great system of religion on the theory that the spirit of man is eternal, that it may come to earth and tabernacle in the flesh at different periods of probation, perhaps more than once in the body of a man, perhaps in the body of an animal, if the man has proven to be unworthy, until in time it may go into the presence of God, or Nirvana. This is fundamental to the faith of the followers of Buddha. Thus we see that the Moham-medan and Buddhist, while greatly differing in creed, are both fundamentalists, but that is no evidence that either is right or wrong.

The same may be said in truth of the modernist. Looking back over the history of the past it is plain that man cannot with safety ignore the lessons which it teaches, for truth, no matter when revealed, remains the same, and that great truths have been made known to man in the remote past cannot be denied.

Neither can we ignore the truths which have come to the world as a result of scientific research in the dispensation in which we live. The sure anchor, then, upon which we are safe in building our structure, is demonstrated truth, whether it be the truth of the remote past, or the living present. Thus we become both fundamentalists and modernists, with our feet firmly planted on solid ground.

WHENCE CAME MAN, AND WHITHER GOETH HE?

The question most discussed in the present controversy is that phase which deals with the origin and destiny of man. Whence came man, and whither goeth he?

Without reference to the many theories which have existed upon this question, and which still exist, I desire to refer briefly to the one which is today greatly disturbing the minds of the people. Was man created by the decree of God, our Father, and placed upon the earth in his present form, or is he the creature of some natural process of development, which has in the course of the aeons which have passed brought him to where he is?

The suggestion of Darwin, the great scientist, that man, by a process of natural selection and gradual development, may have evolved from a lower order of animal life to what he now is, although he did not declare this a fact, but only a theory, has resulted in much discussion, and too often in bitter controversy.

Closely allied to the Darwinian theory, but still quite different is the theory of evolution, which is being so widely discussed, and I sometimes think so generally misunderstood today.

Evolution is the process of evolving, or becoming developed. An unfolding or growth, from a latent state, or from a pre-arranged plan.

WHAT IS THE ATTITUDE OF THE CHURCH ON THIS QUESTION?

Naturally many, many people are asking, "What is the attitude of the Church on this important question, as it applies to the existence of man?" Let me answer briefly.

The foundation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints rests upon faith in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

We believe that God is an existent, living personality, and that man was created in his image. "In the image of God created he him, male and female created he them."

We believe that Jesus Christ was, and is the Son of God, the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, immaculately conceived and born of the Virgin Mary. That through the atonement wrought out by him all men are redeemed from the penalty of death, pronounced upon our father Adam, through the resurrection from the grave, which he made possible, and that by obedience to the divine principles of right living which he taught, mankind may be redeemed from personal sin, and brought back into the presence of the Father, to enjoy the fellowship and association of the Son.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the agency through which the will of the Father is communicated to his children, here upon earth. That it takes of the things of the Father, and manifests them unto man. It bears record of the Father and the Son, is our comfort in sorrow and distress, our strength in weakness, and our guide when in doubt. It is the Spirit of the Lord, the light which lighteth everything that cometh into the world, and with which all men are endowed in a greater or less degree. It is the spirit of knowledge, by which man became a responsible agent, knowing good from evil, thus becoming answerable for the deeds done while here in probation, an account of which all men must render when they stand before the bar of God to be judged according to their works.

These doctrines are as old as the revealed will of the Lord to the inhabitants of the earth. It is, always has been, and will continue to be the doctrine of the Church. From it the Church has never receded, it never can recede; it is fundamental, and our faith in it makes us fundamentalists.

Unlike the sectarian Christian denominations of the world, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints believes and teaches, that birth into this life is not the beginning of the existence of man, nor is death the end of it, but that the spirits of all men existed in a pre-mortal state, before coming to this earth to be clothed upon with mortality. That after death they return to the spirit world to await the resurrection, when they will come forth from the grave, with glorified, immortal bodies, to receive the glory and exaltation to which their works while in mortality entitle them.

We believe that the earth is constantly undergoing changes which will eventually restore it to its paradisiacal glory, and make it a fit abode for glorified man.

We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal, and we believe that he will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.

If, then, to have our faces constantly toward the future, if to be forward looking, forward moving men and women, if to believe that great stores of knowledge, hidden treasures of knowledge, are yet to be revealed by men who have the spirit of the pioneer, which impels them to reach out into new and unknown fields of endeavor, whether it be in science, sociology, or exploration, if this, I say, is modernism, and if these changes which have come, and which are to come in the future, through the exercise of the intelligence of man, which is the intelligence of God, and which is based upon demonstrated truth, and not theory, is evolution, then are we evolutionists.

If, however, to be in harmony with modern thought we must renounce our faith in a living, personal God, the Creator of heaven and earth, not only the earth upon which we dwell, but the universe of which we form so small a part, that he holds dominion over it, shapes the destiny of its inhabitants, and controls the laws by which it is governed; if we are to deny the knowledge which has come to us by direct revelation from heaven that Jesus Christ is the only begotten of the Father; if we are to deny the truth which has been revealed which teaches that man was created in the image of God, was so in the beginning and will always remain so, while he goes on in intelligent development forever; if to be in harmony we are to renounce a single doctrine of revealed truth which has come to us, we unhesitatingly separate ourselves from modern thought and theory, and confidently await the time when revealed truth, whether it be the result of scientific research or the revealed word of the Lord, will vindicate our faith in his word, which through his mercy has come to us in this, the greatest of all dispensations of the world's history.

The earth and all that is upon it, the sea and all that is in it did not come into existence by chance. Man is not the accidental product of chance. We admit the changes which have come, and believe that others of mighty import are before us, but in it all the Church sees not a thing of chance, but a definite plan, being shaped and moulded by a master mind, for the accomplishment of a divine purpose.

THE REVEALED WORD OF GOD TO US CONCLUSIVE PROOF

Time will not permit a presentation of the many evidences which exist in support of this doctrine of the pre-existence and future destiny of man. I ask your indulgence, however, while I refer to a few of the outstanding facts in relation to it.

The life, ministry and teachings of the Redeemer of the World are sufficient, alone, definitely to settle the existing controversy. We know that there are those who do not regard the written word, as it is contained in the scripture as satisfactory proof, but to us it should be conclusive.

We concede to all men the right to believe as they choose, but to members of the Church we appeal to remain steadfast in their faith in the revealed word of the Lord.

There is one thing which characterizes his word which has always appealed to me. It never comes to us as an hypothesis, but always as a definite fact. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And God said let us make man in our image, after our likeness. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them.

There is nothing hypothetical in this, nothing which admits of various interpretations, if we are to define words in their real meaning. It is a definite abstract statement of fact. The exact process by which this was accomplished we do not know, nor is it essential that we know it, the fact is sufficient, and it will never be disproved by scientific research or otherwise, because it is the truth.

THE PRE-EXISTENCE OF JESUS CHRIST THE LOGICAL OUTCOME

That Christ lived in mortality is admitted by all people who are familiar with the history of his time, whether they are believers or not. That he was condemned and crucified on Calvary is not denied, and that after his crucifixion and resurrection from the dead he appeared to his disciples, and to many of the Saints with his glorified body is testified to by those who saw and communed with him.

Christ frequently declared that he was with the Father before he came to earth, and took upon him mortality, and that he returned to the Father after his work among men had been accomplished. That he revealed himself to the people of the world before his earthly existence, is plainly declared in the scripture, as the following will show.

Soon after the confusion of tongues, at the time of the building of the Tower of Babel, Jared, a prophet of the Lord, led a colony of people from the old world to the new. The brother of this man Jared had gone out to plead with the Lord in behalf of his people, when the word of the Lord came to him, as follows:

"Believest thou the words which I shall speak? And he answered: Yea, Lord, I know that thou speakest the truth, for thou art a God of truth, and canst not lie.

"And when he had said these words, behold, the Lord showed himself unto him, and said: Because thou knowest these things ye are redeemed from the fall; therefore ye are brought back into my presence: Therefore I show myself unto you.

"Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold, I am Jesus Christ. In me shall all mankind have light, and that eternally, even they who shall believe on my name; and they shall become my sons and daughters. Seest thou that ye are created after my own image? Yea, even all men were created in the beginning after mine own image. Behold, this body which ye now see is the body of my spirit; and man have I created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear to thee to be in the spirit, will I appear unto men in the flesh."

At a later date Samuel, a Lamanite, prophesied to the Nephites that Christ would be born at a certain date, and would appear to the people of this continent, and that he was the Redeemer of the World. Unbelievers, as has always been the case, were bitterly opposed to this doctrine, and declaring that the date fixed by Samuel had passed, set a day when all who professed faith in his teachings should be put to death. In this crisis Nephi cried unto the Lord in behalf of those who were believers, with the following result:

"And it came to pass that he cried mightily unto the Lord, and behold the voice of the Lord came unto him saying:

"Lift up your head and be of good cheer; for, behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, to show unto the world; that I will fulfil all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets.

"Behold, I come unto my own, to fulfil all things which I have made known unto the children of men from the foundation of the world, and to do the will both of the Father and the Son. And behold the time is at hand, and this night shall the sign be given."

It was the voice of Christ, the Redeemer of the world, proclaiming to man in mortality his coming and the following day the babe of Bethlehem was born.

What evidence, my brethren and sisters, do we require more conclusive than this, of the ante-mortal existence of the Redeemer of the world?

MAN ALONE ENDOWED WITH REASON

Of all created things man alone is endowed with reason, which is the glory and intelligence of God. Of man alone the Creator has said: The man has become as one of us, knowing good and evil.

BY REASON'S EXERCISE MAN GOES FORWARD

It is by the exercise and application of this endowment that man goes forward, and will continue to go forward, forever. By the application of the intelligence of man, which is the intelligence of God, conditions are changed, and may become either better or worse. Remove the application of this intelligence and we have no knowledge of anything in nature which has gone forward, but we do know that the highest degree of perfection reached by man in development, when bereft of it, may rapidly retrograde, whether it applies to things of nature, individuals, communities or nations, and even where the intelligence of man has been applied to its fullest extent, but without the sure word of prophecy, without the supporting power of the Creator, our Father and God, chaos has resulted and it will continue to result, for it is the eternal decree of God that man whom he has placed here upon earth, shall recognize him, otherwise he cannot go on in eternal progression.

"IN THE BEGINNING, GOD"

My knowledge of geology, which is limited, was obtained through study of that subject from books written by J. Dorman Steele whose works on science were probably more generally used in my school days than any other. In conclusion I wish to read briefly from his Fourteen Weeks in Geology, the following:

"We have traced in the dim light of the past the history of our earth and its inhabitants. Everywhere we have found a divine hand shaping and moulding to accomplish a divine ideal. Was man created by God's fiat, or by some intermediate process of secondary causes? Alas for the impotence of science, and the scope of our finite intelligence. Primeval man shows no sign of development from the higher tribes of animals. No fossil yet found is a link between him and the monkey. No ape ever made any improvement on the condition in which he was born. Man, on the other hand never stays where he starts, he continually progresses. In the beginning God. We can add nothing to the old Hebrew declaration. The study of science ought never to lead one astray from this great fundamental thought. God has assuredly never written anything in nature contradictory of himself. Science and religion are alike his offspring, both will ultimately vindicate him and his attributes. Forgetting then the rancor and bitterness of the past in the joy of newly found truth, they will clasp hand and together cast the crowns of their triumphs, the triumphs of science and Christianity, at the feet of their common author, and God will be proclaimed Lord of all."

LISTEN TO THE WORD OF GOD. NO TRUTH WILL CONTRADICT IT

My brethren and sisters, may these fundamental truths remain fixed in your minds, let nothing lead you away from them. Listen to the word of prophecy, as it comes to you through these men who sit before you this afternoon and I promise that you will never be led astray. No development of science will ever contradict the revealed word of the Lord, which has come to us. For the moment theories may appear to be in conflict with his revealed word, but demonstrated truth will always be in harmony with it, for he is the author of all truth.

That his blessing may continue with us, and his protecting arm be over us, I humbly pray, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I believe I fully sense the importance of this occasion and the value of the time that is passing for this great congregation. Of myself I have little to say, except to announce my belief in the gospel of Jesus Christ. During the two sessions of this conference my soul has been enriched by the truths that have been announced by those who have addressed us, and the music that seems almost divine. I have had the privilege of grasping the hands of dozens of my brethren and sisters who live in remote places, and who have left their homes and their own affairs, and have paid their expenses to come here to meet in this great conference. I am sure that when it is concluded the feeling will abound in the heart of each—that it has been well worth while.

AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT

President Ivins touched upon a subject, and I regret that he did not take more time to enlarge upon it, as I know he is capable of doing, to our blessing. He reminded me of a statement made only a short time ago with reference to what has been going on in Tennessee, where some of the brightest minds of this world were in conflict—those who adhere to the plain teachings of the Old Testament and the New, and those who accept none of these teachings as divine. During the catechisation of an important witness reference was made to the first two chapters of Genesis, wherein it is stated that the heavens and the earth were created. And each day something was accomplished until the seventh day. After discovering by reading the same that all the various animals and the shrubs and vegetation had been created, the witness was asked: "Do you believe this?" And he announced that he did. Then he was asked: "What then is meant by this, and do you believe it: 'And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made'?"

'And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made.' And then he read this:

"These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens, "And every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew; for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the ground."

He said: "What does this mean? and do you believe it? Here we have the heavens and the earth, and man created in the image of God, male and female, and after the seventh day we find—after the completion of it—the statement that there was not rain upon the earth and there was not man to till the ground.

"But there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

The witness could not explain, but he affirmed his profound belief in the statement contained therein.

TWO CREATIONS REFERRED TO

Now to this vast audience I could ask that question without hesitation, with the assurance that most of you would say, Why, there were two creations referred to. In the first place God created all these things. He formed the earth that was without form and void. He caused light to appear, he caused the waters to take their place, and the dry land to appear. He created spiritually, everything that dwells upon the earth; and after he had done that, the statement is made that there was not yet man to till the earth. Man in his spiritual condition was not prepared to till the earth, and so God formed his body for him. He prepared his physical being, and then the spirit that had been prepared before was placed in that body and he became a living soul. It seems to me that a splendid opportunity was lost to say to all the world, read the first and second chapters of Genesis carefully, and, to a very large degree it will settle any doubt that may be in your mind as to the possibility of the various forms of life gravitating from one to the other, because we are told, "every tree and every seed bearing fruit after its kind."

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS HAVE ANOTHER WITNESS

And then the Latter-day Saints have another witness, and I am minded to read to you, just briefly, the testimony of something that the world has not yet received, but which, to my mind, is the truth as contained upon papyrus, and I will read the heading of this:

"A translation of some ancient records, that have fallen into our hands, from the catacombs of Egypt; the writings of Abraham while he was in Egypt, called the Book of Abraham, written by his own hand, upon papyrus." The Latter-day Saints accept the statement at face value, as contained in the first and second chapters of Genesis. Yea, we believe the Bible, all the Bible, to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly, and in addition we find in this translation that has been given to us from papyrus, by the Prophet Joseph Smith this statement by Abraham:

PRE-EXISTENT SPIRITS

"Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these there were many of the noble and great ones;

"And God saw these souls that they were good, and he stood in the midst of them, and he said: These I will make my rulers; for he stood among those that were spirits,"

Let us keep that in mind: "For he stood among those that were spirits."

Not the physical tabernacles that we now possess.

"And he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born.

"And there stood one among them that was like unto God, and he said unto those who were with him: We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell;

"And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them;

"And they who keep their first estate shall be added upon; and they who keep not their first estate shall not have glory in the same kingdom with those who keep their first estate; and they who keep their second estate shall have glory added upon their heads for ever and ever.

"And the Lord said: Whom shall I send? And one answered like unto the Son of Man: Here am I, send me. And another answered and said: Here am I, send me. And the Lord said: I will send the first.

"And the second was angry, and kept not his first estate, and, at that day, many followed after him."

Of course there is a great similarity between this and the Old Testament.

THE CREATION OF LIGHT

"Then the Lord said: Let us go down. And they went down at the beginning, and they, that is the Gods, organized and formed the heavens and the earth.

"And the earth, after it was formed, was empty and desolate, because they had not formed anything but the earth; and darkness reigned upon the face of the deep, and the Spirit of the Gods was brooding upon the face of the waters.

"And they (the Gods) said: Let there be light; and there was light.

"And they (the Gods) comprehended the light, for it was bright; and they divided the light, or caused it to be divided, from the darkness.

THE CREATIVE PERIODS

Then I will skip several passages:

"And the Gods called the expanse, Heaven. And it came to pass that it was from evening until morning that they called night; and it came to pass that it was from morning until evening that they called day; and this was the second time that they called night and day."

Note the phraseology. Whether it was a period of twenty-four hours or whether it was a period of hundreds of years was not explained, but it was a period of time. And this record that is given as the words of Abraham, having been revealed to him by his heavenly Father, specifies it as a time. And so after each creation it is referred to as a first time, a second time, a third time, and so on.

"And the Gods ordered, saying: Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the earth come up dry; and it was so as they ordered;

"And the Gods pronounced the dry land, earth; and the gathering together of the waters, pronounced they, great waters; and the Gods saw that they were obeyed.

"And the Gods said: Let us prepare the earth to bring forth grass."

THE EARTH PREPARED TO BRING FORTH GRASS

Mind you, they were to prepare the earth to bring forth grass.

"The herb yielding seed; the fruit tree yielding fruit, after his kind, whose seed in itself yieldeth its own likeness upon the earth; and it was so, even as they ordered.

"And the Gods organized the earth to bring forth grass from its own seed, and the herb to bring forth herb from its own seed, yielding seed after his kind; and the earth to bring forth the tree from its own seed, yielding fruit, whose seed could only bring forth the same in itself, after his kind; and the Gods saw that they were obeyed.

"And it came to pass that they numbered the days; from the evening until the morning they called night; and it came to pass, from the morning until the evening they called day; and it was the third time."

THE ORIGIN OF SPECIES

We will now pass over a few paragraphs, telling of the preparation for bringing forth whales, winged fowl, creeping things, etc., then we read:

"And the Gods prepared the earth to bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle and creeping things, and beasts of the earth after their kind; and it was so, as they had said.

"And the Gods organized the earth to bring forth the beasts after their kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after its kind; and the Gods saw they would obey.

"And the Gods took counsel among themselves and said: Let us go down and form man in our image, after our likeness; and we will give them dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

"So the Gods went down to organize man in their own image, in the image of the Gods to form they him, male and female to form they them.

"And the Gods said: We will bless them. And the Gods said: We will cause them to be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and to have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

"And the Gods said: Behold, we will give them every herb bearing seed that shall come upon the face of all the earth, and every tree which shall have fruit upon it; yea, the fruit of the tree yielding seed to them we will give it; it shall be for their meat."

Again I will pass over a few passages:

"And the Gods came down and formed these the generations of the heavens and of the earth, when they were formed in the day that the Gods formed the earth and the heavens,

"According to all that which they had said concerning every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew; for the Gods had not caused it to rain upon the earth when they counseled to do them, and had not formed a man to till the ground.

"But there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground.

"And the Gods formed man from the dust of the ground, and took his spirit (that is, the man's spirit), and put it into him; and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul.

"And the Gods planted a garden, eastward in Eden, and there they put the man, whose spirit they had put into the body which they had formed."

That is another testimony to me of the origin of the species. It is to me the simplest explanation of the preparation of this earth for the habitation of animal and vegetable life that has ever been prepared. It has been my privilege to read the theories and to listen to the solutions of this problem by some of the wisest men of the world, but wherein they have differed from this plain statement of facts, as revealed by our Father in heaven to his servants, who were his mouthpieces to the children of men, the arguments of my Father's sons, my brethren if you will, whom I love, every one of them has been feeble indeed, to bear to my mind a comprehension of the origin of man.

THE TESTIMONY OF MODERN REVELATION

Then we come again to the story contained in the Book of Mormon, which adds also to the testimony we have of where we came from. Then we have the testimony of the Prophet Joseph Smith in our day, who has supplemented these things by revelations, that to me are beautiful explanations of the purposes of God toward his children, and his preparation of their peace and happiness throughout the ages of eternity.

A SURE KNOWLEDGE OF THE ORIGIN OF MAN

I am grateful that in the midst of the confusion of our Father's children there has been given to the members of this great organization a sure knowledge of the origin of man, that we came from the spirit world where our spirits were begotten by our Father in heaven, that he formed our first parents from the dust of the earth, and that their spirits were placed in their bodies, and that man came, not as some have believed, not as some have preferred to believe, from some of the lower walks of life, but our ancestors were those beings who lived in the courts of heaven. We came not from some menial order of life, but our ancestor is God our heavenly Father. I am grateful that we are not laboring under a handicap such as I feel that some men are who feel that they have grown up and evolved from some unknown condition; but, on the contrary, standing as we do, facing the problems of life, believing as we do that we were first created in the image of God, that he is the Father of our spirits, and that he created this earth for us that we might dwell hereon, under his wise counsel and direction, we may be happy, to rejoice in life and to prepare ourselves to go back into his presence, to live forever, when our life here upon this earth has been terminated.

NO DOUBT ABOUT OUR ANCESTRY

These are some of the things that have come into my mind during this conference, and I stand here, my brethren and sisters, again to say to you: grateful am I that there is no doubt in my mind as to our ancestry, and I believe, as I believe that I live, that if we will keep the commandments of God, as they have been handed down to us through his prophets from age to age, if we will avail ourselves of this glorious truth as it has been promulgated among the children of men, our lives upon this earth will be filled with joy and satisfaction and assurance, and in the end there will come to us the joy of eternal life and eternal companionship with those we love throughout the ages of eternity.

OUR MISSION

This is a part of your mission, ye men of Israel, to evidence by your lives, to teach by word of mouth, this truth, as also the other truths that are essential for men and women to dwell in the celestial kingdom of our heavenly Father. Gathered together as we are today under the roof of this building that has been dedicated to the worship of the Lord our God, how grateful we ought to be that there has been removed from us the doubt that exists in the minds of so many of our Father's splendid sons and daughters, that there has come to us that abiding assurance that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that he is our elder brother, and that if we are faithful, in his own due time he will cleanse and purify this earth on which we dwell, and it will be celestialized, and those who have prepared themselves for the celestial kingdom will have the joy of dwelling hereon, to be directed, to be counseled, to be taught, and advised by the Lord of lords and King of kings, throughout the ages of eternity. What a wonderful promise, my brethren and sisters, has been given to the children of men, and oh, how I pray that there may come into the souls of the thousands and millions of God's children a knowledge of the purpose of their being, that they may prepare, while there is yet time before their final summons, for the time when we will be classified and placed in whatever kingdom we have earned the right to dwell in, when we go to the other side.

That the Lord may add his blessings, that the joy that comes from knowing the gospel of Jesus Christ may spread throughout the earth, that the truth that is necessary for the salvation of men may be disseminated by those bearing divine authority, that by and by when our Father shall gather his jewels, when the Lamb's book of life shall be opened that we, with those we love and all our Father's children wherever they may be, may be found enrolled there is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

My dear Brethren and Sisters: In using this form of address I do so not without thought or feeling, for to me the Latter-day Saints are dear. I love the faithful members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I sympathize with and pity those who are not faithful.

I am glad to be associated with you in conference, my brethren and sisters, and as a member of the Church I am glad to share with you whatever of ignominy may rest upon us as a people because of our religion, and being unpopular with the world. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for I know that it is the power of God unto salvation to all those who will faithfully obey the same.

THE SAINTS HAVE THE COURAGE OF THEIR CONVICTIONS

There are, without doubt, people listening in on their radio sets to the proceedings of this conference, who would be ashamed perhaps to be seen in our midst worshipping with us, and yet they have an inward conviction that we are right in our worship, and that this is indeed the true gospel of the Master. The Latter-day Saints are not of that character, they have not only a firm conviction but a true and abiding testimony of the truth, and they have the courage of their convictions.

I have no doubt that there are many others listening in who are interested in the doctrines which we teach, but who, because of what it would cost to be a consistent member of this Church, are manifesting no interest among us. The Latter-day Saints are not of that class, either—they have embraced the Gospel as the straight gate and the narrow way that leadeth to everlasting life. They have accepted it as a gospel of sacrifice and self abnegation from beginning to end, and they realize that in order to be worthy disciples of the Master they must be willing to give of their substance in any amount that may be required, even to all that they possess if necessary, for the building up of the kingdom of God on the earth and the establishment of his kingdom. They understand that they must have it in their hearts to lay down their lives for the truth, if need be, and that none who is not thus willing is approved of the Lord. There are, of course, individuals among us who become lukewarm and indifferent. This fact we greatly regret and we are striving to bring all to a unity of the faith and to faithfulness in serving the Lord.

THE DANGER OF LOSING SALVATION

There are various causes that keep men and women outside the Church, who have investigated far enough to be assured that we teach the true scriptural doctrine. I would that they had the courage of the Latter-day Saints. I feel that all such are in serious danger, their salvation is in jeopardy. Jesus Christ, the Savior and Redeemer of mankind is also Mediator with the Father for us, and he has said that if we are ashamed of him, he will be ashamed of us before the Father. Men and women who are ashamed of the work of God and the followers of Jesus Christ I fear, will be regarded by Him as being of this class.

THE STANDARD OF WORTHINESS

I rejoice in my association with the Latter-day Saints. I believe that I love God, I hope and pray that I do, so as to meet every requirement that he has made upon me. I hope and pray constantly that my faith and testimony in the life, the existence and the mission of Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world may not be wanting. As often as I partake of the sacrament as emblems of his body and blood, I ask myself the question, "Am I ready, am I willing, if it should be required at my hands, to give my life for him and for this cause?" And if I am not thus ready and willing I have yet much to learn and to do, for I must reach that standard if I would be accounted worthy of an exaltation with him in our Father's kingdom. If I did not love the Latter-day Saints I should consider myself unworthy of the position which I occupy. I ought to so love this people that I would rejoice with them in their successes and sorrow with them in their misfortunes. I think that is a good standard for all of us. If I do not love my brother, I fear my love of God and of Christ as the Savior and Redeemer of the world is wanting, and I do know that salvation is the thing above all other things that I desire and that we all should desire. And I know equally well that we cannot hope to obtain the goal of salvation and exaltation unless we do believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, not merely as a great teacher, but we must accept him as the Savior and the Redeemer of mankind. No man can be saved without this faith in Jesus Christ. That means that many men and women are going to be greatly disappointed in the end when they learn the whole truth.

AN INDIVIDUAL TESTIMONY

I am thankful to my Father in heaven that he has made it easy for me to believe on him as the God of this world and the Creator of the heavens and the earth and the laws by which they are governed, the very eternal Father of the spirits of all men; I have no doubts, every fiber of my being responds to that testimony and declaration. I am equally thankful that I have no doubts with regard to his Son Jesus Christ and his mission. I do know by the witness of the Holy Spirit, whose mission it is to reveal unto us the things of God, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior and Redeemer of the world, the very Messiah. I thank the Lord that I have believed and that I have received the witness, and that I am without doubt with regard to these things. As a special witness of the Lord unto the people, not the Latter-day Saints alone, but unto this whole world, I bear my testimony, which I know I will have to meet hereafter, that I do know that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, and that I do know this is his work, and that there must be faith in Jesus Christ, and obedience unto the laws and ordinances of his gospel, if we would obtain eternal life. These things we have accepted, and it is our desire and we are making effort to live up to the perfect law of Christ, the law of the gospel, which is a law of liberty. But we are mortal, we confess our sins daily before God, and before one another, still we have hope, notwithstanding our weaknesses, that we will endure in the faith, and that by persistent striving and with the help of the Lord, we will ultimately overcome evil and gain eternal life, and we can afford to be merciful and charitable to those who are less fortunate than are we.

OUR ACCEPTED PRINCIPLES ETERNAL

To those who are on the outside I would like to say this, that while members of this Church are mortal, and have weaknesses, and do err and do things that are not commendable, the principles which we have accepted are eternal, they are true and exalting, and we should be able to differentiate between the lives, actions and words of men, and the religion which they have received and which in their weakness they are trying to live. Now, I admonish you to repent of your sins and come and join us and be better men and women, if you can, than we are, and we will not be jealous or envious, we will love you the more.

God bless you all, members of the Church and non-members alike, our Father's children, may those who are in spiritual darkness, be brought to see the light. May they be given courage to act according to the light and understanding they may receive, that all who would, may eventually be saved and exalted in the kingdom of God, I earnestly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

SYMPATHY EXTENDED TO THOSE WHO MOURN

Since our last Conference, President Peter M. Hansen, of the Bear River stake, has passed away, also Brothers Arthur A. Paxman, Edgar A. Hunsaker and Hans C. Sorenson, Bishops of Washington, Mesa, and Mount Carmel wards, respectively.

The fine singing today reminds me of the fact that our organist, the late John J. McClellan, has also passed away.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to those who have been called upon, through the death of their loved ones, to be separated from them.

The choir sang the anthem, "Great is Jehovah, the Lord," Jessie Williams singing the solo parts.

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Harry L. Payne, president of the St. Joseph stake, Arizona.

Conference adjourned until Monday morning, 10 o'clock, October 5, 1925.

FIRST OVERFLOW MEETING

An overflow meeting of the conference was held in the Assembly Hall at 10 o'clock, Sunday Morning, October 4.

Elder Rey L. Pratt, of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Mexican mission, presided.

The music was furnished by a double quartet from the Thirty-first ward, Salt Lake City, Elder George H. Durham, conductor; Elder Tracy Y. Cannon at the organ.

The congregation sang, "Come, come, ye Saints."

Prayer was offered by Elder Harrison E. Jenkins, of Salt Lake City.

The congregation sang, "Come, let us anew."

ELDER SERGE F. BALLIF

Formerly President of the Swiss-German Mission

My beloved brothers and sisters, I feel very humble and weak this morning in standing before this great congregation of Latter-day Saints, and I trust that the words uttered in the prayer may be realized.

I am very thankful to my heavenly Father for the knowledge and testimony that I have of the gospel of Jesus Christ. There never has been a doubt in my mind from my earliest infancy of the divinity of this work in which we are engaged. I take this book, the Bible, from cover to cover, as an inspired word, inspired of the Lord; and I have been taught all my life to believe it. Notwithstanding all that may be said by the scientists, I never have discovered anything in my life in the Word of the Lord that is not a part of all true science. I believe it with all my soul; I believe it is the science of all truth, and if we have the Spirit of the Lord with us when we read this book, we will be able to know beyond all question of doubt that it is the Word of God.

I was a little surprised, this morning, in reading the morning paper, to see my name announced as one of the speakers in this conference, this morning.

I have just recently returned from a business and pleasure trip throughout Utah, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, and I also went over into British Columbia. In all the years of my life I do not believe that I ever saw the country so prosperous as it is at the present time. I never saw such crops of wheat throughout the northwest, such crops of alfalfa, of beets, and fruit as I have seen during my travels the last few weeks. And I was thinking that we all should feel that the Lord is mindful of this people. He has blessed the earth for our sakes, for our good; for we are all his people, all his children—we may not all see alike, but at the same time we are all the children of the Father—and he pours out his blessings upon us. And when he does that, he does it for the purpose that we will use these blessings to accomplish good. I hope that this will be a warning to our people that they should be mindful of these blessings and take care of the things that the Lord is blessing us with. I appreciate, beyond my power to say, the blessings that have come to me. I enjoy them and I appreciate them, and I want to show my appreciation by serving the Lord and keeping his commandments. And the only way I can do it, is by being mindful of the Lord's goodness to me, and doing my full duty in keeping his commandments and obeying his laws. What a wonderful thing it would be today if all the people this year should remember the Lord, not forget him at this time of prosperity! It is easy to remember him when we are in distress, in famine. Remember the Lord in the day of plenty. Remember that he has opened the windows of heaven and has poured his blessings upon us. Now, let us be good stewards and take care of what the Lord has given us, and pay our tithes and our offerings, and the Lord will continue to bless us.

Since coming into the room I have thought of this passage of scripture, which I am going to read to you. I believe in all the principles of the gospel. We have been preaching them now for practically one hundred years: faith, repentance, and baptism, and many of us—perhaps all of us present today—have rendered obedience to the first principles of the gospel. I remember so well that beautiful, matchless sermon of the Master's, the Sermon on the Mount. After he had concluded that sermon he spoke to the Saints as follows:

"Judge not, that ye be not judged.

"For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

"Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

"Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

I think of this for myself very often. I would like to judge my brethren and sisters righteously and justly. I think that we are too often prone to judge harshly. O, it is a beautiful thing to be kind and charitable and judge righteously in all affairs pertaining to our everyday lives. This gospel of faith, repentance, and baptism to me does not end when we have been born again, but it goes on throughout our daily lives, and what we build here, we will inhabit; what we sow here, we will reap, just as surely as the Lord lives. And we cannot deceive the Lord, because the Lord is just and will mete out unto us justice in the fullest measure, and I believe, my brethren and sisters, that we should be careful in judging one another not too rashly and too quickly. Be careful and wise in your judgments.

"Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

I believe those words with all my heart; I think they are all true. And I do not believe that I can sit down in my home and pray and ask the Lord to help me, and then, if I go out on to the road in my daily life in business, that I can deceive the Lord, if I am not honest and just with my fellowmen, do not pay my tithes and offerings, and am not honest in my daily labors. I believe that a true Latter-day Saint is true in every respect, and lives up to his professions in every respect. That is the doctrine of the Master, that we shall practice and live up to the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, that the world may see our good works, judge us by them, and glorify our Father in heaven.

"For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

How are you going to knock? "Seek and ye shall find." My brothers and sisters, the Lord is not going to give us anything that we do not work for. We can sit here and pray for a thing, but faith without works is dead, and in all avocations of life, in my daily business, in my daily work, I commend myself every morning to the Lord. And O, how thankful I am for the teachings of my dear old mother! I can remember very well when I was a little boy, when my mother called her family about her knee and we prayed. We did not pray to an unknown God but to our heavenly Father. And I can testify to you that our heavenly Father hears and answers prayers. I know that just as well as I know that I am living, and I know that he will answer the prayers of all his faithful and humble servants who seek him honestly and diligently.

"Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?"

"Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?"

"If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?"

Ask him in faith and he will bless you. He often blesses us, I think, more than we are worthy of. He is kinder to us than we are in many instances to our neighbors, to our brothers and sisters.

"Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."

I believe in that, I believe in every word of it. I never would ask a man to do a thing for me that I would not do for him. I was president of the Swiss-German mission in 1903. For about six years and a half I presided over that mission, but I always had this in mind that I would never send a man to do a thing in the mission field that I would not do and did not do myself. I believe in that principle, I believe in justice, and whatever I ask a man to do I am willing and feel that we should all be willing to do ourselves. That was the teaching of the Master.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat;

"Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

I was thinking of this scripture during my last travels. I was in the city of Portland, I was in the city of Seattle, and a great many of the large centers, and the first thing I looked for was the "Mormon" Church, the Church which claims to be the only true Church upon the earth, and I believe that absolutely, but in those large cities I had to hunt around as if for a needle in a haystack to find our people. I found them in Portland, but not in Seattle. I could not find them in many other places. No doubt they were there. I was there only a short time. But in visiting among those people I could see their condition—not that I condemn or blame them; they are living up to what they know, to what they understand perhaps to be right—but O, what a power it would be if the gospel of Jesus Christ could be made known to those people. In the city of Seattle I felt as if I would like to stand up on some high hill and proclaim the gospel to the people of Seattle. I believe they are a good people and are ready for the gospel, and it will be given them.

"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

"Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

"Even so, every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth not forth good fruit.

"A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

"Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Now, my message to you, by brethren and sisters, is to do the will of our Father which is in heaven, and you will find in the gospel of Jesus Christ restored in our day, the true and unadulterated gospel of Jesus Christ. I have no apologies to offer for the gospel restored through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I know, and have always known, and bear testimony to you that I know, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, that he was the instrument in the hands of the Lord in establishing his Church here upon the earth. And I want to testify to you that I know beyond all question of doubt that all those prophets who have succeeded the Prophet Joseph Smith have been prophets, seers, and revelators, called and inspired of the Lord. And the man who stands at the head of this Church today, I want to bear witness to you, holds the keys; and when God has a message for this people, I promise you that that message will come through the proper channel. God bless you. Amen.

A double mixed quartet, consisting of Elders George H. Durham, John T. Siech, Sisters Ada Thompson, Aurora Hiatt, Jennie Thompson, Mrs. George H. Durham, and Elder Harrison E. Jenkins and June Sharp, sang, "The sermon on the mount."

ELDER ABEL JOHN EVANS

Of the Presidency of the Alpine Stake

My beloved brethren and sisters, I presume an apology is due from me for coming into the meeting late. I have been a subscriber to the Deseret News, and a reader of it for fifty years, but the notice that was published there escaped my attention and for that reason I was called from the congregation in the large Tabernacle by President Grant this morning, and I rejoice exceedingly this morning that I have been counted worthy to occupy a few moments of your time in this conference. I feel great diffidence in arising to address you, for I have long since learned that no elder of this Church can interest the Latter-day Saints except he be guided by the divine influence of our Father, and therefore I beseech of you an interest in your faith and prayers for a short time.

I rejoice in this great Latter-day work, and bear witness to the remarks made by Elder Ballif that I heard after coming into the building. That great apostle of the Gentiles, Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, made this remarkable statement: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things God hath laid up in store for those who love him." And then let me add that "those who love him will keep his commandments." I sometimes fancy that perhaps we are not as appreciative of our membership in this Church as we ought to be, for when we remember that no person can occupy a position of trust in this Church without first becoming a member thereof, and that all these blessings and these wonderful experiences that we are permitted to enjoy and by reason of participation, in which our souls become enlarged, our vision extends, and we are better able to appreciate and see the handiwork of our Father. We realize that all these matters grow out of our membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I can say for one that I have been in the Church all my life, and at no time, during that entire period, have I been better satisfied, had more assurance, or ever felt in my mind more determination to continue to the end than I do this day. I thank God for that. It has been my privilege to traverse land and sea to the old world to preach the gospel, and I have sought in my humble way to explain the principles of our doctrine. I have borne my testimony in private homes, upon the street corners, and in assemblages of people in halls, bearing witness of the divinity of the restoration of the gospel anew—not a new gospel but the old gospel introduced and ushered into the world while we have been permitted to live in it. O, what a wonderful thing it is, and when we contemplate all the great multitude and millions of people extant upon the earth, we realize that but few in comparison have had their hearts touched and their souls lit up so that they have received a witness of the divinity of this great latter-day work. When I contemplate the condition of my own father and mother; and when I refer to that, it is not from a selfish standpoint, because many of your grandfathers and grandmothers were under the same condition—my father belonged to no church, he took very great delight in going and putting ministers to rout. He was a great reader of the Scriptures and could put them all to rout by the Scriptures themselves. When he heard a man by the name of Hanshaw had come to preach the gospel, he and his father went there for the very purpose of exploding the things that he would put forth. When he heard that witness, though in broken sentences, and with a stammering tongue, bearing witness that the Lord had revealed anew, that the Lord had come himself and brought his Son and introduced him to that boy, in answer to prayer, that he was to restore that lost gospel that had been obliterated from the earth for so many years, it touched his soul, and not a word came from his lips. And when they were going away, my grandfather said to him, "Abel, how is it you did not pitch into this man?" He said, "Father, that man has the truth, and I shall not be found fighting against God." And I think, as I understand it, that he was the second man baptized in Wales. He devoted ten years of the best of his life from the time he was 25 years old to 35 years old in preaching that gospel in his native land. He then came out here to Utah, under trying circumstances, and endured the common hardships incident to pioneer life in Utah, and then was called from the Great Tabernacle without previous notice and sent back to his native land, and after a year and a half of service, laid down his bones in that land for the gospel's sake.

My mother, a girl of twenty years of age, never met my father until they were on the sea. She left the home of her father and mother, who were dear and good people, because her heart had been touched with that divine message, and went out into a world among strangers, knowing not where she was going, except that the voice had called and she had heeded it, "Come out of Babylon; the great Babylon is falling." When I think of these things, I wonder sometimes, my brothers and sisters, if we have been as true to them, if we have been as faithful to the trust and heritage committed to our keeping as we should be, when they endured what they did in these trials and circumstances!

So I rejoice in this great latter-day work, and my mind reverted back to a passage of scripture when Brother Ballif was reading this great Sermon on the Mount, considered and accepted as among the greatest sermons ever delivered to humanity. The closing part of it came to my mind: When ye read these things, if you accept them not you will be as a man that built his house upon the sand, and when the winds blew and the rains descended and the floods came and beat upon that house, it fell, because it was builded upon the sand; but those who hear these words of mine and do them, I will liken unto a man that built his house upon the rock, and when the winds blew and the rains descended and the floods came and beat upon that house, it fell not. Why? Because it was built upon a rock. I want to bear witness to this congregation here this morning that this Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is builded upon the rock. And when the winds blow, as they have blown in the past, when the rains descend, as they have descended in the past, when floods come, as they have in the past, it will not fall, because it is founded upon a rock. All the persecution, drivings, scourges that have been put upon this people have left them standing firm, and unmoved from their mooring, because God is at the helm.

Now, my brethren and sisters, we should rejoice in this work. If there is one principle that has sunk into my soul and over which I rejoice, as much as any that has come into my life, it is because I am sure beyond the question of a doubt that men and women will be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body. If that is true, it should be an incentive to you and me, in every walk in life, to see to it that we shall give to the world, to our friends, to our Church, to our God, the best there is in us. That is the way it appeals to me. We might deceive our bishop, brethren and sisters, we may deceive his counselors, we may deceive our neighbors, but let me assure you that you cannot deceive God. The Lord has told us that we should pay one-tenth of our interest annually into his storehouse, that the means may be provided for the Church that it may be carried on properly in conformity with the plan he has instituted to carry out his work. I wonder if we are doing it. If we are, then we are justified; if we are not doing it, we are not, for it is a most gracious and just law, the most equitable perhaps ever instituted in the world. If a man only earns $100 a year he is only required to pay $10; if he earns a thousand dollars, $100; $10,000, then a thousand. It is equitable, it is distributed properly and justly. And O, what a blessing it is that this system has come into our midst, that the Lord has revealed it anew in the Doctrine and Covenants, the law that was carried out anciently. You remember what the Lord charged his people with when he said, "This whole people have robbed me." If they were robbing God then, if we are doing the same thing now, we are robbing him now. Do you want to rob him, my brethren and sisters? I take it that you don't. But sometimes we lack just a little faith.

It seems now that the world is moving mighty rapidly; we must have automobiles, we must go to places of resort, we must dress in fine linen. That seems to be the rule, but I want to tell you and warn you now that there must be a curtailing in these things, that our hearts may turn to God and his purposes and his work in the world; for we are the salt of the earth, and don't forget it, and on us rests the responsibility of preaching this gospel to the nations of the earth, that all people may be warned to repent and come unto the Lord. That is our mission. And then in addition to that we are expected to gather in the genealogy of our ancestry, that we may be bound back to father Adam, for they without us cannot be made perfect, nor we without them. This is our responsibility. Will we discharge it? Each one must answer for himself?

May God help us to do it, my brethren and sisters, to see the light and then walk in it, for I bear witness that this is the work of the Lord. Joseph Smith was divinely called by the Father, and I have not any more doubt that the Father and Son appeared to Joseph Smith and that the Father instructed the Savior, and the Savior delivered the message to Joseph Smith, than I would have, had I heard it, because God has borne witness to me. You remember in the case of Thomas, when the Savior was resurrected and Thomas would not believe, unless he could see the prints and thrust his hand into the wound, this is what the Savior said when Thomas did see him, "Come hither, Thomas, and put your fingers in the prints, thrust your hand into the wound." Then he said, "Blessed art thou, Thomas, for thou hast seen and believed; but more blessed are those who have believed and not seen"—because of the witness and the divine impression of the Holy Ghost.

May God help us to do these things, my brethren and sisters, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ADAM S. BENNION

Superintendent of Church Schools

My dear brethren and sisters, I sincerely trust that the time I may occupy may be occupied under the inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord. This is the first time that it has come to me to address a congregation in General Conference. I have sat through these conferences now for six years with a sort of safety, a safety akin to the security of the man who refused to take out any insurance because, he said, he had never died yet. And then, as a thunderbolt out of the sky comes the call from the tabernacle to come over here to join with you. I trust that I may catch the spirit of this gathering, that the spirit which has prompted both Brother Ballif and Brother Evans may be mine, to join with you in the spirit of that wonderful sermon, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." I would that we might so hunger and thirst this hour and not be disappointed.

My testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ grows with the years. It is stronger as I gain more experience. I am more grateful every day that I live that I belong to this Church. I find such evidence of its truth and its divinity that I am proud, though proud in humility, for my membership in it; and, like the brethren who have preceded me, I have been a member in it all of my life. I was born into it and therefore cannot claim the distinction that attaches to conversion, but the longer I am in it the more grateful I am for my membership. Very many times of late I have been running through my consciousness to discover the reasons for that gratitude. The subject is altogether too big to be launched here in its entirety; I find evidences at every turn, but there have been running through my mind of late thoughts which go back to California. As a matter of fact, they center in an experience that I had down in the University of California. The men on the faculty of the University of California used to make the observation frequently that in view of the fact that I had come from Utah perhaps I knew something about the Mormons, and when I said, yes, I was from Utah, and made the second revelation to them that I was also a Mormon, without an exception, when they heard that word they used to exclaim, "O—, O, you are a Mormon!" It has been exclaimed so many times that it began to get into the center of my interest. Just last summer, as we climbed up Timpanogos, a visiting teacher, who was giving work in the Alpine summer school, took occasion to make an observation with reference to God and his concept of Him, and as he explained that his idea of God, of course, was an intangible sort of being, not a being at all, for that matter—a great universal force—he looked up and caught the expression, I suppose, on my face, and said, “O, I suppose I should not have said that to you, because you are a Mormon.” As I thought of those “O’s” so many times I decided that I would work out a little answer, and so now, when any of my friends say, “O, you are a Mormon?” I say, “O, yes, I am.” And I am going to leave you, if I may enjoy the spirit of this gathering, a few of the O’s which go into my little scheme of answer.

I take it we have gathered this morning that we may think through anew the gospel plan, in order that we may build up our own testimonies. For want of a better scheme, I would like to hang a few ideas about this little scheme which I call the O’s of Mormonism.

The first O that makes me grateful for my membership in this Church is the O of Origin. A noted writer, who has produced one of the outstanding books in religious education in this country, says that he is not very much concerned about origins, that the origin of a church does not bother him; he does not ask, “How did it get started?” but his test of a religion or church is, “What will it do for its members?” I grant you—and I hope to say something about that before I am through—I grant you that what a church does for its people really is a great test of a religion, but I am not prepared to go the full limit and say that origins do not make any difference. I find that is not true; this is a day of origins. I have been reading and rereading again that book by Dr. Wiggam, “The New Decalogue of Science,” and the whole foundation is a foundation of origins. He says that men and women become what they become essentially because of their birthright; given a noble family, in all probability out of that parenthood you will have worthy children; given inferior parenthood, and the chances are you will have inferior children; it is all largely a matter of origins. He opens one of the chapters in that book with the famous declaration that this has become a wonderful country very largely because it had its origin in a foundation of wonderful people. He pays them the tribute to say that they shot Indians through the porthole with one eye but that they taught the Bible to their children with the other; they lived on parched corn, it is true, but they preserved their parched learning, which centered in their idea of God. And America has been builded as a great commonwealth because America had a great origin. Wherever I turn, I find that origins count tremendously. I have just had the good fortune to enjoy this same trip that Brother Ballif has described, and along the way I have been struck with the thought that along with other wonders, the water supply throughout the Northwest is a very great source of satisfaction. Their water supply is pure, because its origin is right. It arises in the mountains. Very many cities in this great country of ours have the problem of a water supply, because they lack that origin. It is hard to improve upon the water that nature gives us. Origin! we could spend the hour on origins. No breeder of animals but knows that he will produce the kind of stock that he breeds to. He knows that at every turn he will get in kind, and the kind of stock he raises will be determined by the origin of the stock. No man ever chooses a wife but he is tremendously impressed with the importance of origins. I cannot conceive of a man's going forward to say, "I have come to that time when I want a helpmate; I do not care at all about origins; I will just find an available girl, and quite apart from her family history and all else I will choose her." I have discovered that men of discernment choose out of worthy families. I am grateful to the comment of a brother-in-law who gave this humorous but tremendously helpful hint—I wish I had the genius to pass it on to the boys—he said, if he could give advice to boys he would tell them when they came to pick a helpmate, to find a worthy mother, and take any one of the daughters they could get. He was impressed that there is a tremendous force in origins. And yet some of our good friends would say that in this most vital of concerns in life, religion, the thing that binds us here and hereafter, which links up between time and eternity, it does not matter what the origin may be. I am glad to belong to a church that claims as its origin a revelation out of heaven announcing the voice of God Himself and His Son to declare His prophet, as was declared unto those of old. And that is the kind of origin I want my Church to claim. All Latter-day Saints may be grateful this morning that we belong to a church that has its origin in that divine pronouncement. The pronouncement was followed by others and with an ushering in of the power of the Priesthood and the giving of the keys of this last dispensation. Mormonism rises or falls upon that tremendous platform, that in its origin it goes back to God the Father and the Son. We could spend the morning on origins. I am simply throwing out a few hints for your more mature thinking, when you shall have left this conference.

Much has been said in the writings of this Church about our wonderful second O. I want to say only a word about it. The second O is the O of Organization. It was said a number of years ago that the two most perfect organizations in the world were the German army and the Mormon Church, and as I have said to my friends rather jocularly of late, "We know what has happened to the German army; I presume we have a pretty clear claim to the title." But I do not say it boastfully. This Church has a wonderful organization. It is possible for a message to go forth from the President of this Church to all the stakes of Zion, out through the wards, and within a week there can be aroused the membership of more than half a million, to any word that shall be proclaimed. It was the pronouncement during all the time of the war, during the campaign of enlistment, in the raising of funds and supplies, that it was marvelous how this Church could respond.

But I am not interested in that aspect of organization so much as I am in another. Not one of your speakers here this morning had announcement other than he may have picked up through the paper, and I suspect all of us were alike in not having yet read that issue, many of us being out at an early meeting long before this one was called. There are speaking at the sessions of this conference men who have had no previous notification. That lies within the genius of our organization. It is a very wholesome thing. I sometimes wish it might be extended. Nobody can be feeling absolutely safe today, because it may be his good privilege to occupy this same position. Going back to that same California experience: I took a good friend of mind down to our service at Oakland, and when the service was over he inquired, "Is that the kind of service you have regularly?" I said, "In general, that is the plan."

"Will that man speak next Sunday?" and I said, "No, he won't speak next Sunday."

"Who will?"

"I don't know."

"Well, who will speak the next Sunday?"

"I don't know."

"Do you mean to tell me that you have men speak there who are not regularly appointed to do so?" I said, "Yes, that is the scheme."

Then he made the observation—and I think he had not been particularly struck by what he had heard that evening—"Don't you think you would get better sermons if you had one man deliver them all and if you would let him prepare them carefully?"

I said, "I have just one observation to make in answer to that: I presume you might get a more finished product, but I will ask you which would make the stronger church—to leave all the sermons to one man and let him prepare them carefully, or to have a church membership any man in which knows that on Sunday he may be called to fill that responsibility? I will leave it with you as a question, which will build greater strength on the part of the members of our Church, your plan or ours?"

He said nothing, but the next day he came over to my desk and said, "I have been thinking over your question ever since you asked it last night, and you win; yours will build a strength which cannot be built in the other plan." That is the genius of this organization. I am delighted when I think that there is no caste or class or family control in this organization. Nobody knows who shall be called next to responsibilities in wards, stakes, or general positions. The membership in this Church has in its own being the potentiality of its own leadership. Let me put it the other way, the strength of a democracy lies in the fact that its leadership is always inherent; given great numbers, you have the chance for great leadership. It can come up from within. I say the second great O in this Church is the O of Organization, and I am mighty happy in my membership in that organization.

But, let me run on, because I should like to expose you for a minute or two to two other O's that you may think about them. The third O grows out of the second. It is very much like the second, except that it is a double-headed one. I have said very many times, that it is as if it were a double link in a chain; the two segments always go together. I know of no way of separating them, and I should not want to if I could. One of the very great things that attaches to this organization lies in the fact that that organization presumes obligation on the part of all of the membership of this Church. And then I am struck with the companion thought—a man never encounters an Obligation in his life but he finds in it his Opportunity. Up in the northwest recently a young man was called into a bishopric, and under the suddenness of that call he felt depressed. He said, "I doubt that I shall ever be able to respond under this obligation." It occurred to me that the obligation that was placed upon him as a new bishop in this Church was the opportunity that opened the door to a great life for him. And at every turn in this Church I find that these two third O's go together. I call them the O's of Obligation-Opportunity. Nobody ever joined this Church because he anticipated having an easy time. I cannot imagine any one's coming into membership in this Church feeling that he was thereby opening the door of an easy access. The gospel of Jesus Christ, as taught by the Latter-day Saints, presumes obligation, and with it opportunity. From the time a boy is a deacon he is called to fill responsible positions, and from then on up until his declining years, he finds an office that is imposing obligation upon him. He is asked, and so are the women in this Church, to respond to calls, and no man living fully to his duty is free from obligation.

There came into my office only within the last two weeks, a young man who had been called to go upon a mission to a foreign land. He came out of a family that had not been well to do, and which had no funds to see him through the call. He had been working for two years to lay by a little sum to go to college, and there had come the call to go on a mission. He said, "It is the biggest obligation that has ever come my way, and I am wondering just what I ought to do. I have a mind to go through college. I would like to complete my training. I have saved enough. Should I go on a mission? I would like your judgment."

In the face of that obligation, calling for the expenditure of all that he had saved during two hard years of labor, that boy was willing to lay his all upon the altar. I am happy to announce to this congregation that he has left for his mission and will have spent all of his savings under that obligation before he returns, but I promised him that that obligation will be an opportunity greater than he could get in any college in all the world. I say it as a school man, and I am as satisfied as I stand here that there will come out of that obligation and his rising to it a blessing which will cause him to pronounce it not an obligation but a tremendous opportunity. And the Church at every turn offers them to you and to me.

I see that I have run to within the margin of my time. I should like just to leave you with the fourth O of this little scheme, in order that you may run it through to your satisfaction. I must advert to the man I quoted in the beginning. After all, the test of a religion does lie in the kind of men and women it helps to make; so that my last O, of necessity, is the O of Outcome, or Output, if you prefer it. I am very happy to have my Church judged by the kind of men and women it produces. I have said it many times, and I like to repeat it, it is a tremendous challenge; if I could not discuss the gospel with friends, I would ask them just to do two things: let them find a representative group of young men and women who have been taught the gospel and have formed their habits of life under its inspiration; let them see that group of boys and girls as one side of the picture; and then let them find as they could in this audience this morning, men and women, silvered with years, who have spent their lives in the gospel, who have subscribed to its principles, who have loved and lived it; and I am willing to leave those two groups as my evidence to the world that this gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

I am happy, as I stand here, to know that this Church has produced clean men and women. When our young men went up to Camp Lewis, through which place I have had the privilege to go within the last two weeks, fifteen hundred of them reported for examination, and out of fifteen hundred only three gave any evidence whatever of social disease. I am proud to know that Utah ranked with three other states in this Union, the cleanest states morally that sent boys to the front. I am willing to be judged by the fruit of the tree. I am glad to know that we have one of the highest birth rates in the world today, 33 to the thousand. A high birth rate almost always carries with it a high death rate. Though we have a birth rate of 33, our death rate is only 7 to the thousand, one of the lowest in the world. I read that with pride when I read that Frances' death rate is 17 to the thousand, with an infant mortality of 96 to the thousand—almost one in 10 born to die within the first years of its career. I am glad to know that we lead Europe. I have quoted France—17 to the thousand; England follows, as I recall, with 11.6. Our death rate, in spite of our high birth rate, is only 7 to the thousand. We have a divorce record of which any people in the world could be proud. We have been charged with immorality, with a lack of standard of virtue, and yet I am glad to proclaim to the world that with all of our membership, numbering beyond a half million, there have been within the past year only 256 cases of divorce. I only regret them, but they constitute the barest fraction of a per cent of our total population. That kind of record cannot be held up to the world by a people whose lives have not been based upon sound principles. I am happy to testify that judged by its fruit, the gospel of Jesus Christ has produced worthy men and women.

I just find in that a tremendous challenge to all of us. I wish we had the power so to live that men and women seeing us could come, as they have come on hundreds of occasions, to marvel at this work. May I close with the thought that was given me in California as I met people there who had been converted to our Church. I took occasion to ask them what it was that brought them into the Church. First of all, they said, they became interested in this gospel, because of the young men and young women who proclaimed its message. "Any church that will produce that type of men and women is a good enough church for me." God bless us with the strength to live this gospel, that wherever we go men and women will say of us that as members of that Church we are an Outcome that does honor to the Church.

And so, my brethren and sisters, when my friends exclaim, "O, you are from Utah?" or "O, you are a 'Mormon'?" I say, "O, yes, thank God that I am." And O that he would give us the power to live, to all of its possibilities, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANDREW JENSON

Assistant Church Historian

I have been greatly interested in the remarks already made at this overflow meeting, and one thing that impressed me in the beginning was the singing of "Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear." I also became very much interested in one of those O's that Brother Bennion spoke of—the Origin of Mormonism.

It has been my privilege during the past two months to visit some of the so-called waste places of Zion, and adding these places to the list of those I have previously visited, I am now able to say that I am more or less acquainted with nearly all the places that have become sacred to the Latter-day Saints because of their connection with the early days of this Church.

It was a pleasant task for me to visit Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, where the Prophet Joseph Smith was born, and to then follow in his wake to the western part of the State of New York and there to enter that sacred grove (a remnant of an extensive forest), where the Father and the Son appeared to Joseph Smith and gave him certain instructions about not joining the sects of the day, but to wait for further revelation. I also visited the old Smith residence, or the very spot where the angel Moroni appeared to Joseph Smith on that memorable night between the 21st and 22d of September, 1825, and then followed the young Prophet, as it were, to the hill Cumorah, where I have stood a number of times looking at the place where the angel Moroni showed the Prophet Joseph where the plates containing an account of the old inhabitants of this land, were hidden, from which plates Joseph afterwards translated the Book of Mormon.

Then on my last visit I had occasion to go down to the Susquehanna River in Pennsylvania to visit old Harmony where the Prophet Joseph, after he had been driven by mobs from his parents' home, translated the Book of Mormon. The work of translation was done in the States of Pennsylvania and New York, but mostly in that part of the township of Harmony, which is now included in Oakland, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania. I also had the privilege of visiting the place, or the vicinity, where John the Baptist appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery on the 15th day of May, 1829, and ordained them to the holy Aaronic Priesthood, and again, to visit the vicinity where the Melchisedec Priesthood was restored and where the voice of Peter, James and John was heard in the wilderness on the banks of the Susquehanna River between Harmony, Pennsylvania, and Colesville, Broome county, New York.

It was indeed a blessed privilege to me to stand upon these holy places, for such they are classed with me. I have also been permitted to enter the Kirtland Temple in the State of Ohio, and to stand in the very pulpit where the Savior himself appeared on the 3rd of April, 1836, and spoke to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, telling them that he had accepted of the temple which had been built to his name by the Saints in the days of their poverty. It was in the same pulpit and on the same occasion that Moses appeared and restored the keys for the gathering of Israel from the lands of the north, the isles of the sea and from other places to which Israel was driven thousands of years ago. The giving of these keys to men in mortality meant the fulfillment of prophecy to the effect that God who scattered Israel will gather them again in the last days. The congregation of Saints in this building and the thousands and thousands of people congregated upon this Temple Block today, attending this General Conference of the Church, are here as a result of those keys given by Moses in the Kirtland temple on that memorable 3rd of April. On the same day, Elijah the prophet, who was taken up to heaven without tasting death, appeared to Joseph Smith and gave unto him the keys for turning the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to their fathers. And as a result of the restoration of these keys we witness today the work going on in the Temple for the salvation of not only ourselves but for our ancestors who have passed away without a knowledge of the true plan of salvation. It has brought love into our hearts for our progenitors and we hope the children after us will do their duty in continuing this great vicarious work.

The visits to the earth of these holy beings and the restoration of the keys of the Priesthood is the origin of "Mormonism," the beginning of it. It is a known fact that water never rises above its source. All our mountain streams rise high up in the mountains and hills and they continue to run down grade, forming streams and rivers; thus a creek or river does not rise above its source. So with "Mormonism"; it must be traced to its source. The origin of Mormonism is revelation from heaven. God has spoken from his heavenly abode and restored unto the earth the gospel of Jesus Christ, with its Priesthood and authority. Based on such a beginning, we can boldly say that the doctrines taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are true and stand out in great contrast with doctrines taught by men. Joseph Smith was not permitted to join the sects of the day because the preachers of these sects taught for doctrines the commandments of men; they honored God with their lips, while their hearts were far away from him; they had a form of goldiness, but denied the power thereof. But the Gospel which the Latter-day Saints advocate and which has brought such grand and glorious results is different. It has also brought into the world some of the best men and women that can be found anywhere on God's footstool. These indeed are the fruits of Mormonism, or the restored Gospel of Christ. If it had not been for the divine origin of Mormonism, and the truths revealed to us from heaven—not by the cunning craftiness of men but revealed by God himself—our success as a Church would have been altogether different. Christ himself revealed to the inhabitants of the earth in our day his own religion, and that is why we claim that we possess Christ's Christianity—not a German Christianity, not an American Christianity, not an English or Dutch Christianity, but Christ's own Christianity, which in its nature is today similar to the doctrines advocated by the Savior in that grand and glorious Sermon on the Mount referred to by a former speaker.

During my late sojourn in the East it was my privilege to travel over the Pioneer trail. I passed over it the first time fifty-nine years ago, as a little white-haired Danish boy traveling with ox teams, and to follow the same trail now and to see Chimney Rock and many other important and interesting points of interest made by heart rejoice and reminded me of the days of my youth. I was pleased to think that I, who in 1866, walked all the way from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City as a lad, now had the opportunity to go over the same trail in an automobile as one of the Church historians, for the purpose of locating that trail so accurately that our children and all generations to come may know what is meant by the old "Mormon Trail," and to a certain extent be made to understand how their fathers and mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers, made sacrifices for the Gospel's sake. Many of these weary pilgrims rest in unknown graves. There is scarcely a mile between Nauvoo, Illinois, and Salt Lake City, Utah, which would not have been marked by graves of the Latter-day Saints who fell as martyrs by the wayside, if a knowledge of their resting places had been preserved.

There have been several classes of martyrs in this Church. Those who have been put to death violently by mobs number about fifty, and those who have died in the missionary field, like Brother Abel Evans' father, number about four hundred; these of the latter class sacrificed their lives while traveling in the different missionary fields preaching the gospel. And then more numerous than any other class of martyrs are those hundreds—yes, thousands—who died on the journey from Nauvoo to the west or later as emigrants from Europe died on the voyage across the ocean, on the passage up the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and on the plains while trying to reach the homes of the Latter-day Saints in the Rocky mountains.

I visited Nauvoo—beautiful Nauvoo as it once was—with its old "Mormon" cemetery. It made me think of Palestine which once was a land flowing with milk and honey, figuratively speaking, but the people in that country transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, and broke the everlasting covenant, and brought the whole country under a curse. Thus, when I visited Palestine, many years ago, I could scarcely see anything interesting there except reminders of the good old times that once were but are no more. The curse of the Almighty has rested upon that land ever since the day of Isaiah, of which its present barrenness amply testifies, though some changes for the better may have taken place of late years since General Allenby of the British forces took possession of the country.

When I saw Nauvoo, once a beautiful city, with a great temple costing a million dollars—a city that covered almost the whole of the peninsular on which it was built, I felt sad to witness its desolation. Between New Orleans and the twin cities (St. Paul and Minneapolis) there is not a more beautiful place for the location of a city than Nauvoo. But what is Nauvoo today? A wilderness! I crossed the great Mississippi river, from Montrose to Nauvoo (which in years gone by had been crossed by so many of our people). I wanted to see Nauvoo once more, though I had seen it before; but on this, my last visit, I took occasion to visit certain places in and around Nauvoo that I never visited before. On my first approach to it, I wondered where the city was, for I wandered through the weed-covered streets, one after another, and only here and there saw a human habitation surrounded by weeds. On the banks of the river, where one of the old stone houses stood as early as 1839, I encountered thousands of vicious birds which swarmed around my head apparently with evil intent. And besides these there were millions and millions of flies—"Mormon" flies, they call them—though I think the "Mormons" had nothing to do with originating them. The people from the surrounding country do not like to visit Nauvoo for fear of being eaten up by flies, ravens and other vicious birds which circle around the visitor where there was once a high grade of civilization. Nauvoo, the Beautiful, is now a little insignificant village. I came to the conclusion that a curse had indeed rested upon the place ever since the Saints were driven from there by wicked, bloodthirsty mobs in the memorable year of 1846. Some of the best houses in Nauvoo today are those erected by our people eighty years ago, among them the old residences of Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, John Taylor, Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Edward Hunter, and a score of others. Only a few houses of any consequence have been erected since that time. The beautiful Nauvoo temple is no more; not one stone is left upon another of that grand structure in which so many of the faithful Saints received their blessings before starting for the mountains.

The "Jack 'Mormons'," who succeeded the Saints in Nauvoo came into possession of the city for almost nothing. The Icarians, a French community, came next and tried to turn the temple into an academy, but did not succeed. They split up almost entirely as an organized community while endeavoring to make Nauvoo their home. Then finally came a German population, the present inhabitants of Nauvoo. Germans are good pioneers, usually, and have made good in the United States; they are generally classed among the best settlers and most industrious citizens who have come across the Atlantic to America, but even they cannot flourish in Nauvoo. The blood of the prophets which was shed there, and many others of the Saints who were mobbed and killed by their enemies is crying from the earth against their murderers and plunderers. The Lord was vexed because of these evil deeds and has caused a blight to rest heavily upon the country. The same thing is true, more or less, of Far West, the country around Haun's Mill, and the Crooked river country, in Missouri, where the Latter-day Saints once lived and prospered.

In following the Pioneer trail from Nauvoo on the Mississippi river I visited Sugar Creek, where a number of women gave birth to children prematurely through being exposed to the inclemencies of the weather. Richardson's Point, where a number of our people lie buried. Chariton River, so well known to our people who crossed the plains in 1846 and following years, and Garden Grove, founded by the Saints in 1846, where many of our people lie buried in a "cow yard." This made my heart bleed. At Mt. Pisgah, Iowa, a monument has been erected marking the graves of some 250 of our martyrs, who fell by the wayside through being driven away from Nauvoo in the dead of winter, these exiles suffering as only few people have suffered in this western land.

Continuing my journey I crossed the Missouri river to old Florence, or Winter-Quarters, Nebraska and there visited the old "Mormon" graveyard. What did I find there? A lonely spot where some six hundred Latter-day Saints lie buried under the sod—men, women and children, who could not stand the hardships of the journey any longer. Some of these martyrs were exiles from Nauvoo, while others had come up the Mississippi and Missouri rivers from the European countries. They took sick and died with cholera and other diseases, brought about by over exertion and privations, and their bones are resting in the cemetery at Florence to this day, waiting for that glorious resurrection which awaits God's faithful sons and daughters.

Now, my brothers and sisters, the origin and foundation of "Mormonism" is of such a nature that we can safely build upon it. Let us then be true to our God and to the gospel of Christ, true to our parents, to the pioneers of Utah and to the faithful Saints who died by the wayside. Let us ever remember that the origin of "Mormonism" is revelation from God, and that it is not a temporary organization, but rather what the late Patriarch John R. Murdock of Beaver, once said, when he referred to "Mormonism" as "the greatest thing a-going." Let us be true to our fathers' God and to every truth that we have espoused, and let us realize that we have within our reach the obtaining of a testimony, if we do not already possess it, to the effect that God is the founder of this work, that it is organized in the right way, and that it is expected of us to become the salt of the earth and to be a light and an example to all the world. Christ, addressing his disciples on the Mount said, "Ye are the light of the world * * * Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." This passage of scripture is also applicable to the Latter-day Saints. May God bless you, one and all; may we be true to our God, who is our fathers' God, true to our religion which is true Christianity, and true to every obligation which we have taken upon ourselves, and may we also teach our children to walk in the paths of righteousness, I sincerely pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The quartet sang, "What manner of man is this?"

ELDER REY L. PRATT

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Mexican Mission

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I may be able to crowd into the brief ten minutes left, some few of the thoughts that have been in my mind this morning. I have listened very attentively to all that has been said, and bear witness to its truthfulness. I have been charmed by the beautiful singing of this session and particularly by this last rendition, and truly, my brethren and sisters, we might marvel and exclaim, "What manner of man was this that has wrought so much in the world and that we believe is to do so much in the future in shaping the destinies and bringing about the well-being and the salvation of our Father's children, even all that have ever lived upon this earth!" My thoughts have centered upon him and his great mission and the great faith that we should have in him. I will read to you from our Articles of Faith: "We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are: first, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. . . ." I will leave you, my brethren and sisters, to follow out the quotations and read what the others are, but I wish to dwell particularly this morning upon our belief that underlying all in this Church stands first and foremost faith in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It has been the moving power to all action in all ages of the world.

I would like to read to you here what Paul says in regard to faith:

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

"For by it the elders obtained a good report.

"Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

"By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh.

"By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

"But without faith, it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

I commend to your perusal, my brethren and sisters, Hebrews 11; that shows to us to be a fact what I have asserted, that all the great and mighty works of the prophets and apostles and the great men of old were guided and were wrought by faith. By faith they knew of a surety their status before God, they were able to serve him, they were able to keep his commandments. By faith Daniel was able to live in harmony with the teachings of his Israelitish parentage even in Babylon and become a mighty factor in shaping the destinies of that great nation and of his own people. And Moses was guided by faith. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the old worthies were guided by faith, and they did all they did by faith. It was by faith that Moses smote the Red Sea and its waters rolled back and the Children of Israel passed through dry-shod. It was by faith that they were not consumed by famine in the desert, but God sent them daily that which was necessary to sustain them and see them through their years of pilgrimage.

Brethren and sisters, in this day reference has been made to the origin of this Church and its accomplishments and its privations and sufferings and persecutions that have been heaped upon it. What has been the underlying factor to all this that has been done in this dispensation in which we live? By faith Joseph Smith, a mere boy, was able to bring down to earth the revelations of Almighty God for the redemption of his people, for the establishment of righteousness. By faith he saw the Father and he saw the Son, and he learned and has proclaimed to the world that we are in very deed in the image of our Maker. By faith he learned his status before the Lord and received further revelation through the angel Moroni. By faith he learned of all the restoration that was to be and was the instrument by which it was consummated in the earth. By faith he found the record of the ancient people who inhabited this land, and by faith he translated it and brought forth a new witness for God in this day and age in which we live. By faith he was able to establish the Church and perfect this wonderful organization of which has been spoken today. And by faith it has continued on down to the very moment of time in which we live. By faith he and his people were able to withstand the trials and persecutions heaped upon them, for they saw, over and above and beyond, Christ; and they knew he was a reality. They had faith in him as the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, through whom should be consummated the salvation of men here upon the earth. It was faith that made it possible for Joseph Smith to turn back and go to his certain martyrdom—for he knew where he was going; he said he was going like a lamb to the slaughter. But by faith he went and sealed his testimony with his blood.

Bringing it down to the present day, my brethren and sisters, it is faith that is taking your boys into the world today to proclaim this same truth to the untold millions of our Father's children who are yet in darkness. It is by faith that the fathers and mothers sustain them with means to pursue their labors in the world.

I marvel, my brethren and sisters, when we contemplate what a wonderful thing this faith is. The point I want to get to is this. We are living in a day and age and hour when all the powers of the adversary are combining to destroy faith in the hearts of men. Within the churches and without the churches, every device and every means that can be brought to bear is being brought to bear to destroy faith in the divinity of Jesus Christ, and from the pulpits of the world men who profess to be Christian ministers are doubting and booing the belief that Jesus Christ was in very deed the Son of God. They are endeavoring by all means to discredit his origin as the Son of our Almighty Father. And faith is being attacked from every standpoint—by immortality, by dishonesty, by unchastity—the young people, one after another, are coming to a point in many instances where they are face to face with the issue, "Is there anything in this or not?" And their faith is being assailed, their faith is being attacked.

There were some O's referred to here today, and the last particularly struck my attention, "Opportunity and obligation" that rests upon us today in Israel. O my brethren and sisters, let us by every means within our power kindle, if needs be, and if it is there, keep alive, the faith of our young men and women. Do not let it be destroyed; do not let it be overcome by any sort of teaching which may be going around today. Have in your family circles prayer daily together, that they may witness the exercise of faith in prayer, that the blessings of the Lord may be upon your households. Teach your children the simple principles of the gospel as they have been received through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, for in nothing else is there safety in the world today. O my brethren and sisters, what the steering gear is to the automobile today, is faith in the life of young men and women. We are going at a headlong pitch. And did it ever occur to you what happens to an automobile when the steering gear is broken or defective and ceases to operate? Always, with that irresponsible speed with which the machine flies, it goes on to certain destruction. Did any of you, my brethren and sisters, ever lie in a trough of the sea, in a little vessel, with both rudder and sail gone? I have, for six hours, when the waves were slopping over everywhere. And I have thought that what the rudder or sail was to that little vessel—that would have saved us, and did ultimately when we got them into operation—so would be faith in Jesus Christ in the life of every young man. Did any young man, boy of yours or otherwise, ever come to you and show you with the look in his eye and the anguish in his soul, when he came asking, "Is there anything to this or not?" and you saw that somebody in some insidious, dastardly way had trifled with, and partly destroyed the faith in that young man's life? If you ever did, my brethren, you saw an object of pity, an object of sorrow, and it has been my good fortune and good pleasure to assist to kindle again and keep alive the faith in many young men, that has seemed to have been lost. And in many of them their faith has been attacked in associations here at home. I have been through sorrows in my life; I have laid parents, brothers and sisters and children away, and only God knows how I have loved them! I wonder sometimes if I love more intently than some people. It seems that my love for them makes me suffer, and the more I suffer the more I love them. I would rather they would all go and I could lay them away, with faith in God, than to have one of them become the richest man or the greatest ruler or the greatest intellectual man but without faith; for without faith he is without anchor, and without faith he has nothing to keep him in the path of duty, that makes for happiness, not only in the great hereafter, but makes for happiness and well-being here in this life in which we live. So that now then, when faith is being attacked in all sects and denominations and through all the schools, through the teachings of dubious science, science that after all is only a theory; hold to the faith that our fathers have cherished, I say, hold to the faith in Jesus Christ that is the foundation rock upon which we can surely build for a salvation in our Father's kingdom! The Lord help you to do so, the Lord bless the youth of Zion and keep them in the faith of their fathers, and keep us all, that we may work out our salvation in his presence, is my humble prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah."
Benediction, Elder Arthur F. Barnes, of Salt Lake City.

SECOND OVERFLOW MEETING

A second overflow meeting was held in the Assembly Hall, Sunday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, October 4. Elder Joseph W. McMurrin, of the First Council of Seventy and President of the California mission, presided.

The singing was directed by Professor George H. Durham of the L. D. S. University, Salt Lake City. Elder Frank W. Asper, officiated as organist.

The male chorus of the L. D. S. University sang, "God bless our mountain home," after which the chorus and congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

Prayer was offered by Elder William C. Parkinson, former president of Hyrum stake.

The L. D. S. University mixed chorus sang, "Still, still, with thee, my God."

ELDER JOSEPH R. SHEPHERD

President of the Logan Temple

I feel very humble, my brethren and sisters, this afternoon in being asked to address you in this gathering. I sincerely ask that you may give me your faith and prayers, that I may enjoy the Spirit of the Lord while attempting to address you.

One of our Articles of Faith reads, "We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal, and we believe that he will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God." This principle of continued revelation is one of the prominent characteristics of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is distinctive, for while there are many good Christian people in the world who put great confidence and faith in the Scriptures, as they have been given to us in the Bible, yet a large proportion of them deny that God has communicated with his people since the days of the Saints of which the Bible speaks, and believe that there are none now who receive revelations from God the eternal Father, but that revelation has ceased and that we have all that is sufficient for our guidance in life contained in the Scriptures as they are bound in this volume called the Holy Bible. Is it any wonder, my brethren and sisters, that those who reject continued revelation should find among the many honest Christian people in the world such differing views concerning God and his will concerning us? As we study the condition of Christian people today and note the differing views as expressed by their leading men, men who claim to be the teachers of the word of God to the people, noting the contention that exists, the widely varying views regarding God and his will, is it any wonder, I say, when they by their own free will and choice deny that God can speak to them today and that he has authorized servants to speak in the name of God and give his word concerning these things of which I have spoken?

Wherever the spirit of revelation exists there will be harmony, peace, and contentment, but where there is no revelation from God and where people will not accept revelation from God, you will find discord, discontent, and contention. One of the peculiar things that has been manifested in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, from the beginning up to the present time, has been the unanimity in which the people find themselves. It is seldom that you find anyone contending concerning the doctrine of the Church. It is seldom that you find anyone who is disobedient to the authority of the Church. The people are noted as being a united people. In fact, a great many people outside of the Church have rather felt to find fault with the "Mormon" people, as they call them, because of the unity that exists among them. They complained for the reason that the people were always willing to follow their leaders and to do as they were told. Rather a strange indictment to be brought against the people of God! And what is the secret of the unity of the people, my brothers and sisters? It is that they are actuated by the spirit of revelation, through its President and those who are sustained as prophets, seers, and revelators, but the membership of the Church is entitled to revelation also. The members as individual members are not entitled to revelation for the Church as an organized body, but the same spirit of revelation may be enjoyed by them for their own use, for their own blessing, and for their own support. Every man who stands at the head of a household in the Church of Jesus Christ is entitled to revelation for that family—not for somebody else's family. Every member of the Church is entitled to revelation for his or her guidance, though not for the guidance of any one else. Every bishop is entitled to revelation for the direction of the affairs of the ward over which he presides, and so forth; every person according to his position; but there is not a member of the Church who is not entitled to the principle of revelation, and upon that principle does the strength of this Church stand, and so long as we continue to live in such a way as to receive revelation, my brethren and sisters, there never will be discord or disunity, because it was upon this very principle that the Lord founded his Church.

Let a man stand up here before you and teach a false doctrine, something that is not true, something that is in opposition to the revealed word of God, and there is not one in the congregation but may detect it, if he or she is in possession of the Spirit of God, and the testimony of Jesus which is the spirit of revelation. Occasionally someone will say something—not very often; very seldom have I heard any one from the stand speak anything that was not perfectly orthodox, but occasionally there has been something a little of what we might call a little off-color, and immediately you would see everybody pretty nearly in the congregation looking toward one another. They can detect it in a moment. Why? Because they have the spirit of revelation and they can detect error, and they cannot be deceived in doctrine.

Now, how may we have this spirit of revelation, my brethren and sisters? We may have it as a right by the possession of the Holy Ghost. And how may we receive the Holy Ghost? By first having faith in God and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the gospel of the Lord as he has revealed it unto us: repentance of our sins, being baptized in water for the remission of sins, and receiving the laying on of hands by one having authority for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this Holy Ghost is the power and the means by which we may have constant revelation.

There are some people, indeed there are a great many, in the world, who will not accept anything as a truth except it can be demonstrated to them through the five senses. It has to be proved to them by the wisdom and the skill of men, and if that cannot be done, they reject it. We are taught in the Scriptures that no man can say that Jesus is the Christ except by the Holy Ghost. Is it any wonder that we find the condition existing in the world today, when they will not accept the plan of salvation as laid down by the Savior himself? On the day of Pentecost, when Peter, preaching to the vast throngs, declared unto them the gospel, and the condition in which the people found themselves at that time, convicted them in their hearts and they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" They were told directly what they should do. They all believed or they would not have been convicted in their hearts, but as the next thing, "Repent of your sins, and be baptized for the remission of sins," and then they would receive the Holy Ghost. It is essential, my brethren and my sisters, that we shall have the Holy Ghost as our companion in order that we shall not be deceived and misdirected and that we may always know the truth from error. A thorough Latter-day Saint does not require some truth that God has revealed to be demonstrated by the skill and wisdom of men. He does not have to have it proved; he knows it. And how does he know it? By the power of the Holy Ghost. Upon one occasion Jesus, in talking to those around him, said, "Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" "O, some say this and some say that; some say that you are John the Baptist risen from the dead, or one of the old prophets come again." "But who say ye that I am?" What was the answer? "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." There was no hesitancy in that answer; it was positive and to the point. "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God," said Peter, in answering. "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." Now, you know there has been a great deal of contention as to what was meant by that. There is a large body that believes that it meant that the church was built upon Peter, but that was not it at all. It was that spirit of revelation that came from God to Peter, that made him say without any hesitancy, "Thou art Christ, the son of the living God." That is the rock upon which the Church is built. It is upon that assurance, that testimony, that witness, that spirit of revelation that comes from God directly to the individual. And that is the rock upon which this Church is built, my brethren and sisters, and I want to say to you that the testimonies of our brethren and sisters that are given in our fast meetings give evidence of the truthfulness of that statement, for the reason that that testimony, though it comes not through the teachings and wisdom and knowledge of men nor the scientific learning of the world, comes unadulterated as the mind and will of God to the conviction of the person bearing testimony, and they rise up and say, "I know that this is the work of God, that God lives, that Jesus Christ is his Son, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God." Now, that is a knowledge that never can be transferred from one man to another by that man's wisdom or knowledge; it can only come as the knowledge came to Peter, that Jesus Christ was the Son of God.

We have as a people absolutely no fear of any discovery of scientific men. Men, under the inspiration of God, are beginning to find out little by little something that God has known for ages, but God may and does reveal truths that men have not yet understood. And simply because we or men cannot understand them is no justification why they should be rejected. Latter-day Saints under the spirit of revelation, may know whether Jesus Christ is verily the Son of God or not. No man can prove it that I know of by any of his learning or anything that he has found out. Unless we have faith in God, we cannot please him. Without faith it is impossible to please God. We must exercise faith, and the principle of faith, in and of itself, is a thing that is difficult for some men who have been scientifically trained; because they have been taught to accept nothing as a truth except it can be demonstrated by the wisdom and learning and skill of men. Above all of this, my brethren and sisters, is that blessing, that gift, that is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Church, the reception of the Holy Ghost that comes through obedience to the laws and the ordinances of the gospel; and as long as the Latter-day Saints shall be in possession of that gift, we need have no fear as to what the outcome of this Church shall be. And when men in the world, who claim to be Christians, will honestly accept of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and submit to the ordinances of the gospel that the Lord himself has prescribed, they, too, may receive the Holy Ghost and then they may know and will know of the doctrine, whether it is true or not—and not until then. There have been some men, and probably women, converted, or at least becoming members of the Church simply because of the logic there was in it, because of the splendid evidences that are manifested by the people in their lives and in their homes. Some are attracted to it because of the wonderful government that exists in the Church, or because of its teachings regarding things pertaining to every-day life, because of the law of health that is taught by the Church, and for other reasons, all good. But the only reason, and the only thing that will keep any man or woman in the Church of Jesus Christ is to be in possession of the Spirit of God or the Holy Ghost, through obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

May the Lord help us, my brethren and sisters, to remain humble and faithful and true, and not be disturbed by what this man may say or what that man may say, or what this man may deny or what he may reject. Let us not want to prove that what God has said is true by comparing it with that which has been discovered by men. That is getting the cart before the horse. But let us have faith in God that what he has said is true, so that we can be able to say that God lives, that Jesus Christ is his Son, and that he did shed his blood that all might come back unto our Father in heaven, that we do know that this work is true and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, not because of any reasoning or any proofs that men by their wisdom and judgment may give us, but because the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost, bears witness to us in our souls that it is true, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The L. D. S. male chorus, Earl Martin, Irving Beesley and Wilford Leonard, then sang a selection.

ELDER JOHN P. LILLYWHITE

Recently President of the Netherlands Mission

I am very happy to be associated with you here this afternoon and to be in attendance at this conference. I feel tremendously the responsibility resting upon one who is called to occupy this position, to bear testimony of the truth and to give evidence of the faith that we have in the gospel of Jesus Christ, but I rejoice in the gospel and in the many blessings that I have received through the same and pray God that the few words that I may utter this afternoon may be directed through his Spirit to the good of all those gathered here.

The throngs that have come into the buildings on these grounds today and that are on the outside bear witness to me of faith of the Latter-day Saints in the divine mission of the boy who knelt in the grove in Palmyra. I say these multitudes stand as a powerful witness and a beautiful tribute to "the man who communed with Jehovah," the man who spoke with God our eternal Father and with his son Jesus Christ in holy vision. The brethren and sisters who have come from near and far to be present during the sessions of this conference have come with a faith in the divinity of "Mormonism," a faith in the divine mission of the Son of God and the Prophet Joseph Smith. Otherwise you and I probably would not have come here to Salt Lake and been in attendance at these meetings. Our presence here is an evidence and a witness unto the world that the labors and the lives and the faith of the early leaders of this Church and the Saints, that faith that impelled them to make the march across the parching plains and over these rugged mountains into these valleys, that subdued the wilderness and made the desert as it were to blossom as a rose, has not been in vain; that they did not live in vain, but that their example, their faith has come down to us; and we witness to them and to all the world by our presence on these occasions that we are determined to carry on the work which they began, until the last son and daughter of God redeemable has been redeemed. The gospel of Jesus Christ is beautiful in every detail to the man and the woman who is willing to live it and keep the commandments that God has given us. There is no peace nor comfort nor cheer nor gladness that can come unto the souls of men from any other source, so great as that experienced through the gospel of Jesus Christ. To have a witness, a testimony of the truth, to know that God lives, to know that Jesus Christ was indeed his Son, and to know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, called to open the work of this last dispensation, is greater, more glorious, than to be in possession of all the riches and wealth of the world.

This gospel, this marvelous work and a wonder, that the Lord said was about to come to pass, is exemplified and fulfilled in the thousands who come here to receive the word of God from his living oracles in the Church today. The Master, on one occasion when he was preaching to the Jews and many of them had believed in his words and accepted the truth by reason of the miracles which he performed among them, said to those who believed in him, "If ye continue in my word, ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." And the Jews wondered what he meant, and said, "We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?" Then the Master answered, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. And the servant abideth not in the house forever: but the Son abideth ever. If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." That is the message to the world today. This gospel message that is carried to the nations by the elders of this Church is to the believing of the world, those who profess to believe in the word of God. After it is explained to them and they accept it, they are told in the words of the Master, if they continue in this work, the gospel of Jesus Christ, faithfully keeping his commandments, observing the laws and ordinances, they shall know for themselves if the doctrine be true. Yea, "you shall know the truth," is the promise, "and the truth will make you free." And that is the freedom that the Latter-day Saints enjoy today. It is not the freedom of riches, of wealth, it is the freedom of the truth, knowing that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, knowing that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, has made them free, free in the expression of the hope and the faith that they have in their existence here and hereafter. It is that freedom that is expressed in the lives of the missionaries, the young boys that are sent into the nations. They are not very far advanced in the gospel, not with a great knowledge of the principles of life and salvation, yet by their living, by the truth of the message which they are sent to bear to the nations, by abiding in the Word of God, they have learned the truth, and the truth has made them free, and they stand up in the meetings or on the street corners, whenever an opportunity presents itself, and declare unto the world that God lives, a personal being, that Jesus lives, a personal being, each separate one from the other, yet united in the things of God pertaining to the salvation of the children of men. They declare that they know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that the gospel called "Mormonism" is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the plan of life and salvation, given to the children of men.

The world cannot bear that testimony. Then men and the women who have not accepted the word of God and who do not abide in the word of God cannot bear that testimony and say that Jesus is the Christ, with knowledge and with conviction. That belongs to the men and the women who have followed him in the path of the regeneration, who have been born anew in the kingdom of God and have received the Holy Ghost to lead them unto all truth, to make things known unto them, the things of God and the vital things of life; for that is the mission of the Holy Ghost. And as we were told this afternoon by President Shepherd, every man and every woman born into this Church through the waters of baptism has conferred upon them the gift of the Holy Ghost by men who are in authority to administer this ordinance; and if they are faithful, if their repentance has been genuine and sincere and they seek God in the humility of their hearts, they have a right to the gift of the Holy Ghost; and that gift is knowledge, intelligence, revelation; for he will take of the Father and of the Son and give it unto you, leading you unto all truth. That was the promise of the Master. So we are right when we say, if we know it, and feel it, and have received the gift of revelation, we know that God lives and that Jesus Christ is indeed his Son, the Redeemer of the world.

I was thinking, during the remarks of President Grant this morning and of President Shepherd this afternoon, how many people are there in the world not of the faith of the Latter-day Saints who would stand up and say, if the Master appeared unto them or if he came and presented the question as he did to Peter, unto the apostles, "Who do men say that I am?"—how many would declare as Peter declared, "Thou art Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God"? I tell you, there are not many in the world who believe in that doctrine. There are not many men and women outside of the Latter-day Saints who will declare with conviction that they know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. They doubt it. Many of the men who are called to preach the doctrine of the Master deny his divinity and attribute to him another origin aside from his heavenly siredom. The Latter-day Saints, one and all, the thousands that gather upon such occasions as this, if the question were put to them and they were asked if they knew and could declare with conviction that Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God, that our eternal Father in heaven, indeed, is his Father, and that he was born of the virgin Mary—every man and woman almost without exception would answer in the affirmative that they know it, because they have received the truth and have abided in the truth, and the truth has made them free.

So I glory in the gospel of the Master, its message to the world. This message is to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, that they must repent and turn to the Lord, keeping his commandments, obeying his laws, if they will have peace and escape the judgments which God has decreed shall be poured out upon those who forget God and forsake his ways. I pray that we shall ever be humble and prayerful, seeking constantly the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord in all our undertakings, in our everyday life, that our acts will be circumspect, that our lives will be clean before God and man, that the lives we live will speak more eloquently of the gospel which we have embraced than any words that we have power to utter. That this may be our desire, I pray through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER A. WILLIAM LUND

Assistant Church Historian

I feel keenly, my brethren and sisters, the position that I am called to occupy, and most humbly ask for an interest in your faith and prayers, that the few words that I may speak this afternoon may be spoken under the influence of the Holy Spirit. I am proud that I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I am proud of my father and my mother and the teachings that they have given me in my youth, and I do hope and trust that these teachings, which I know to be true, may always be uppermost in my life, because I realize that by obedience unto them I shall gain eternal life.

When Brother Shepherd spoke to us concerning the faith of our fathers, I was proud, too, my brethren and sisters, that my grandparents on my mother's side were pioneers in this valley, that they came here in 1849, and helped to subdue the wilderness, that they were among the early settlers of Lehi and helped to build that place; that later my grandfather was one of those who helped to build up Sanpete County and became the president of the Sanpete Stake of Zion. I rejoice that my father was a pioneer of this state, that he came in the early days and helped to build up this wonderful commonwealth. I rejoice in the faith that he always exhibited, in the Church of Jesus Christ, of the knowledge that he had that this Church taught the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation. I rejoice, too, in the faith that my mother has always exhibited, with other mothers in the Church, in sacrificing the association of her husband, the pleasure and friendship of her sons, by helping them go upon missions whenever they have been called by the Lord, our God. It is a sweet memory to me that faith has been planted in my heart by my parents for I realize that men and women grow old and cannot be with us forever. Our fathers and our mothers cannot always be here to guide us, but the truth, the gospel, that Brother Lillywhite has mentioned can be our guide, can make us free, and obedience to it will lead us back into the presence of our Father in heaven.

The mothers of this Church, in the early days, sacrificed greatly for the advancement of this Church and of God's work. Many a time when the leaders of the Church have been called upon to go forth in the world to present the gospel of life and salvation unto the nations, these mothers have been left behind sick and with little children, some of them even in bed with a newly born babe, my own mother being one of these; but they never said not to go, when their husbands were called to go forth for the work of the Lord. Men went forth in the early days preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ without purse and without scrip, working their way by their own hands from Nauvoo to New York, or to whatever field they were called to labor, chopping wood, in fact, doing anything they could, to get a few cents on the way to pay their fare. They never hesitated when God called them. They never said no, it mattered not what the circumstances were, under which they were placed. I do not believe that that faith is dead, I believe that today the faith of the Latter-day Saints is still that of sacrifice, that they will give of their time, that they will go forth and do God's bidding. I appeal to the young men and the young women here this afternoon to do what they are asked by the bishops of their wards. You cannot expect to gain a reward unless you do the thing that is required of you. You never saw a steam engine run without steam; luke-warm water will not turn the wheels. Neither will luke-warmness in the Church of God bring to you that joy, that happiness that is ours if we will work. We must love the work of God.

The story is told of the great violinist, Ole Bull, that he loved his violin so well that he took it to bed with him, always had it with him. That love was repaid when he became one of the great masters of that instrument. So our love for the gospel of Jesus Christ should be taken with us always, that whenever we are called we are ready to do and ready to go; that we may be masters of the inclinations and passions that are in us as individuals, that we may control them and go forth, clean, sweet and pure, into the world to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. There is not a missionary who goes out into the world but that the prayers of his mother and his father ascend to God that he may go forth in humility, be clean and keep himself unspotted from the sins of the world. The Lord has instituted a way for you and for me to keep ourselves clean, and that way is going to our Sacrament meetings, going to the house of God, partaking of the Sacrament, remembering Jesus Christ, who atoned for us that we might come back into his presence. Go there faithfully and listen to the words of the men of God who are sent to give unto us the bread of life. If we do that we are prepared to meet the world, to meet sin, to know it and overcome it.

This gospel which we have obeyed is the power of God unto salvation; there is no doubt of that in my mind. I have often heard President McMurrin, in bearing his testimony to the people in the Tabernacle and in other places, say that he knows that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation; I have that same testimony and I believe that every missionary who has been out in the world, who returns home and strives to do the will of the Lord, will retain the wonderful blessings that are given to him in the testimony that he receives that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that this Church has in it the power of God unto salvation, this gospel that we believe and teach.

We all look forward, the whole world I might say, to the coming again of Jesus Christ upon the earth. We look forward to that time when he shall rule and reign, and if he should come while we are living, my brethren and sisters, are we going to be prepared to meet him? It is a question I ask myself, "Am I ready, so that I would be prepared to meet him, if he came?" We ought to take inventory of ourselves, especially we younger boys and girls in the Church of God, and find out if we are living according to his commandments. If not, we should then turn our lives in that straight and narrow way that will lead us unto God; for he is merciful, loves his children, and has given unto us that wonderful principle of repentance; that we may turn away from our sins, turn away from our evil ways, and gain, through the Lord's mercy a forgiveness of our sins. True it is, that we must have first obeyed the ordinance of baptism for the remission of sins, by one having authority to perform that ordinance, in order that we may get into the kingdom of God. But the Lord loves his children, and has given us also, the principle of repentance, that we may turn unto him again, as he wants us all to come back.

Brethren and sisters, the Lord could shake this world and bring you and me upon our knees mighty quick, if he desired our return to him in that way. But he does not. He loves us and wants us to have our own free agency; he has given this to us. Even before we came here he gave us our freedom of choice. We chose in heaven whether we would serve him or follow the one who would not obey God's commandments. So we have that free agency now. We may choose good or evil. God wants us to choose the good, because we are his children, and he desires that we may be saved in his kingdom. For that reason he has given us these laws and commandments known as the gospel which is the plan of life and salvation. Whenever God has had a message to deliver to the people of this earth he has always sent his prophets before him. When the cities of the plains were to be destroyed he sent his servants to preach unto them and call them to repentance. So in these days in which we live, God has again sent the gospel message forth as a warning unto all the world before the end shall come. There is a way and only one way of going back into his presence, and that way, we testify to the world in all soberness, as members of the Church of Jesus Christ, has been opened by our Father in heaven, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, that boy who was called in his youth and who remained true to his testimony that he did see God and Jesus Christ, and that the Father spoke unto him, saying, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." The most glorious vision, I believe, that has ever been given in the history of man is this vision of the Almighty God and his Son Jesus Christ showing themselves to this boy, Joseph Smith.

Later angels came unto him and brought the authority of the holy Priesthood of God; because, my brethren and sisters, we know, if we will stop and think for one minute, that unless we have the proper authority, nothing can be done and be valid, whether it be in civil law or religious law. The Lord understood this and sent, to this Prophet, angels bearing the holy Priesthood of God. John the Baptist came on the 15th day of May in 1829, bringing the Aaronic Priesthood and bestowing it upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, giving unto them the right to baptize in the name of God for the remission of sins, giving unto them the keys of the preparatory gospel, also the right of visitation of angels. Some few weeks later, we do not know the exact date, Peter, James and John did come and give unto them the Melchizedek Priesthood, the power of God to act in his name in all the ordinances of life and salvation. In the Historian's Office we have, in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery, the statement telling the story of John the Baptist's coming, of his ordaining them, and of Joseph and Oliver baptizing each other in turn after they had received the Aaronic Priesthood; and in his writing he states that Peter, James and John did come and confer upon them the Melchizedek Priesthood. There is the evidence, if we need it, that the words of this man, this prophet whom we love and revere, are true. Other angels came bringing the keys of the different gospel dispensations—because this is the gospel dispensation of the fullness of times, in which all others shall be gathered together in one and shall be returned unto God by his Son in completeness. In order to do that there must be other keys given. Some of these keys were given on the third day of April, 1836, just one week after the dedication of the Kirtland temple, which dedication was witnessed by the people there that God approved of that temple. Even people of the city came and wondered what was going on at the dedication of this temple.

On the third day of April, 1836, Oliver Cowdery and the Prophet Joseph Smith went into the temple to pray. As was their custom, when they needed light, whenever they wanted information, they went to God and asked him for it. They went into the temple on this day, and kneeling before the altar were asking God certain things pertaining to this kingdom, when a most glorious vision came unto them, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, appeared standing, as it were, upon a breastwork of gold directly over the altar, and he spoke unto them with a voice sounding as the rushing of great waters, saying:

"I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth, I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father.

"Behold, your sins are forgiven you; you are clean before me; therefore, lift up your heads and rejoice.

"Let the hearts of your brethren rejoice, and let the hearts of all my people rejoice, who have, with their might, built this house to my name.

"For behold I have accepted this house and my name shall be here; and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house."

A wonderful statement from the Redeemer of the world. After that glorious vision had passed then came Moses the prophet of God, holding the keys of the gathering of all the Tribes of Israel, and he gave those keys to these two men. After that vision had closed, then came Elias, a prophet who lived, we are told, in the days of Abraham. Then, when that vision had closed, came the marvelous vision of Elijah, the prophet of God, of whom Malachi spoke, saying, that he should come before the great and the dreadful day of the Lord, who came giving unto these two men the keys of the sealing power, the keys of sealing the living and also the dead.

It is a wonderful thing, that the Priesthood of God, and all its keys, have been restored to these two men and handed down, my brethren and sisters, by ordination according to the call and direction of our Father in heaven. My testimony is to you that every man, Brigham Young, and all those who have succeeded Joseph Smith, have received, by the laying on of hands of those in authority, these keys, and that President Grant has them today—every key necessary to turn the lock that will open the door into the celestial kingdom of God, if we will but obey and keep the teachings of this man who was called of God directly by revelation unto the apostleship, and, I believe firmly, by revelation placed at the head of this Church, and I know holds the keys of this Priesthood. Oh, how we ought to rejoice, as young men and young women, that we may grow up under such a wonderful influence and realize by the gift of the Holy Ghost, who testifies of the Father and the Son, that these things are true.

In all soberness I leave with you my humble testimony that I do know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of the living God, and that all the keys necessary for life and salvation are in this Church. May it be our happy lot, my brethren and sisters, to gain eternal life, God's greatest blessing to man, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus, our Redeemer. Amen.

The L. D. S. University ladies' trio, composed of Sisters Nellie Priestley, Zella Benson, and Nellie Durham, sang, "Trust in God."

ELDER EDWARD J. WOOD

President of Alberta Stake and Canadian Temple

President of Alberta Stake and of the Canadian Temple

I feel that the time remaining belongs to Brother McMurrin. I am sorry we cannot give him longer; we all like to hear President McMurrin bear his testimony and preach the gospel, which he has done ever since I can remember.

Like the rest of you, I always feel it my duty to respond whenever called upon. I have listened with interest to the testimony of the elders and the beautiful music rendered, and I rejoice also this morning in hearing the presiding authorities, as far as they spoke in the Tabernacle, especially when we were told by the First Presidency that each ward should furnish one missionary to go on a short-term mission—brethren with past experience.

I come from Canada, as was mentioned by Brother McMurrin, the land of the north. I bring you glad tidings from some of the lost Ten Tribes, and we are pleased to report everything in very good condition we think, in our three stakes in Canada; and also that the temple work is progressing very favorably. We find the person who goes to the temple most regularly is the one who goes to the Sacramental meetings and pays his tithing more regularly than anybody else. So my advice is that we always take a little time to go to the temple and work for the dead as well as the living. As always, I was delighted to be in the company of Brother Shepherd; I have felt for years the spirit of temple work.

Speaking of the missionary movement, I feel keenly the value of temple work and missionary work this afternoon. I do not believe for a minute that the Church built the temple in the Hawaiian Islands only for the benefit of a few of the Sandwich Islanders. I have been on the Islands three times, also to the Samoan and Navigator Islands, and I love that people very much. I have heard President Smith say he did not think that Utah and Idaho, or any of the North American colonies, or stakes, would ever be the permanent dwelling place of the Polynesian Islanders. I know how he felt. When I heard that Brother Ballard was appointed to open up the South American mission, with Brother Rey L. Pratt of the Mexican mission, and President Rulon S. Wells, I thought then of the many times that I heard President Smith say we have got to do something for the benefit of the Polynesian Islanders, to prepare them for the future, without assisting them or encouraging them to emigrate to Utah. When I heard of the building of the temple, this is what I thought: I think I see the stopping place for the Polynesian Islanders, a place to prepare them for some future work. But just as soon as I heard of Brother Ballard's being called to Buenos Ayres, South America, I thought, there is my hope. I believe firmly that the great hope and faith of the Latter-day Saints regarding the home of the ancient inhabitants of North and South America, the Lamanites and Nephites, will receive blessings on the Sandwich Islands, prepare the Samoan, the Maori, the Tahitian, the Hawaiian, and the Tongan in that temple to get ready for the opening up and the preaching of the gospel to their own countrymen in South America. It is just a delightful thought to me to feel that way.

In the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord says:

"And the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow; for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the housetops, and their secret acts shall be revealed.

"And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days.

"And they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them."

In 1916 I was called to make my third trip to the Islands. The company, my old acquaintances and others were leaving Salt Lake. President Smith told me to be here at a certain time, that we might leave San Francisco on a certain boat. But I am a Canadian-British subject, although born in Salt Lake, and they never knew it. I did not tell them. Let me tell you what happened, through the power of faith and prayer. There are a good many young people here, and though I do not like to mention myself, I want, above all things, that the young people, our boys and girls, our future missionaries, shall believe firmly in prayer. I was to leave at a certain time. I had sent to Ottawa, the Washington of Canada, for my passport, and it had not arrived in Cardston in time. We were fourteen miles north of the international boundary line. What should I do? The First Presidency requested that I be here at a certain time to report, to leave San Francisco at a certain time. Well, I told the Lord. Of course he knew it, but I always think, like any other father; he enjoys being told. If your children ever get anything they long for, they do not get it, generally, by asking just once or twice to show their parents they want it. It is not what we want but what we need. Our heavenly Father is willing to grant us, I believe, what we most need. I told the Lord I did not have my passport and I was to leave at a certain time. The Spirit said, just get ready and go. I did. I went to the boundary line, met the emigration officer, and he said, "How do you do, Mr. Wood? Where are you going?" "I am going to Salt Lake." "Where is your passport?" "I haven't any?" "Why didn't you get it?" I said, "Ottawa did not get it here in time." He said, "All right, when you get it, send it to me." I came to Salt Lake. The passport was to be in Salt Lake by the time I was to leave, giving three days grace between the time I got here and the time I left. The first day it didn't come. I waited until the morning of the third day to be set apart. I did not tell President Smith or any of the presiding brethren that I did not have a passport. I was afraid they would say, "You had better wait and go on some other steamer." President Smith, when he set me apart, said, "Brother Wood, you will go with this company." When he said that a thrill went through my whole being. I did not have my passport. How could I go with the company? He said, "You will go with the company; you will perform the mission for which you are sent, and you will return in safety." So we got ready. They all thought I had my passport the same as the others. We arrived in San Francisco, where I would have to present my passport to get my ticket, and then again on the steamer. We went to get our tickets. The emigration officer was very busy. He said to me, "Mr. Wood, you are in charge of this little company?" "Yes." "Sit down here and give me some assistance." I sat down and helped him take the passports from all the other passengers. We did not get through that day. Tomorrow came. We met early in the morning. "Mr. Wood, you were here yesterday. All right. You are a British subject? Go right on board. Thank you very much. I have your passport." I thought, "You haven't, but it is all right."

I went on board the steamer. Two days out from San Francisco the purser said, "Mr. Wood, better come in and give me your passport with those of the rest of the company." All right, I said. We went into the purser's office, got talking about the gospel, when he said, "Well, if all you have said is true, you do not need a passport to go to preach to the nations of the earth." He never asked me for it. I read him what I read to you.

I thought then, I am on the steamer; but it may be harder to get off at Samoa, where I was to land. Out of about four hundred passengers there would be only fifteen or twenty for Samoa. "What will I do to get off?" So I prayed with the company that was going to the Samoan Islands, just a few of the elders. I told the Lord we had gotten by the Canadian officials and the United States officer at San Francisco, "and now comes the most severe test of all, the immigration officer on the Samoan Islands, where there are only a few, nothing to take up his time." When the steamer came up to the wharf there were the natives with whom I had been acquainted years before, when four of us were pioneers, and then later the same good old faithful Latter-day Saints. One of our elders had a Samoan band, one of the finest bands in the Islands, which came to meet me, and here I was: I could not get off. Could not? I knew if they learned I did not have a passport I would either be deported or taken on to Australia. Samoa is 2,100 miles south of Honolulu, Australia is 2,000 miles away from Samoa. I would have to be taken to Australia if I could not present my passport, and here were the natives trying to reach my hand, delighted to think I had come back the third time to visit them again, and some were crying, so overcome with joy, as their love is very great indeed for the elders from Zion. They will give all they have to help a missionary. They were making way, so that I could come down and shake hands and rub noses with them. Wouldn't it be a disappointment if I could not get off! So I told the Lord, "You have said, 'My messengers will go to the four corners of the earth;' here I am, no passport; help me now." Well, we lined up. Here was one immigration officer and there was another, and a lot of people in front of me. I did not know whether to come first, last, or where. So when we got right up to within the last man, the other immigration officer said to the man he was examining, "You are an anarchist." The man with me jumped up and went over and sat down and they had a few moments talk, and I was praying. After he got through he was very much irritated, very much out of patience. He said, "Mr. Wood, I have your passport; thanks very much; go right on."

Brothers and sisters, I know it pays to pray. Young folks, attend to your Sacramental meetings, go to the temple, perform work for the living and the dead. God bless all Israel, wherever they may be, is my humble prayer and testimony in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the California Mission

It is almost time, my brothers and sisters, to bring this meeting to a close. I suppose there may have been some wonder in the minds of some of the people, especially those who heard the announcement made in the morning session by President Heber J. Grant, regarding Dr. George H. Brimhall, who was named as one of the brethren who would speak in this meeting this afternoon. Dr. Brimhall had made a promise to attend the funeral services of a friend in Provo, and for that reason was excused from being in attendance at this meeting.

I have very greatly rejoiced in the testimonies that have been borne by our brethren. I have had the thought in my mind, what a wonderful blessing it is to be associated with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints when all of these marvelous things that have been spoken of have taken place, and the Lord our God, in his mercy and kindness and in keeping with the promises that he made to holy prophets in ancient times, has revealed anew the everlasting gospel and sent from his presence holy beings to clothe mortal men with power and authority to legally teach the things of the kingdom of heaven, and to legally administer sacred and holy ordinances that are essential to the salvation of the children of men. We should be a most grateful people. No other people are possessed of such blessings as we enjoy.

I hope that the testimony that has been borne, in relation to the virtue and power of prayer, may find lodgment in the hearts of the people, that not only young men and women may believe in this power, but that older men and women also may have the same belief, that they may understand and realize that God, our eternal Father, is a living, intelligent being, and that by means known only to him he is able to hear our humble petitions, and he has the power to bless us with the blessings that will be for our advantage. And I know that the Lord our God is hearing the prayers of his people. I sometimes think of what advertising would be done by some of the so-called healers in the state of California under like circumstances; for we have "healers" there, men and women who profess, through the power of prayer, to heal the sick, and they tell some very remarkable stories in relation to the healing that oftentimes follows their ministry. And sometimes Latter-day Saints are disturbed because of hearing that somebody has received a blessing through prayer. I often think of the statement made to me by President Charles W. Penrose, when discussing this angle of the question, that there were healings taking place, and his answer was, "Well, what of it?" I was a little startled for the moment, but the more I have given thought to that answer the more sensible it appears to me. What of it?

No healings that take place among the inhabitants of the earth, no matter who may be healed, take from us today the authority that was given by the sending of holy angels, that that authority might be conferred upon men. We have healings, marvelous healings, from time to time, in the state of California. It might surprise people, because generally when people think of California they think of pleasure, not of religion, not of prayer; and yet we have praying men and praying women in California, Latter-day Saints, who believe in the ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the power and virtue of the authority that has been restored. One of those men is Bishop Thomas, who formerly lived in Idaho Falls. He went as a patriarch, at the call of a sister who was afflicted, not long ago, and she commenced to tell him that she was going to one of the "healers," a woman that has attracted great attention in the city of Los Angeles, and she wanted a patriarchal blessing before she visited this woman. The patriarch did not feel like giving her a blessing, just at that time, but he taught her the doctrines of the gospel, told her of the promises that had been made by the Lord our God through the holy Priesthood, that if any were sick they were to call for the elders of the Church and anoint with oil, and the prayer of faith should save the sick. This woman had been bedridden for four years, but she commenced to grasp the importance of the teachings that were given her, and then she sought a blessing in the way appointed of the Lord, at the hands of Bishop Thomas, she was blessed by the authority of the Priesthood, and the next morning, before Bishop Thomas left his home, there was a rap at his door, and when he opened the door the husband of this woman was standing there and said, "Come out, come out, and meet my wife; she can walk." The woman that had not walked for four years was healed by the power of God. How such a thing would be heralded, if it had been brought about by one of these so-called "divine healers"! It is not heralded so much in the Church of Jesus Christ. Those are incidents in connection with the Lords' work that are transpiring all the time, and they are treasured in the minds of the people but are never advertised to the world for gain.

I myself not long ago went to the Los Angeles county hospital, and I looked upon a girl who, in my own judgment was dying, and the doctors said she was dying. They had telegraphed to Salt Lake City for her father and mother to come. The father works over here in the Bishop's building. And at the girl's request, as she gasped out word by word with what seemed to be her dying breath, for the healing ordinance, we administered to her, and when I left her, to go to the railway station a mile or two away, I thought, I wonder if that father and mother coming in on the train within a few minutes will be in time to see their beloved daughter alive. When we returned, the dying girl had been healed by the power of God—not raised up to health and strength instantaneously, but that dying power that had seized upon her had been banished away, that look of death was gone, and she was able to converse with father and mother and she also was healed by divine power in answer to prayer.

I rejoice in this authority that God has restored to men upon the earth. I know its value, I know its truth. I thank God that the ears of my own parents were saluted with this gospel message in their native land, and that in the mysterious providences of God and by his power and by the operation of his Spirit, they were brought to understand and believe the message of the gospel, and that because of their faith and their belief and their travels from afar, they gave me birth in the land of Zion. I rejoice in it. I praise the name of God for my birthplace here, in this choice land, and I believe, with all my heart, that this is a choice land. I believe that when President Brigham Young made the announcement, as he looked over this valley, "This is the place," that he made a declaration of greater importance than he himself comprehended. And as time has gone on and development has taken place, we have learned something of the richness of the soil here in this barren American "desert"—no richer soil upon the face of the whole earth. We have learned something of the richness of these mountains, teeming with their precious wealth—mountains of iron and mountains of coal, and mountains of copper and many other precious minerals. We are just beginning to learn something of the marvelous scenery of this country, and people are being attracted to our beloved Utah.

We are preparing a stereopticon lecture to deliver to the people in the California mission, and we will probably have the hardihood to give that lecture the title, "Utah, the Wonderland of America." Some such title is necessary to carry over to the minds of people the thought that we have in our own minds that this is a choice, a marvelous, a wonderful section. We purpose to show the scenic beauties of Zion Canyon and other wonders. We ought to praise God that through his mercy and by his power and the inspiration of his Spirit the feet of our fathers were planted here, and we ought to believe that "This is the place."

God help us to so believe, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

The benediction was pronounced by Elder F. F. Hintze, former president of the Turkish mission.

THIRD OVERFLOW MEETING

A third overflow meeting was held in Barratt Hall at 10:30 a. m., Sunday, October 4.

Elder John M. Knight, president of the Western States mission, was in charge.

The music was furnished by the Tenth ward choir under the direction of Norman Martin.

The congregation sang, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah."

Elder Charles S. Martin offered the invocation.

The choir sang, "In our Redeemer's name."

ELDER JOHN G. ALLRED

President of the North Central States Mission

The Lord has been very good to the children of men ever since man's advent upon the earth. In the very beginning the Lord sent an angel to Adam and gave his instructions concerning the plan of redemption. He later talked to Noah and Moses and Isaiah and Jeremiah and gave them instructions to give the people with reference to their conduct in the earth. Last of all he sent his Son Jesus Christ into the world not only to give the plan of redemption but to give us an example of a perfect life.

The children of men from the very beginning have shown a disposition to disregard the teachings that the Lord has given them. They stoned the prophets and imprisoned those who believed in them, and when Christ, the Master, the Son of God, made his appearance they rebuked him as they had the prophets who preceded him and put him to an open death. But not until he had established his work among men and commissioned his apostles to go forth and make proclamation of the messages which he had entrusted them with. Every one of these apostles suffered an ignominious death. Not one of them was allowed to die in his own home surrounded by his family and friends. The same blood-thirsty desires which put Jesus Christ, the Master, to death were still lingering in the souls of men and they were not content as long as there remained an apostle or prophet in the earth. Not only the leaders, but the followers themselves were hounded and prosecuted and put to death, until there was not a representative of the Lord Jesus Christ left among men. The Bible came to be the only surviving witness that Jesus was the Christ, and the time finally came in the history of the world when even the Bible and its teachings were confused, and men who professed to be teachers of the doctrine of Christ began to doubt the divinity of his mission, and when this time arrived infidelity and unbelief began to spread more abundantly in the earth.

The Lord saw fit in his wisdom and mercy to the children of men to bring forth another witness to substantiate the teachings of the holy Bible, for unknown to the world there was another witness which the Lord in his own due time was to bring forth, which was to testify that Jesus was the Christ and bear witness of his work which had been instituted on the western continent, for in the lonely Hill of Cumorah for fourteen hundred years this mute witness had been waiting the command of God when it should come forth to bear witness in connection with the Bible that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that the plan of redemption which he instituted was the same today that it had been in all ages of the world. When this witness came out the whole world declared against it, that it was not divine, but the Lord gave evidence to a few of his servants by the power of the Holy Ghost that this record was true, and since the world was in such a deplorable condition spiritually, this witness came forth at a very opportune time.

Joseph Smith, who was the instrument in the hands of God in introducing the Book of Mormon, had received while yet in his boyhood, one of the most glorious and wonderful visions ever given to mortal man. He had looked into the face of the Lord and his Son Jesus Christ, and had heard from them their message in unmistakable words that the world was wrong, that they had changed the ordinances and broken the everlasting covenants, and that the Lord had seen fit not only to bring forth this witness of which we have spoken, but to reveal to the Prophet Joseph Smith the gospel in its fullness with all its primitive power and its beauty, with every officer, doctrine, and ordinance which had been promulgated by Christ and his apostles, again revealed to the earth with the power of the holy Priesthood to officiate in these ordinances for the redemption and exaltation of God's children.

It is the mission of the Latter-day Saints to make proclamation to the world of the things that the Lord has done in our day and generation, for the Lord desires that we should make known to the world that he has spoken and raised up an ensign unto the nations, and that his servants were to go forth with all the earnestness, power and zeal of their souls, to declare to the people of this generation that the Book of Mormon is a divine witness and that it bears record that Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world, visited the American continent after his crucifixion and resurrection, and established among the residents of the western world the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; and that he effected his organization among them with apostles, prophets pastors and teachers just as he had done among the Jews.

As missionaries and elders of the Church, we are bearing witness of these things to the inhabitants of the earth, and declaring to them with all the sincerity and seriousness of our souls that these things are true.

Many people believe that "Mormonism" doesn't bring anything of importance to the inhabitants of the earth, but those of us who have become acquainted with its teachings, are convinced more and more that we stand in the same relationship to the world that the Apostle Paul occupied when he went on to Mars Hill and saw the inscription "To the unknown God" and said to the people on that occasion: "You are altogether too superstitious, for whom you ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." The elders and missionaries of this Church are in the world to tell the people of this generation that they are altogether too superstitious and that they have an unknown God whom they are ignorantly worshiping, and him we are declaring unto this generation, for be it remembered that the angel whom John saw fly through the midst of heaven was carrying the Everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea and the fountains of water.

The God of heaven who made the seas and the fountains of water was a personal God that we are declaring unto the inhabitants of the earth, a personal God who speaks to man, not two thousand years ago, but now, and we are bearing witness with all the power of our souls that God has raised up a prophet in this day and age who has the power and the authority to say to this generation, "Thus saith the Lord." Not two thousands years ago, but today to this particular generation, this is our message. This is our witness and we rejoice before the Lord that we are privileged to engage in his ministry to prune the vineyard for the last time, preparatory for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM S. YOUNG

Dear Brethren and Sisters: It is a great pleasure to know that the great congregations which fill the buildings provided for our annual and semi-annual conferences, are being supplied with the necessary spiritual food to enable them to live their lives as our heavenly Father desires.

The world needs the gospel of Jesus Christ, because of the almost hopeless condition of human spiritual thought. The world lacks the idealism the gospel furnishes, in that it does not know the objects of earthly life. If men knew their destiny, the object of their creation, and God's purposes concerning them, they would not drift to the extremes of folly and crime which are everywhere so apparent. The "Mormon" people are blessed with knowledge of what God intends in giving us mortality. Men flounder in the mazes of human understanding attempting to solve the problems of life from "human basis" of understanding. To attempt to explain why we are here from purely human sources of information is impossible, and unless we include God and what he has taught us, through the revelations of the gospel of Jesus Christ, it is impossible for us to comprehend life or its possibilities.

The theology of the world has involved men in such a maze of incomprehensibility that no consistent conclusions are possible. Many cannot reconcile the teachings of Christianity, either with the scripture or with common-sense, because of the inconsistency of its professed teachers.

It is a great thing to have the assurance that we had a place and being with our Father before we came to earth; to know that we had a spirit life and companionship and understanding, and that our experiences and attainments opened for us the possibilities and experiences we are enjoying in mortality; to know that through the birth into mortality and the uniting of the spirit and the body we can attain to what God has destined respecting our future; that through the acceptance and faithfulness to the gospel we can reach higher stages of development and that eternal progress lies before us, if we shall comply with what the Almighty has taught and demands of us in the observance of the principles of revealed religion. If men could be convinced of the possibilities of eternal development and progress, and that attainment is not limited to mortality, there would be a greater striving among men to lead better lives, to accomplish more good, to attain to higher development, than they are now striving for, through a lack of the knowledge of the gospel.

Men of the world do not appreciate the truth because they do not know it. If they knew that every wrong done had to be righted; if they knew that every obligation contracted had to be discharged; if they knew that they would be literally judged according to their records, there would be much greater care exercised in their conduct in life. The Latter-day Saints, through the revelations of the Lord Jesus Christ, know what life means. How they may eternally progress; how they may acquire an ever-widening field of intelligence until in time they shall possess capability to assume positions of power, that are now inconceivable to them. If men knew their chosen lines of endeavor, that they could eternally continue to progress, it would furnish them an incentive to labor in intelligent righteousness. Philosophers and scientists, if they knew that their work could be extended into the eternities, and they become masters of information that would give them inconceivable power, they would accept the gospel and would live it righteously and rigorously because of their great desire for progressive development. It is given us to know these things and we, therefore, are a highly blessed people.

Compared with the idealism of "Mormonism," there is nothing in literature or science that reaches the wonderful possibilities of that which God has supplied in giving us a knowledge of the truth. Men can only be brought to a comprehension of these marvelous truths by accepting the gospel of Jesus Christ. How necessary it is, then, that through diligent preparation, we should fit ourselves to make adequate appeal to men of high intellectual understanding. For that reason we encourage in our community the highest standards of education, and it is for that reason that, as missionaries, we are continually striving for higher and higher planes of intellectual as well as spiritual power. Men are saved only as fast as they get knowledge, which means that they can only have that to which they are entitled, and as we develop or educate our bodies through observance of the laws of life, so will those bodies be prepared to go into the degree of power and glory that we have educated or developed ourselves to fill. There is no limit to human achievement, so it follows that there will be none to eternal achievement.

God help us to understand, my brethren and sisters, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A girls' chorus sang: "Lift thine eyes."

ELDER CHAS. A. CALLIS*President of the Southern States Mission*

I pray that I may be led by the Spirit of the Lord in the remarks that I shall make so that they may be edifying and faith promoting. The fatness of the fields in these peaceful vales, the abundant crops with which God has blessed the people, ought to fill our hearts to overflowing with gratitude to the Giver of every good and precious gift.

As I have looked over these fruitful fields I have thought of the words of the Savior in which he described the growth of the crops, leading up to the harvest. The Master says: "For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first, the blade; then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." (Mark 4:28.) Truly we are rejoicing in the "full corn in the ear."

Faith, sacrifice and obedience must precede blessings. We are told in the Book of Mormon that we receive no reward until after the trial of our faith. This great lesson the Savior teaches in John 12:24. He says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

If the farmers had been content to let their golden corn and wheat remain securely stored in the granaries there would not have been these bounteous crops to sustain life. The husbandmen with faith and sacrifice took the wheat, corn and other seeds, planted them in the ground, watched for the blade, cultivated it when it appeared, until it developed into the "full corn in the ear." God gives the increase.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has grown great in service and sacrifice. This Church will always be a missionary church, and its glorious work will be performed in a spirit of service and sacrifice. Sacrifice will bring forth the blessings of heaven.

The Lord, of course, in the verse which I have quoted was foreshadowing his own death and the eternal blessings his atonement and resurrection would place within the reach of mankind. Because he lives, we also shall live. Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, and we, through his poverty, as the Apostle Paul says, have become eternally rich. The fruits of the death and the resurrection of Jesus Christ are holy and glorious.

We should not accept the blessings of God, the harvests of the fields, as a matter of course. They are gifts from the Creator. In the Doctrine and Covenants, Sections 59:21, we read, "And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments." The Lord is willing for us to enjoy the good things of this life in moderation and wisdom; provided we receive them "from the hand of the Lord with a thankful heart in all things."

Even in affliction it is well to acknowledge his hand. "Before I was afflicted," the Psalmist David said, "I went astray; but now have I kept thy word. It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes. The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." (Psalms 119:67, 71, 72.)

Sins unrepented of bring a penalty; for God will bring every work into judgment. An ancient prophet said: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." (Eccl. 11:9.) They who sow their wild oats shall reap a harvest of trouble. "For whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." He that soweth the wind shall reap the whirlwind.

Forgiveness, like repentance, is not always obtained for the asking. Sins cannot go unpunished. Repentance, without the offender making all the restitution that it is in the power of his hand to make, is as dead as faith without works.

We are told in holy writ that Satan provoked David to number Israel. It was the "time that kings go out to battle." God was displeased. He sent his prophet to David. "So Gad came to David and said unto him. Thus saith the Lord, choose thee, either three years' famine; or three months to be destroyed before thy foes, * * * or else three days the sword of the Lord, even pestilence in the land, and the angel of the Lord destroying throughout all the coasts of Israel. * * * And David said unto Gad, I am in a great strait; let me fall now into the hand of the Lord; for very great are his mercies; but let me not fall into the hand of man. So the Lord sent pestilence upon Israel." (I Chronicles 21.) Let us take these lessons to heart for they were written for our admonition. Before the day of trouble comes let us make the Lord of hosts our friend. Don't wait until judgments come before repenting. Now is the time to repent.

A great deal of the South has been afflicted with a severe drouth this summer. Fields are desolate and bare. Brimming rivers have dwindled to small streams. The governor of Georgia issued a proclamation to the people of that state in which he called on them to "humble themselves, acknowledge their sins, and make supplication for relief from present distressing conditions." Similar proclamations were issued by the governors of South Carolina and Virginia. It would not be long before the beautiful southland would be transformed into a land of desolation if the heavens did not give showers to satisfy the thirsty soil.

The Lord, in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 101, says of those people who in the days of prosperity were slow to hearken unto him: "In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me."

The mission of the Church is to fill the earth with the knowledge of the Lord. We are divinely commissioned to perform this mission. In the doing of this duty there is peace and joy that passeth all understanding. The Lord is with us. Without him we are nothing. We know and testify that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is the Redeemer, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

I pray that we will keep foremost in our lives and affections our mission on earth, and that our precious testimony will fill our souls, our whole beings, with a constant, broad and a glowing light, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

President of the Western States Mission

The splendid discourses delivered this morning have been a real inspiration to me. I hope they have made a deep impression upon your souls. We need the gospel of repentance preached at home as well as abroad. I believe the home to be the place where our children should be taught the things they should know with respect to virtue, honesty, temperance, truthfulness, etc. I fear there is a false modesty existing between many fathers and their sons, likewise between mothers and daughters, and our young people often get the wrong impressions of life from their associates instead of being told the things they ought to know by their parents.

I appreciate the splendid auxiliary organizations we have in the Church, and the wonderful influence they are having upon the lives of our young men and women in creating within them faith in God and inspiring them with a testimony of the gospel and the divine mission of Jesus Christ. All these things are fine, but parents, too, have a great responsibility.

I have faith in the youth of Zion, I believe in them. No finer or cleaner men and women can be found anywhere than those who come into the mission field. I count it a blessed privilege to be associated with them. Without exception they are developing into splendid representatives of the Church capable of giving a reason for the hope that is within them.

While the religious world is being split wide open over the most fundamental doctrines of Christian faith, while churches are divided and pastors forced to resign because of their modernistic views, and the intellectuals are ridiculing religion, calling it superstition, good enough to hold the ignorant in check, our missionaries are going right ahead preaching the gospel of repentance, and contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints. There is no schism, no controversy, no difference of opinion with respect to the saving ordinances of the gospel, to be found in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I am frequently asked why we do not center our efforts on the heathen in Africa, and other foreign countries, rather than here in Christian America! Some feel we have no right to proselyte among members of other churches. My answer has been that our message is to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and is as much needed in this country as anywhere in the world. We have a message for all people if they will but receive it. We have no apology to offer for our presence in the world. God has again spoken from the heavens and established his work in the earth; we are his representatives and the gospel we preach is the power of God unto salvation.

In the World's Work for Feb., 1924, W. P. Merrill makes this statement:

"It is time we were facing the question: What right has a denomination to exist? It is plain truth that no organization of men or women has a right to call itself a Christian church which is not built on Christ's line. * * * If Christ did not found the Church and lay down its lines, it has no divine authority. If he did, then to change those lines to alter conditions, to demand what he did not demand, to insist on that which he ignored is indefensible."

We are glad to face the question, because we are built upon Christ's lines. He is the author of our faith, the founder of our Church, and is the chief corner stone upon which it is built. We are demanding only that which he demanded; implicit obedience to the ordinances of the gospel, and we teach that every doctrine and principle advocated and taught by Christ and his apostles is part of the great plan of salvation. We affirm that we have divine authority to teach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof. We declare that holy angels have been sent from the very presence of the Christ to restore the holy Priesthood, and to commission men with authority to organize the Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth. We identify the angels, Moroni, John the Baptist, Peter, James, John, Moses, Elias, Elijah; we state when they came, where they came to, and what they said and did. We affirm that we have the same kind of an organization that existed in the primitive Church, with apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, elders, seventies, high priests, bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons; that they are in the work for the perfecting of the Saints, the work of the ministry and the edifying of the body of Christ, and that they will continue in the Church until there is unity of faith in the world. We invite the most searching investigation of our claims, and go so far as to declare if men and women will make that investigation, with a sincere desire to know the truth, God will manifest it unto them by the power of his Spirit. Furthermore, we are making no compromise; we are not altering conditions or changing gospel ordinances.

Recently I was in Grand Island, Nebraska. A convention of one of the great Protestant churches, for that district, was in session. Baptism was being discussed. One of those present said, "Baptism when properly administered, is a beautiful and inspirational sight, that is why we are reluctant about giving it up." Think of it! Not because it is a commandment from God, not because it is the door into the fold of Christ, not because it is the only ordinance through which we may receive a remission of sins, not because it is an outward sign of an inward grace; the answering of a good conscience toward God, but because it is a beautiful and inspirational sight. Such trifling with sacred things can have but one effect; the destroying of faith in religion as a means of salvation. I am grateful to belong to a Church which states its position in very definite, concrete terms upon all these matters that are so vital to the Christian faith.

I testify to you that I know God lives, that Jesus Christ is the very Son of God, and the Redeemer of the world, that Joseph Smith was and is a Prophet of the living God; that what is known to the world today as "Mormonism" is the gospel of Christ; which is the power of God unto salvation. I pray that we may have a broad vision of our responsibilities, that we may give loyal and willing service to the cause which is so dear to our hearts, that we may all be saved in our Fathers' kingdom, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

At the close the choir sang, "Hosannah."

The benediction was pronounced by Elder F. F. Hintze.

FOURTH OVERFLOW MEETING

A fourth overflow meeting was held in Barratt Hall, Sunday, October 4, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Elder David A. Smith of the Presiding Bishopric presided.

Music was furnished by the Tenth ward choir under the direction of Norman Martin.

The choir sang, "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord."

Elder John L. Anderson, of the Granite Stake Y. M. M. I. A., offered the opening prayer.

The choir sang, "Rouse, ye mortals."

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

President of the Central States Mission

I desire, my brothers and sisters, that my remarks may be directed by the Spirit of God, and that I may be led to say that which the Lord would have me say here today. I have enjoyed the spirit of this conference very much and was much impressed with the remarks of President Grant in his sermon this morning, and was led to conclude that it is always safe to refer to the word of the Lord in preaching the gospel. It is more necessary than it has ever been, it appears to me, that the Latter-day Saints should familiarize themselves with the revelations of God to his people in this day, when doubt and theory are everywhere present, leading so many of the children of men away from God.

Solomon said, "Where there is no vision, the people perish" (Proverbs 29:18), and had it not been for revelation from our Father in heaven to the Prophet Joseph Smith, the entire world would be perishing in unbelief, and the correct form of worship would not be known in the earth, neither would there be the certain knowledge that God lives. Thousands of our young people throughout the land today are being taught the Darwinian theory, and many of them are accepting it as a fact, and not as a theory, which it is. The Latter-day Saints believe in the evolution tending to progress, but not according to the theory that is being so prominently placed before the young people of our country in the schools of today.

There is a lack of faith in God among the children of men, and men are trying in their own wisdom to account for the creation of the world and the creation of the human family. How much better it is to believe in the gospel of Christ, our Lord, as recorded in the Bible, in the Book of Mormon, in the Doctrine and Covenants, and in the Pearl of Great Price. Light and peace and joy come through the study of the holy scriptures. To believe that we are the children of God, and that we are made in his image, is elevating and inspiring, while to believe that we have descended from some lower form of life has no such result. All people take a natural pride in feeling that they have been born of goodly parents, that they come through an honorable line of ancestry. Associated with that, to feel and to know that God is truly our Father, and that we are made in his image, brings true happiness. But were it not for the fact that God revealed himself to the Prophet Joseph Smith in this dispensation, a true knowledge of God could not be found in the earth. If the men who are moulding the lives of our young people throughout this great land would give more time to the study of the holy scriptures, they would gain more true knowledge of the origin and purpose of life than they ever will gain from the study of rocks and fossils, and the minds of our young people would receive an inspiration that would lead them to live better lives. The Honorable William Jennings Bryan said that men should be more interested in the "Rock of Ages than in the ages of rocks," and I heartily agree with him.

No man can obtain a knowledge that God lives, that he made man in his image, and that he has revealed himself in this dispensation to men in the earth, except he places himself in a condition to receive the impression of the holy Spirit of God, which leads to him; and no man can find God except he walks in the paths which God, our heavenly Father, has ordained.

Joseph Smith testified to the world that he had seen God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, and that they are tangible beings, for he saw with his own eyes that he was made in their image. He bore testimony to the world that an angel of God delivered unto him the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, and that the truths contained in that book were given unto him to be distributed in all the world, as a witness that the God of heaven has truly revealed himself to men in this dispensation. We have also the testimony of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, that an angel of God appeared to them, and brought and laid before their eyes the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. In addition to that, eight witnesses saw the plates, and they also bore testimony of the fact to the world. Is not the testimony of the Prophet Joseph Smith and these eleven witnesses worthy of consideration? Is it not more reasonable for us to conclude that it is true than it is for us to believe in the unproven theories of men who have tried to solve the problem of life in their own way and have failed?

In my judgment it is wrong to teach the youth of this great nation such theories as would lead them to conclude that we are not truly the children of God, made in his image, as men have testified who have seen God, both in this generation and in the generations of the past. Is it not more reasonable to believe that God made man in his image than it is to believe that we have come up from the lower forms of life? Is it not more reasonable to believe that this world was made by Jesus Christ our Lord, under the direction of God the eternal Father, and that Jesus made the world before he was tabernacled in a body of flesh and bones, as the Scriptures testify? Is it not reasonable to believe that God fore-ordained prophets, as we read in Jeremiah, first chapter, and that we were in an ante-mortal state able to act and to perform works under the direction of our eternal Father—the Father of our spirits—who gave us bodies in the beginning, and that our parentage goes back to that eternal Sire who governs and controls the destinies of men, according to their obedience to law?

I prefer to believe the things that God has revealed to me, by the power of the Holy Ghost, rather than to believe the theories of men who have not that witness. I prefer to believe that God our Father did not leave his sons and daughters here on the earth without a true witness that he is our Father, and that we have been given this earthly existence, with its duties and experiences, to prove ourselves whether we are worthy to be exalted and glorified with his faithful sons and daughters or whether we are not, for if we prove ourselves worthy we can return unto him, and if we do not prove ourselves worthy we cannot return unto him.

I never saw Joseph Smith, nor any of the eleven witnesses to the Book of Mormon; but I have received a witness from God, through the power of the Holy Ghost, that our heavenly Father and his Son Jesus Christ did appear to the Prophet Joseph, that the men who have testified concerning the Book of Mormon have told the truth, and that the work we are engaged in is truly the work of God. Through this witness I know that I am his son, and that he is my eternal Father, and that neither my body nor any part of it has come from any other form of life than the life that now produces humankind. Our Father's decrees are unalterable, and so are his plans concerning the destiny of the human family. Men may seek by every means conceivable to disprove the truth as God has revealed it to his servants in ancient as well as in modern times; but the time will come, and I bear witness of it, that they will be weighed in the balance and found wanting. May we cherish the truth, as God has revealed it again in these latter days, for the salvation of the children of men, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

President of the Northern States Mission

I appreciate the privilege of meeting with you good people in the conference meeting, at Barratt Hall. I am sure that there is always a desire in our hearts to learn of the gospel and to partake of the good spirit that always prevails in our conference meetings.

A few days ago, a young lady asked my why it was that there were so many young people who did not have a testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In our conversation I told her that I believed it was because the young people were not giving the attention to these matters in the same degree that they were giving their attention to other things. I am of the opinion that there is a sentiment among some of our young people that a testimony of the gospel will come to them in some peculiar way, and that all they have to do is to sit around and wait for it. Others expect the testimony to be theirs, irrespective of the lives they live, or the attention they give to the observance of the laws and commandment of the Lord. However, we as a people know that no one can receive a testimony of the gospel without searching for it, and observing the conditions upon which a knowledge is founded.

We do not apply the same principles of reasoning to our religious experience as we do to other affairs of life. The student would not expect to go into school and acquire a knowledge of the subject under consideration without considerable study and application. For example, a student who is studying chemistry would not think of combining two acids and getting the proper result if the combination were not the correct combination. But sometimes in religious affairs he feels that there is no obligation on his part to apply the truths he has received in religious lines as he applies the truths that have been found out by investigation along other lines.

A testimony of the gospel can only come to people who are willing to apply themselves in first learning the gospel, and the things necessary to be done and then observing and putting into practice these principles. As in the example of chemistry the result comes after a time when the proper combination is made, so it is with the gospel, the desired result cannot be obtained except by the proper application of the truths involved.

We occasionally have people who come into our Church with an idea that something very remarkable is going to happen to them in the way of manifestations or miracles that will be an outward demonstration to them of the truthfulness of the gospel, confirming without question this thing that they have believed to be right. I remember a young man who had investigated the principles of the gospel and done some research work. He had been in the war and had been injured so that it was necessary for him to use crutches. While he had investigated in a fair way, still he continually had doubts and questions about some of the principles. These doubts kept him rather undecided as to whether it was right or wrong. However, eventually he decided that the principles were true, and felt that he had received a sufficient testimony, so that he applied for baptism. On coming up out of the water, I am convinced that he expected to be healed of the injury that he had received in the war and that this remarkable miracle or blessing would be given to him as an added testimony, removing from his mind any particular doubt that he had. But there was no outward demonstration of the power of the Lord in his behalf. Hands were laid upon his head and he was confirmed a member of the Church. He went along for awhile rather feeling that this blessing should come to him, but nothing particular was given to him as far as an outward demonstration was concerned. Because of this absence of any outward sign, he decided that the Church was not true and left the Church.

We had another case where a woman had been in touch with the principles of the gospel from her childhood but had not taken the opportunity of coming into the Church. In the later years of her life, she felt that she could not stay out any longer, because of the testimony that had come to her, the truths that she had heard from time to time, as the elders visited at her father's home. She applied for baptism, and afterwards she expressed herself as being rather surprised that she felt no particular difference after being baptized than she did before. It was her idea that undoubtedly the Lord would so impress her that she would know beyond any shadow of a doubt that she was absolutely right in coming into the Church. Of course, in a way, she was rather disappointed that this outward manifestation was not given to her.

I am of the opinion that often our young people, as well as our older people, are waiting for some of these remarkable things to happen to them, feeling that their faith all at once will be made almost perfect by the demonstration that they will receive from their heavenly Father, as to the divinity of the Church. This is not the way that the Lord usually acts towards his people, and all of us will be rather disappointed if our faith is dependent on outward signs. The way has been shown and marked out in a very plain and unmistakable manner, the following of which will bring us safely to a knowledge of the truth.

I sincerely trust that our young people will feel that it is necessary for them to follow out the usual methods of receiving a testimony observing that marked path which has been given to us. If they will, there will be no question about their receiving such manifestation, the power of the Lord, as will indicate to their souls that they are in the right Church, that the Lord lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that Joseph Smith is his prophet in these latter days.

The Lord has indicated that it is obligatory on the part of parents to teach their children the principles of the gospel, but in the final analysis of the thing, it is quite necessary for the children themselves to investigate, and to find out for themselves concerning the truth of the principles that have been taught to them by their parents.

I trust, my brethren and sisters, that we will do what we can to interest our sons and daughters in the gospel, and guard them along intelligent lines, so that they will not have to go at it blindly. Then they may be shown how to apply the principles that will bring to them the desired blessings and the testimony, so that in the end our young people, as they grow to manhood and womanhood, will not be left in doubt as to the truth of the gospel. They will have the staunch, firm testimony that their fathers and mothers had because of their application of the principles which bring a testimony.

If we as parents will only do our part and follow the commandments given to us, as far as teaching our children are concerned, the boys and girls will continue to work out for themselves the different processes necessary to be gone through in order to get this definite knowledge from their heavenly Father.

Let us live the gospel, and lay up treasures in heaven by keeping the commandments of the Lord, so that when the time comes that we are especially in need of blessings, we can draw on the account that we have with the Lord, and find that our balance is on the credit side. This knowledge will give us greater confidence in going to the Father, in faith, for blessings that we may stand so much in need of, which blessings may be in being able to reach the hearts of our sons and daughters, impress them with the testimony and faith of their Fathers.

A tenor solo was sung by Charles S. Martin, entitled, "In my Father's house are many mansions."

ELDER JOSEPH QUINNEY, JR.

President of the Canadian Mission

Never in my life have I felt more joy and happiness in proclaiming and teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to mankind than I do at the present time. It seems to me that there is a vital need of the simple faith that the gospel provides among the children of men. I am happy, therefore, in the thought that we as Latter-day Saints stand firmly on the ground that the quality of faith that will bring both spiritual and temporal salvation to human kind is the kind that leads us to know without a question of doubt that Jesus is the Christ, the resurrection and the life of man, the Redeemer of mankind, and that through him and by yielding obedience to his great plan of life we are to become like him in that we are to have immortality and eternal life.

When one takes into consideration the fact that there are extant in the world today many who are advocating and teaching from the pulpit, in homes, in conversation, and through the printed pages of newspapers and magazines, the idea that the Son of God was merely a great moral teacher and not the Savior of mankind, that the mighty works he did were only myths, that the literal resurrection of his body was not a fact, then it seems to me that our mission should be more intensified in teaching mankind everywhere the necessity of cultivating a vital faith in him so that the witness that God has implanted in our beings will spring up into everlasting joy, so much so that we will be able to impress the divinity of the Christ upon the hearts of those with whom it is our privilege to meet from time to time.

A few Sundays ago, together with some of my missionary companions, I attended the services in a very fashionable church in one of the great cities of the land. We were interested in the services, and more especially in the sermon delivered by the minister of the church. His remarks partook more or less of the changes that take place in the lives of individuals who, when they are touched with some superpower that brings about a reformation in their lives, then after this change they step out and devote themselves to a cause, and usually the cause is along the lines of moral subjects which they teach quite religiously. His sermon was built upon the idea that we must be touched with a supernatural power before we are able to bring to pass anything worth while. I think his remarks were well received and suggested, at least, the idea that improvements were always in order and that we arrive at great heights only when operated upon by this power which gives us vision.

I have often told missionaries that the greatest and most sacred thought that can enter the hearts of men is a thought of God, and then allow that thought to develop and expand until it becomes the dominating power of life. A pure faith must be built upon this thought of God. He is the greatest we know and a knowledge of him is measured more by vital faith in him than the use of any device or mental process we can possibly adopt. We can soon come to our limitations in real faith when we use only our minds, but there are no limitations to our faith when we build it upon spirituality. If we were to judge the faith of Moses we would come to an understanding that it was built upon spiritual power. It was not until he was touched by the light of God's Holy Spirit that he reached the zenith of his power. This great leader of nations knew full well the value of faith in God, he led Israel out of bondage because his trust in God was so great that it seemed, as we read the story, that he could talk face to face with Jehovah whenever the occasion required. There was no doubt, it seems, of a perfect understanding as to where he would receive help when he needed it. He also was conscious of the fact that to maintain this quality of faith he must devote himself to living righteously before God daily.

The holy scriptures abound in testimonials where the quality of faith has always been operative in communing with God. Indeed, one is inspired when he reads the testimonies of the prophets regarding their talks with, and seeing, God. It seems that faith and trust in God have always been the gateway to joy and happiness.

In the days of the Christ great principles of righteousness were taught and lived by him to demonstrate his divinity and have mankind believe in his mighty mission. We hear him constantly telling his followers that to believe in him was to have faith in him who sent him, and that to know him and his Father is life eternal.

Let us pause for a moment and feel the effect that the Son of God had upon his disciples through this quality of faith. He had made them the promise that when he went away he would send the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, and he, the Holy Ghost, would teach them all things, and above all he would bear witness of the divinity of the Christ. Mark you, when Christ was gone from among them they had only one alternative, and that was to return to their former occupations. Then it was that they were touched by that light and power, and by their faith in the things that the Christ had taught them they increased their hope, faith, and knowledge, until they at last lost no time in doing the works that he had taught them to do. Only their faith impelled them to move among the people and preach Christ and him crucified. This faith, as their shield, went with the most of them to a martyr's grave. A faith in a righteous cause will live after men are dead and gone. We know what it means to have a vital faith in our Lord and Master. We have some idea of the character of work we must do to enjoy this kind of faith.

It is written by a gifted writer:

"Faith is a necessary faculty of the soul; the power by which we commit ourselves to any object that wins our devotion and commands our allegiance. No man avoids its use, and men differ only in the objects toward which their faith is directed. Of all the tragedies caused by the misuses of human powers, none is more frequent and disastrous than the ruin that follows the misuse of faith. With this necessary and powerful faculty in our possession capable of use on things high or low, to what determination can a man more reasonably set himself than this—'Since I must and do use faith on something I will choose the highest'? It is with such a rational and worthy choice that the Christian turns to Jesus. He is the best we know. We will direct our faith toward him. This does not mean that in the end our faith does not rest on God—it does, for Jesus is the way, the door, as he has said, faith in him moves us up through him to the One who sent him.

"Faith in Jesus is the most vivid, true, and compelling way we have of committing ourselves to the highest and best we know. In the light of this truth we can understand why John called such faith the supreme work which God demands of us."

This very hope we have within us when crystallized into a vital faith is the greatest assurance we have of our immortality and eternal life. To me, this thought is wonderful, it drives me on in that channel whose tributaries are ever flowing into that stream of faith which makes me know and feel the Creator and Founder of the eternal plan of life. It is only when we deal in the complex things of life that our faith in Christ becomes skeptical and doubtful. The things that Jesus did while here upon the earth were simple and generous. They were even great and powerful in their simplicity. They added joy and happiness to those who were affected. Yet we find many today who are trying to belittle and destroy faith in these mighty truths. Who is there here that would care to have removed from the scriptures the simple story of the poor woman who had spent all her twelve years earnings on doctors to rid herself of the dread disease she was troubled with? Not one, I'm sure. Yet in a moment of absolute faith in the Christ and his healing power she has left us an example of pure faith that cannot be excelled. In face of opposition she declares that "If I can but touch the hem of his garment I shall be made well." Then the Savior, with all the power needed, said to her, "Be made clean." Shall we let this, together with all the other incidents filled with faith, slip away from holy writ and have people say they are only myths? God forbid. There are too many such things being wrought by the power of God today to permit anything to come along and mar the beauty and power of this circumstance as it stands in the Bible.

My dear brethren and sisters, to have faith in God and his Son Jesus Christ is the greatest thing we should strive for. It can be ours, this great gift of faith, by bringing ourselves to our knees and in the silent hour of prayer asking God for the fortifying power of his holy Spirit, and by responding to the principles of righteousness as contained in the mighty plan of life and salvation established by our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

I bear witness with all the power I have that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that through him the gospel has been restored in power and authority. I do humbly pray that our faith will never wane, but that it will continue to develop and grow into an absolute fellowship with God and his Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANGUS T. WRIGHT

Former President of the New Zealand Mission

My dear Brethren and Sisters: I rejoice in having this privilege of addressing you for a few moments in the overflow meeting. My remarks, if I am so led, will be more in the nature of a report of the labors of myself and wife while traveling to and from New Zealand and some of our experiences while there.

I must say first that I appreciate the honor which was conferred upon me in having had the privilege of representing the Church of God in that far off foreign land, to have been a messenger of salvation to those who are in darkness, and those who know not the plan of salvation.

When my wife and I were set apart for this work, we were promised that we should be blessed and preserved to go in peace and to return in safety, and if we were faithful and diligent we should enjoy the promptings of the Holy Spirit of God. I want to testify here and now that those promises were fulfilled completely and I was frequently surprised to receive impressions and promptings that when followed, led me aright every time and were really a source of wonder and consolation to me. President Grant, who was mouth, told me also to go and be a father to the young elders over there. I tried to remember and obey this admonition always, and so when I could not be a father, then I was a brother to them; I tried to enter into their joys and to sympathize with them in their troubles and their sorrows. We had our annoyances—yes, among fifty elders one could not expect to have perfection in all, particularly when most all were very young—18, 19 and 20 years only, the majority of them were, of course, inexperienced, but infractions of the mission rules were confined to but one or two of them.

On our voyage over we were so unfortunate as to have a case of smallpox develop in the steerage, and in consequence, when in the Waitemate harbor, in sight of our friends on the wharf, the vessel was put about, and we all were taken to the quarantine island, fifty miles distant, and kept there for two weeks. It was all for a good purpose, however, as on the second Sabbath, I was asked if I would speak in the evening service for twenty minutes. I gladly consented and it was so arranged. Before beginning I was asked if I would speak on two subjects, namely, Polygamy, and, did we as "Mormons" believe in Christ? The time arrived and the large upper room was filled with the whole passenger assembly of about 300 souls. I told them frankly that we were not there to preach polygamy. In the year 1890 the practice had been discontinued through a manifesto from the then President of the "Mormon" Church, since which time no plural marriages had been solemnized in any place, nor by any officer in the Church over which the Church had any control.

As to the second question, do we believe in Christ? Yes; we not only believe, but we know that Jesus is the Christ and that he lives because we have seen him. It is no longer a question of simple belief, but an absolute knowledge, as the Father and the Son appeared to our Prophet Joseph Smith and talked with him, and this is the important message which we have to bear to you, that these holy personages, after whose images we were created, came to the earth and restored the everlasting gospel in its fulness, and this is what we preach to you today and bear our testimony to you that it is true, is God-given, and we call upon you to repent and to embrace the gospel.

I felt well and spoke to them for thirty minutes, and then they said I quit too soon. We made many firm friends among fellow passengers and removed much prejudice. While in that land we met many of the high government officials, also a number of other prominent men, and know that we removed much prejudice and feel well pleased with the results of our two years' labor.

The principal newspaper at Waunganui had printed several scurrilous misrepresentations of our traveling elders, having been influenced by stories which had appeared in English papers to the effect that these Utah elders were sent out to induce young women to join the Church, who were then sent in large companies to Utah for immoral purposes, etc.

I said to him: Now, Mr. Editor, I want to say, first, that these statements are all false, that we don't confine our work to the young ladies, that we are here to preach Christ and him crucified, and to warn the whole world of his second coming and to induce the whole people to be prepared to meet him; that to pay $250 per head to land young women in Utah, where there is already a great plenty and of the best quality, for immoral or any other purpose is preposterous, and as a business man you know that the emigration laws of New Zealand are so strict and each person applying for a passport is so closely scrutinized and thoroughly questioned, that this is all a physical impossibility; and besides, the American laws governing immigration and the quota allowed would absolutely prevent any wholesale transfer of young or old to Utah. Now, Mr. Editor, be fair to these young elders who have come thus far at their own expense to bear their testimonies to this people; publish no more of your damaging reports until you have personally investigated them.

He promised to do this and give us a fair write-up in the next issue of his paper.

Now, my brothers and sisters, I must not take up more of the valuable time lest I encroach on the time of Brother Smith. I have much I would like to say to the parents of the elders over there, but time will not permit. Again I rejoice in this privilege, especially to be found in the company of these stalwarts, these mission presidents, some of whom have served in this capacity for a score of years. I testify that it is a noble work, that it is the work of God. I have been blessed in this labor, and I desire to continue to serve. May God keep us all true and faithful, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

Of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church

There are only a few moments left, but I feel that I should take the time to comment upon a thought expressed by one of our speakers, who said that he was asked why our young people do not have a testimony of the gospel. I think that the person asking this question was either misinformed, or was not acquainted with the young people of the Church. It is true that few of them feel to express themselves as having a testimony of the gospel, but when put to the test, they soon learn the difference between that strong feeling they have that the gospel is true and the assurance that causes them to say they know.

In my opinion, one reason for this apparent lack of knowledge, on the part of the young people, is that, as parents and officers in the Church organizations, we have not taken advantage of the means provided and have not given the encouragement needed to bring out this important fact. Perhaps we are not setting the proper example, and many of us fail to show the proper interest in this great gift, for we are told that a testimony is the gift of God and does not come unsought.

Some of our young men go into the mission field and express themselves as not knowing for a surety that the gospel is true, but they feel that it is, and hope soon to gain a testimony. If they had been put to work and given more opportunities to bear testimony at home, this gift of God would have come to them, just as it does later in the mission field. It should be the aim of every parent and every officer in the Church to assist the young people to gain a testimony, for those who are not of our faith do not understand why we send young men and young women into the world to preach the gospel who seemingly are not fully converted.

I read a letter the other day from a young man who a few months ago was attending the missionary class here. He is now laboring in one of the large cities in Europe. In his letter he calls attention to many little incidents that tend to impress him with the great importance of the service in which he is engaged, and of the guiding influence of the Holy Spirit.

I will repeat one incident. One morning he awakened early and could not go to sleep again. His companion complained of his restlessness, which the elder could not explain. He finally arose from his bed to study, but could not apply himself to his study and so decided to take a walk. As he started out, he was impressed to go to another part of the city, where two other elders were living. On the way there he met a man and his wife from Utah whom he knew. They did not have the address of any of the elders or Saints in that city, and in their prayers had asked the Lord to direct them. This boy, being the only elder in that city who was acquainted with them, was led to them by this unseen Power, and his vision was opened to the great power of prayer and the willingness of the Lord to answer the prayers of his children.

Similar incidents of the manifestations and power of the Holy Spirit could be related by nearly every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Even so, are we fully impressed with the importance of these manifestations? Do they enter into our lives and cause us to turn to our heavenly Father in humility, with a desire to serve him with all our might, mind, and strength?

Two or three days ago I met a young man on the street whom I have not seen for a great many years. As I stopped to shake hands with him, he said that he wanted to have a visit with me and a long talk. We stepped to the curb and he told this story:

Having left school in his youth and obtained employment which took him away from home, he had very little opportunity to labor in the Church. His companions and associates having but little time for religion, he drifted from active participation in Church affairs. After two or three children had been born to him, his thoughts wandered to his early home teachings, and to the prospects of the future for his family. In his youth he had been taught to pray, and had never turned from this practice.

Finally, the elders were called in to administer to one of his children who had been given up by the attending physicians. Almost instantly the child was relieved and continued to improve until it was soon in perfect health.

This little incident brought forcibly to his mind the teachings of his childhood, and he was so impressed that his whole soul is now centered upon so living that he may go with his family to the temple, there to have the promise of the new and everlasting covenant sealed upon them. This young man's mother has been a constant worker in the temple for many years, and her prayers have gone out to the Lord, asking that the heart of her son be touched, and in the Lord's own way and in due time these prayers have been answered.

Thus, we see the importance of loving one another, as we are commanded to do and we should constantly be found serving the Lord by serving our fellow men and encouraging them in their efforts to earn as their reward salvation in the celestial kingdom.

May this be our lot, is my prayer in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang, "Daughter of Zion."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder John Keddington.

SECOND DAY

MORNING SESSION

At 10 o'clock, Monday morning, October 5, 1925, the meeting in the Tabernacle was opened by President Heber J. Grant who announced that the choir and congregation would sing, "Come, come, ye Saints."

After the song, Elder Bryant S. Hinckley, President of the Liberty stake of Zion, offered the opening prayer.

A solo, "The Seer, the Seer, Joseph the Seer," was sung by William Russell.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

DIVINE REVELATION

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints stands for the doctrine of divine revelation, immediate, continuous and direct. "We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God." Such is the language of one of our Articles of Faith, written for the Church by its founder, Joseph Smith, prophet, revelator and seer.

My reason for referring to the subject at this time is a remark attributed to Colonel William Jennings Bryan, of honored memory, during the famous Evolution trial at Dayton, Tennessee. He is reported to have said that to destroy the Bible would be to destroy revealed religion.

MAN IN THE IMAGE OF GOD

Before going any further into that, I wish to say that I was in full sympathy with the Great Commoner in his general attitude on that historic occasion. I believe that when God made man in His own image, He made a man, and not a monkey, nor any other animal out of which man has evolved. I do not believe that the first of our race was a savage, or a cave man, who courted his wife with a club and carried her off by force. Such creatures there may have been, and there may be now. I do not dispute the findings and the facts of science—real science—which is knowledge, not guess-work. But I do deny that the great father of the human family was a creature of that kind.

ADAM'S ANTECEDENTS

Adam was no ordinary character. How could he be, with such a mission and such antecedents as were his? In the heavens, before this earth was formed, he was Michael the Archangel, leader of the loyal spirit hosts that vanquished Lucifer and his rebellious legions, winning the right to take bodies upon this planet, to become "souls" capable of endless increase and advancement. What Latter-day Saint can doubt that Adam was among "the noble and great," referred to in the Book of Abraham as "rulers," chosen before they were born into this world to play leading parts in the divine drama having as its purpose the uplift and promotion of "the lesser intelligences" who became God's sons and daughters—the end designed by the all-wise, all-benevolent Creator from the beginning?

THE EVERLASTING GOSPEL

Bear in mind that the Gospel of Christ is not a mere life boat or fire escape—a way out of a perilous situation. It is all this and more. It is the path to endless glory and exaltation, the plan of eternal progression, designed by the wisdom of the Gods before the foundation of the world. Adam's fall was a part of the great plan. It brought death, spiritual and temporal death—for Divine Justice demands a penalty for every transgression,—but it also produced the human race, so far as mortal bodies are concerned, a race redeemed by the great Atoning Sacrifice, which paid Adam's debt, mended the broken law, repoiised the unbalanced scale, and restored the equilibrium of right. Thenceforth man, by pursuing the path marked out for him, might go on to perfection. It was Adam's mission to bring us into this world. It is Christ's mission to lift us up out of this world, when the object of our sojourn here is accomplished.

THE DISPENSATIONS

Adam was the first to receive and obey the Gospel, revealed to him out of Eternity at the very beginning of Time. Since his day it has been upon the earth repeatedly, in a series of dispensations, of which this is the greatest and the last. Adam presides over all the gospel dispensations, including the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times—he presides over them all, just as the President of the Church presides over all the Stakes of Zion and all the outside Missions, though each has its own immediate presiding authority. Joseph Smith is the immediate head of this dispensation, and Adam is the general head of all. Standing next to Christ in the Priesthood, whenever that divine power is revealed from heaven to earth, "it is by Adam's authority." So says Joseph Smith.

The world has not seen the last of Father Adam. He is coming again, as the Ancient of Days, to fulfill the prophecy of Daniel. He will come to the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman, where of old he blessed his posterity, foretelling what should befall them to the latest generation. He will call a council and assemble his righteous descendants, to prepare them for the glorious advent of the King of Kings.

This is a part of the divine program, as made known by modern revelation.

NEITHER APE NOR CAVE MAN

Dismiss from your minds, my hearers—if any of you entertain the notion—that Adam, the Ancient of Days, the great Prince and Patriarch of our race, was ever a jungle-inhabiting ape, or even an unenlightened cave man. He knew more about religion than all the theologians of the world combined. He knew more about science—the sources of science—than any evolutionist has ever dreamt of knowing. How can anyone whose soul has been fed with the revelations of God, whose mind has been illumined by the spirit of the Gospel, the gift of the Holy Ghost, conceive of Adam, the first of the human race, as anything less than the Bible represents him to be—a man formed in the image of his Maker?—which is tantamount to saying that the Maker is in the form of man.

BRYAN ANSWERED

And now as to that remark of Colonel Bryan's. Is it a fact that the destruction of the Bible would mean the destruction of revealed religion? According to my reckoning there are at least three books, in addition to the Bible, that would have to be destroyed before revealed religion could perish. I refer to the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price, which three, with the Bible, are the accepted doctrinal standards of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. All these sacred volumes have to do with revealed religion, and they would have to be destroyed before it could see destruction. Even then it would survive if a man like Joseph Smith remained, to receive from God the revelations of His will.

NOT DEPENDENT UPON BOOKS

Revelation does not depend upon books. It is an eternal principle, a perennial, ever-flowing fountain. Books may come and books may go, but revelation goes on forever.

The Bible is one of the best books in creation. We do not undervalue it. To the Latter-day Saints it is the word of the Lord, save for the errors that have crept into it through faulty translation. But it is not the source of eternal truth, nor the foundation of all righteousness. No book can claim that distinction. Religion could exist without the Bible, and it did exist, as revealed from Heaven, before that ancient volume was compiled.

There were prophets before Moses, he who wrote the Pentateuch or first five books of the Bible; and their inspired utterances (some of which have been brought to light in modern days) are just as sacred as the writings of Israel's great law-giver. But they are no substitute for revelation; they do not constitute the foundation of religion. Religion rests upon the Rock of Revelation, and that rock is Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world.

Some critics think they have discovered that Moses did not write the books attributed to him. But there was no such thought in the mind of the Prophet Joseph Smith, when he revised, by the Spirit of Revelation, the writings of Moses, as they now appear in the Pearl of Great Price. He plainly identifies Moses with the authorship of the Book of Genesis. Surely the testimony of a prophet of God is quite as worthy of consideration as the theories of college students and the carpings of "higher criticism."

The Book of Mormon is also the word of the Lord, and that it was translated correctly, we have the Lord's declaration to the Three Witnesses. But the Book of Mormon is not the basis of our religious faith. It rests upon a much solidier foundation.

The Bible is not the Gospel; neither is the Book of Mormon; though both may be said to contain it. Such books are records of the Gospel's experience among men, and are a means of preserving a knowledge of the truth and handing it down to posterity. Books are a great convenience, an almost priceless boon, but they are not absolutely indispensable. Religion could live without them.

THE SCIENCE OF SCIENCES

But it could not live without God. He is the Source of all true religion and all true science, revealed or unrevealed. What is science but a part of religion, a branch or form of revelation? And what is religion but the science of all sciences—the science of eternal life? Music, poetry, and other arts—they also are forms of revelation, means used by the Giver of every good gift to make known the beautiful and the sublime—things that we "seek after," and ought to seek, for they are portions of the Divine Message, accessories to the Everlasting Gospel.

THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL

The Bible is a history of God's dealings with an ancient people—the House of Israel—the descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in whom Jehovah purposed to bless all nations, and did so when He came through the lineage of those Hebrew patriarchs as the Redeemer of mankind. He also blessed the world when he dispersed his chosen people among the nations, thus sprinkling them with the blood of the faithful, the blood that believes, and with spirits answering to that blood. The Bible is likewise a prophecy of God's intentions toward the human family, and a repository of laws and ordinances that His ancient people were commanded to observe and obey.

LAWS ACTIVE AND OBSOLETE

Some of those laws are still in force, notwithstanding the lapse of ages. Others are obsolete, out of date. This cannot be said of the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, or the principles of the Everlasting Gospel; but it can be said of many parts of the Holy Scriptures. They make good reading, but their day is past; they are not in force upon the present generation.

The same is true of parts of the Book of Mormon and parts of the Doctrine and Covenants. They have no reference to us whatever; and I'll prove it in a twinkling.

MODERN ILLUSTRATIONS

In the month of January, 1847, the main body of the Latter-day Saints were encamped upon the Missouri River, prior to crossing the great plains to the Rocky Mountains. President Brigham Young, who was then the head of the Church, voiced to its members "the word and will of the Lord," now constituting Section 136 of the book of Doctrine and Covenants. It directed all the people of the Church and those who journeyed with them to be organized into companies of hundreds, fifties and tens (meaning wagons) preparatory to the passage of the plains. This meant that they were to yoke up their ox teams, hitch them to their covered wagons, and organize as directed, "with a covenant and promise to keep all the commandments and statutes of the Lord our God."

Now, this part of the revelation is still alive and in force. We are all required to keep the Lord's commandments, such as apply to our case and condition. But we are not required to hitch up ox teams, organize into companies of hundreds, fifties and tens, and cross the plains to the Rocky Mountains. Yet that requirement, obsolete as to us, was the word and will of the Lord to our fathers and mothers, our grandfathers and grandmothers, encamped upon the Missouri River in January, 1847.

Another illustration: Many years ago there came to Salt Lake City a learned prelate of the Greek Catholic Church. He visited one of our Sacrament meetings, and was greatly shocked to see the Saints sipping water instead of wine at the table of the Lord. He afterwards said to me: "Why do you do this? Jesus Christ authorized the use of wine when he instituted the Sacrament at Jerusalem." "Yes," I assented, "and He also authorized wine when He instituted the same ordinance among the Nephites here in America, as told in the Book of Mormon. But what has that to do with us? We are living in another dispensation. We are not governed by what Jesus told the Jews to do, nor by what he told the Nephites to do. We are governed by what He tells the Latter-day Saints to do; and the latest word that comes from Him through his living oracle at the head of the Church, must always take precedence over any former commandment given by Him to us or to any other people. We also will use wine in the Sacrament whenever the Lord requires it; but since He has said that it matters not what we eat or drink at such times, so long as we do it with an eye single to His glory, we use water instead."

THE CHURCH OF THE LIVING GOD

No book is good enough to preside over the Church of God and direct its activities. Books are not a sufficient guide for a progressive people on their way to the celestial kingdom. They are good as far as they go, but they do not go far enough. We have something better—a living, heaven-inspired Priesthood, with the restored Gospel, the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and the principle of immediate and continuous revelation. Other churches are built upon books, traditions, decrees of councils and synods, private interpretations, man-made doctrines, maybe-so's and peradventures. But the Church of the Living God stands where He has placed it, upon the Rock of Divine Revelation, and the gates of hell cannot prevail against it.

A BRAVE FIGHT

No, Friend Bryan. You meant well, and you made a brave fight for the truth as you saw it, though somewhat hampered by tradition, and probably by environment. And the Lord will bless you for it and remember you when He makes up his jewels. But you fell short, through lack of further light and understanding.

No, the destruction of the Bible would not destroy all that God has revealed. It would not destroy what the other good books contain, nor seal up the heavens against future revelation. It would remove only a history or a hand-book of religion, one of the means used by the Almighty to preserve among men the truth as Heaven has revealed it.

TRUTH THE ETERNAL

What is Truth? Joseph Smith says: "It is the knowledge of things as they are, as they have been, and as they will be." John Jaques, inspired by the Muse of Poesy, which is only another name for the God of Truth, built upon the same great thought when he gave us this glorious hymn:

O say what is truth? 'Tis the fairest gem
That the richest of worlds can produce;
And priceless the value of truth will be when
The proud monarch's costliest diadem
Is counted but dross and refuse.

Yes, say, what is truth? 'Tis the brightest prize
To which mortals or Gods can aspire;
Go search in the depths where it glittering lies,
Or ascend in pursuit to the loftiest skies;
'Tis an aim for the noblest desire.

The sceptre may fall from the despot's grasp
When with winds of stern justice he copes,
But the pillar of truth will endure to the last,
And its firm-rooted bulwarks outstand the rude blast
And the wreck of the fell tyrant's hopes.

Then say what is truth? 'Tis the last and the first,
 For the limits of time it steps o'er:
 Though the heavens depart and the earth's fountains burst,
 Truth, the sum of existence, will weather the worst,
 Eternal, unchanged, evermore.

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

AUTHORIZATION OF CHRIST TO WITNESSES OF HIM

"But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

These men who were to be witnesses were eye witnesses of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that is the principal fact to which they were to bear witness in all parts of Judea, Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

THE REALITY OF CHRIST AS DEITY

My beloved brethren and sisters, in the world today belief in Jesus Christ is too perfunctory, too conventional. The reality of Christ as Deity does not seem to possess the souls of men. The resurrected Lord is a something apart from most men's lives. I think I cannot better illustrate this thought than to read a few lines written by one of the soldiers in Flanders, when he was in the midst of shot and shell and facing death. Writing of the Christ he says:

"We had forgotten you, or very nearly,
 You didn't seem to touch us very nearly.
 Of course we thought about you now and then—
 Especially in any time of trouble—
 We knew that you were good in time of trouble—
 But we are very ordinary men.

"Now, we remember, over here in Flanders—
 (It is not strange to think of you in Flanders)—
 This hideous warfare seems to make things clear.
 We never thought about you much in England—
 But now that we are far away from England—
 We have no doubts, we know that you are here.

"We think about you kneeling in the Garden—
 Ah, God, the agony of that dread Garden—
 We know you prayed for us upon the cross.
 If anything could make us glad to bear it
 'Twould be the knowledge that you willed to bear it—Pain, death, the uttermost of human loss!"

Too many in the pseudo Christian world today can say as truthfully as the soldier:

"We had forgotten you, or very nearly—
 You do not seem to touch us very nearly."

The reality of God the Father, the reality of Jesus Christ, the risen Lord, is a truth which should possess every human soul. God is the center of the human mind as surely as the sun is the center of this universe, and once we feel his Fatherhood, once we feel his nearness, sense the divinity of the deity of the Savior, the truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ follow as naturally as the day the night, and as night the day.

HOW MAY WE KNOW GOD AND FEEL HIS NEARNESS?

How may we know God, how may we feel that nearness to him? That is the question that young men are asking today. Boys and girls are not naturally irreligious; they are not profaners because they love to be. I know they seem indifferent, but in their very hearts, they are asking these eternal questions, and they long for the answer.

ONE WAY, TO THINK, TO REASON

There are three ways, among others, to which we should like to ask the young men of Israel, particularly, to seek their God and to feel his nearness. One is to think, to reason. Reason though only an insecure guide will lead us to him. However, "Dim as the borrowed rays of moon and stars to lonely, weary, wandering traveler—is reason to the soul," but it is a guide, and too few men use it positively with a desire to know the truth.

ANOTHER, TO ACCEPT THE WITNESS OF MEN OF INTEGRITY

Another pathway is to accept the witness of men who have known him, who have seen him. I think we pay too little attention to the value of these witnesses. I have read in your presence this morning the authorization of Christ to his apostles who were to be witnesses of him. The very first act of the Twelve after Christ's ascension was to choose a man from among those who had been eye witnesses of Christ's resurrection. That was what they wanted the apostle to be who was to take Judas' place. (Read in the first chapter of Acts)—a witness of his resurrection. Mind you, many men in the world today accept Christ as a great teacher, but that is not the fact which is going to transform their souls. He was a great teacher, the greatest teacher of men, but he was also God. Through him we know God; through Christ, God reveals himself to men. It is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world of whom I speak when I plead for young men to come close to him and to think of him as a reality after his death, after his burial. Of the resurrected Christ were the early apostles to be witnesses in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

Now let me here say that we ought not to question the integrity of these men. I believe in them, I cannot believe that they wanted to deceive, I cannot believe that they were deceived, I cannot. In measurement of time we are a long way from them, I know, but if we study carefully their lives and their histories we shall find that their testimonies are reliable and that the integrity of their lives is unquestioned. To emphasize the value of their testimony, let me call your attention to what Mr. Roger W. Babson, author of Fundamentals of Prosperity has written about integrity, how our entire social structure is built upon it:

"The first fundamental of prosperity is integrity. Without it there is no civilization, there is no peace, there is no security, there is no safety. Mind you also this applies just as much to the man who is working for wages as to the capitalist and every owner of property. Integrity however is very much broader than the above illustration would indicate."

Before this quotation, he shows that there is no value at all in the bank book, no value in the deeds and mortgages that we hold.

"The value of them lies in the integrity of the lawyers and stenographers who draw up the papers, in the integrity of the officer and clerks who sign the documents, in the integrity of the courts and judges who would enable us to enforce our claims; in the integrity of the people, the citizenship who will stand behind that enforcement, and make our claims legal and valid."

"Integrity," he continues, "applies to many more things than money. Integrity requires the seeking after as well as the disposing of truth. It was their desire for truth which founded our education institutions, our sciences and our arts. All the great professions, from medicine to engineering, rest upon this spirit of integrity, and only as they so rest can they prosper or even survive."

TESTIMONY OF MEN WHO SAW THE RESURRECTED CHRIST

These men who were to be witnesses declared before their enemies, the very men who had put Jesus Christ to death on the cross, that they had seen the risen Lord. I will first read Peter's testimony given immediately after the resurrection:

"Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know;

"Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

"Whom God has raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it . . .

"This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses."

Ah, but the doubting critic says, and he says conscientiously, if we had absolute proof that this was Peter's testimony, it would have force. But remember, he says, that the Acts of the Apostles were not written until eighty years after Christ, or nearly half a century after the event of which Peter testified took place. Right. But let us remember also that in the severe test to which modern science has put all these ancient scriptures during the last half century, especially every ancient document that purports to contain any witness of the resurrected Christ, many documents have been thrown aside as spurious, the "Acts of John," the "Acts of Andrew," the "Acts of Peter," and others, have been thrown aside, but the Acts of the Apostles has emerged from that criticism with its authenticity established. Then we know that the author—we accept Luke as the author, and that, too, is fairly well established—Luke received the witness personally of the men who saw Jesus Christ after he was resurrected. We know that Luke was in Rome with Mark, and we know that Mark was in Jerusalem at the time that these great events took place. It is not thoroughly established but it is quite certain however that Mark was the young man who ran into the Garden the night of the betrayal. We know that Luke was in the house of Philip, the evangelist, and stayed many days at Caesarea. We know that at that time he went to Jerusalem, he conferred with James who presided over the Church at Jerusalem—James the brother of the Lord, who had accepted the gospel after the resurrection. The testimony of James, Luke heard, and in all probability the testimony of Peter, because Peter was there as one of the leaders when Luke went up to Jerusalem on that occasion, and he would hear first hand Peter's testimony. Men were living, five hundred of them at that time, who had seen the resurrected Lord. What about the integrity of men, integrity of witnesses? What right had Luke to suspect them? He did not, he accepted their testimony as valid, and their testimony of the resurrected Lord convinced him of the divinity of the work of Jesus Christ to which he subscribed and of which he became a member.

He heard from Paul, day after day and night after night, the testimony that he gave, and if there is any question about the direct testimony of Peter we have the direct testimony of Paul in the oldest recorded testimony extant, older than the Acts—a testimony written in the first twenty-five years of the Christian church. Paul testifies that he saw the risen Lord. With that testimony you are all acquainted. He further testifies that the risen Lord was seen of Cephas (Peter), "then of the Twelve; after that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that he was seen of James; then of all the Apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as one born out of due time."

I cannot doubt that testimony. Why can the world? This testimony is of the resurrected Lord, not Jesus the teacher, not the Jesus of Nazareth, who went about as any other Jew, but Jesus the Lord, the Redeemer of mankind.

THE MODERN TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH SMITH

Let me call your attention to another witness nearer to us than the ancient apostles—the testimony of Joseph Smith the prophet. This comes closer to us. These other men are a long way from us in measurement of time. Joseph Smith testified that the risen Lord appeared to him, that he was introduced to the boy prophet by the Lord himself, the Father, who said, "This is my beloved Son; hear him." If that testimony stood alone it would be, as Christ said his testimony would be, of no avail when he spoke of himself. If Jesus were the only witness it would not be of force, but he had also God's testimony and the Scriptures. And so, Joseph Smith has other witnesses whose integrity cannot be questioned. Of Joseph's wonderful testimony I have not time to speak, I am merely suggesting a line of thought that young men may follow and come nearer to Christ if they will be conscientious and true, and not "play pranks with their souls," but be honest as Joseph Smith was honest, and as these other men were honest to death in their testimonies.

THREE WITNESSES CORROBORATE THE VISION OF JOSEPH

Three witnesses corroborated Joseph Smith's wonderful vision, and in that testimony which they give they bear record of another truth, the immortality of man. For if Jesus Christ lived after death, and the angel Moroni came as these three witnesses declared, then you and I shall live after death! Man is immortal. Oh, what a wonderful revelation, what it means to men who now but perfunctorily and in a conventional manner accept the gospel of Christ! These three men testified:

"Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come: That we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken. And we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for His voice hath declared it unto us."

"Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, Martin Harris."

I will not take time to read all.

One of the most pleasant features of an interesting and profitable visit that I recently made with President B. H. Roberts through the Eastern States mission, was our coming in contact with scenes in early Church history. When we were at Palmyra I read in one of the local papers a testimony, or memorandum, given by a man who knew these three witnesses personally. He has never joined the Church, but in that local paper I read this testimony of the integrity of one of these witnesses:

John H. Gilbert, on September 8, 1892, the man who set the type of the Book of Mormon, says this of Martin Harris:

"Martin Harris was a good farmer owning a farm of about one hundred and fifty acres about a mile north of Palmyra village, and had money at interest. Martin, as everybody called him, was considered by his neighbors a very honest man."

Martin, the honest man, says to the world, "God's voice declared to us that the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated are true; an angel of God came down and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the records." "A very honest man," bears the witness, why should we doubt it?

I rejoiced at the last meeting in Pittsburgh to hear President Roberts bear witness in a most inspirational meeting, that he heard

David Whitmer, another of the three special witnesses, testify in these words of the book:

"Young man, if that book (pointing to one of the early editions of the Book of Mormon) is not true, then there is no truth in this, God's world."

The integrity of these three witnesses cannot be successfully questioned. Men who heard these testimonies direct from the witnesses themselves are with us, and their witness is true.

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT

But there is a greater witness than the witness of men, great as that is. If we receive the witness of man, the witness of God is greater, for this is the witness of God which he has testified of his Son: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath witness in himself." There is a witness of the Spirit. God does reveal today to the human soul the reality of the resurrection of the Lord, the divinity of this great work, the truth, the divine and eternal truth, that God lives, not as a power, an essence, a force, as electricity, but as our Father in heaven. Oh, why do men try to make that power, recognized by science and religion everywhere, a mere force. I sometimes wish that such men would kneel down and try to pray to electricity. Imagine trying to pray to electricity! You can't do it, and yet that is one of the greatest known forces. You can, however, pray to God the Father, a personal being. God reveals to the soul his existence. He reveals the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, who came to earth to give to men the great reality of the existence of God and his Son; and in that spirit and with such witness in my soul I bear testimony today that Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world:

"I know that my Redeemer lives,
What comfort this sweet sentence gives,
He lives, He lives who once was dead;
He lives, my ever living head,
He lives, all glory to his name!
He lives, my Savior still the same,
O the sweet joy this sentence gives,
I know that my Redeemer lives."

God help us and all the world to sense the reality, that the gospel of Jesus Christ is established among men, and through obedience to it the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man may become realities to every son and daughter of Adam. God hasten the day when that testimony will be real in every heart, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

I feel very humble and never have I felt more than I do today to rejoice in the revelations of the Lord, especially in those that have come to us in this dispensation. It has caused my heart to swell within me as I have listened to the testimonies from our brethren as they have borne witness that God lives and that Jesus Christ is our Redeemer and the Son of God. I desire to add a few words of testimony to these great truths, knowing as I do that not only the brethren on this stand, but you, my brothers and sisters, are also able to bear the same testimony, because these things have been made known to you by the power of the Holy Ghost.

TO KNOW GOD AND JESUS CHRIST IS LIFE ETERNAL

In a prayer uttered by our Savior just before his death, he said: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

"I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

"And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."

I know, as these our brethren know, that God lives; that Jesus Christ is the Only Begotten Son of God in the flesh, and the Redeemer of the world. But I have not learned all that there is to know about him and our Father, neither have you, for in this mortal life it is impossible for us fully to comprehend the mission of our Lord and Redeemer, to know him and just who and what he is, and the extent of the great work he accomplished. But if we shall be worthy to enter into the presence of God the Father and Jesus Christ his Son and there be crowned with exaltation, it will be necessary for us to know them in the fullness. However, until we do enter into their presence and receive this great blessing, we will not fully know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent.

THE PRE-EXISTENCE OF CHRIST

A very significant thing in this prayer is the expression, "And now, Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." The work accomplished by our Savior did not begin when he came into this world a babe at Bethlehem. A great work had already been accomplished by him before he came here, and he exercised authority in the eternities, under his Father, before this world was framed, but not with a body of flesh and bones.

John, the beloved disciple, bearing witness of this, says:

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

"The same was in the beginning with God.

"All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made.

"In him was life; and the life was the light of men.

"And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

THE WORK OF CHRIST TO BRING TO PASS IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE

Jesus Christ was the light of men before he came here to die.

Under the direction of his Father he created worlds—great earths for habitation by the children of God—and exercised authority as the Son of God, the first begotten in the spirit, beyond that which we can comprehend. In the scriptures, known to us as the Writings of Moses, we have some account of this great work that was performed by Jesus Christ. I want to read a portion of the conversation, had by Moses with the Lord, and recorded in this scripture:

"And the Lord God said unto Moses: For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom and it remaineth in me.

"And by the word of my power, have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth.

"And worlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten.

"And the first man of all men have I called Adam, which is many.

"But only an account of this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, give I unto you. For behold, there are many worlds that have passed away by the word of my power. And there are many that now stand, and innumerable are they unto man; but all things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them.

"And it came to pass that Moses spake unto the Lord, saying: Be merciful unto thy servant, O God, and tell me concerning this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, and also the heavens, and thy servant will be content.

"And the Lord God spake unto Moses, saying: The heavens they are many, and they cannot be numbered unto man; but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine.

"And as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words.

"For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

So we see by this that Jesus Christ is the light and the life of men, he was a Creator before this world was made. But we are not concerned so much just now with the works he then performed, nor are we concerned just now with these other worlds and their inhabitants.

LIFE DID NOT ORIGINATE ON THE EARTH

This we know, and that will suffice until all things are revealed, the inhabitants of these worlds created by Jesus Christ, are begotten sons and daughters unto God. Life did not originate here; man did not first come into existence here. We are told by our Father in heaven, that man is eternal, that he has always existed, and that all life on this earth came from elsewhere. We may not be able to comprehend all this now, but the time will come in the providence of the Lord, when all these things shall be made known and we shall have knowledge in the fullness.

THE FAITHFUL PROMISED ETERNAL LIFE

The thing we are vitally interested in in this life is stated in that expression: "For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." This truth is vital to every faithful Latter-day Saint, for we have had committed into our care the gospel of Jesus Christ, and have been commissioned and given power through the Priesthood, to go forth and proclaim this message of salvation in all the world. We are to bear witness to the fact that God our Father, through the redemption made by Jesus Christ his Son, has granted unto all men the power of forgiveness and remission of sin through their faith, repentance, and baptism in water, by which they may come back, if they will be faithful in keeping his commandments to the end, and enjoy eternal life in his presence. Through the mercy of God all men are to receive immortality, and to those who are willing to serve and be obedient to all the commandments of the Lord, he has promised another great blessing known as eternal life. Immortality means life without death, and eternal life means much more than that, it is life in the presence of God and in the presence of Jesus Christ his Son, there to receive the fullness of the blessings and the power which the Father has promised to his sons and daughters who, through the keeping of the commandments are found just and true. All who receive the gospel and endure in faith to the end are heirs to the blessings of this great promise—eternal life.

When the Savior stood at the well in conversation with the woman of Samaria, he gave her some very important instruction regarding eternal life. There he also declared himself to be the Son of God. He asked her for water to drink, and in turn promised her and all who would believe on him and keep his sayings, that to them he would give water which if they would drink of it they would never thirst. It is written:

"Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again," (He was speaking of the water in the well), "but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well springing up unto everlasting life."

On another occasion when teaching the Jews, they asked Jesus what sign he could show, or what great work he had accomplished, to prove his ministry. They referred to Moses and to the manna that the Lord had sent to the children of Israel when they were in the wilderness. The Lord answered them thus:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you Moses gave you not that bread from heaven, but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven.

"For the bread of God is he that cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world."

So he declared himself to be the water of life and the bread of life, and made the promise that those who would receive this water and this bread should never thirst, and never hunger, their souls would be satisfied. They misunderstood him; the woman thought he spoke of water which quenches thirst. The Jews thought he spoke of bread which sustains the body, but he was speaking of the principles of the gospel, these principles of eternal life which, if the people would live them, would bring them back into the presence of the Father.

Again he said:

"I am the light of the world. He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

This is my testimony. I know these things are true. I know that if we are obedient to the laws and principles of the gospel as they have been made known to us, if we will walk in righteousness and endure in faith that we shall obtain eternal life. This life will bring us back into the presence of God, there to dwell in the fullness of light, there to know our eternal Father, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. Those who do not dwell there shall not know them, for they shall not be blessed with eternal life, which is God's life, although they may be in possession of immortality, for all men will receive the gift of the resurrection through the atonement of Jesus Christ. We must have faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God. We must believe in the Father, in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost, as three separate and distinct personages, the Father and the Son having bodies of flesh and bones, not blood. We are misunderstood by many people when we say that Jesus Christ has a body of flesh and bones and his Father also, and they naturally conclude that such a body must be quickened by the blood, but the body after the resurrection is not quickened by blood, but is quickened by spirit, and is immortal. We must believe in the Father, Son and Holy Ghost as the great governing power of the universe. It is necessary for men to repent of their sins in order to have perfect faith, and after repenting of their sins it is necessary that they have their sins remitted in the waters of baptism, that they be cleansed in the manner which the Lord has provided and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, by which they may come back again from spiritual death to spiritual life, to dwell in the presence of the Father and the Son.

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH MEN MAY SECURE SALVATION

In conclusion let me read these words by revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, the day on which this Church was organized:

"And we know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ, and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God.

"And we know that justification through the grace of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is just and true;

"And we know also, that sanctification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is just and true to all those who love and serve God with all their mights, minds and strength.

"But there is a possibility that man may fall from grace and depart from the living God.

"Therefore let the Church take heed and pray always, lest they fall into temptation."

We are not saved now. I have stood on the street corners and heard men declaring that they are saved, because they have received religion and been converted. No man is saved as long as mortality endures, unless he is faithful to the end, and there is always a possibility, as I have read to you here, that men may fall from grace.

So, it behooves us, as Latter-day Saints, to be faithful, to keep the commandments of the Lord, to walk in righteousness all the days of our lives. Thus through obedience to those commandments which are set forth in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and by continuance therein, we shall receive immortality, glory, eternal life, and dwell in the presence of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, where we shall truly know them. Oh, I pray that we may endure, that we may receive these blessings, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The choir and congregation sang, "O ye mountains high."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Datus E. Hammond, president of the Pioneer stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

At 2 o'clock, President Heber J. Grant announced the opening hymn, "Do what is right, the day-dawn is breaking."

After singing by the choir and congregation, prayer was offered by Elder William R. Palmer, President of the Parowan stake.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Now let us rejoice."

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

I am humbled in the presence of this vast assembly. It is the earnest desire of my heart to make at least a small contribution to this great conference of the Church. I recognize, however, that I can hope to do that only through the aid of our Father's Spirit, and I sincerely pray that I may have his Spirit to guide and direct me in the remarks which I shall make.

THE NATURE AND VALUE OF TESTIMONY

I, with you, have listened with great interest and profit to the testimonies which have been borne during this conference, and I have sat under the spell of the inspired words which have fallen from the lips of those upon whom the Spirit of God has been operating. I have thought of the value of testimony, and I should like, with your indulgence, to discuss for a few moments the nature of testimony. What is the testimony of Jesus Christ? I do not have reference to a differentiation between and among the various terms of scripture which are used to designate the testimony of Jesus. I am not particularly concerned that in some instances it may be called the gospel, or faith, or the Holy Spirit, or the Comforter, or even the Holy Ghost. It is the nature and essence of this Spirit which brings conviction to the hearts of people that has brought me to think and reflect upon it.

MORE THAN JUST A MENTAL STATUS

Is it more than just a mental status, a psychological phenomenon which may be changed with the state of a man's mind, today believing and knowing, and tomorrow forgetting and denying? Has it constituency, essence, and force? These questions have given me food for much thought and reflection. I am persuaded that the testimony of Jesus is something indescribable, but nevertheless some real tangible thing that has force and power, something which serves, when once taken into the structure of a man's life, to work therein a transformation, to change some of the vital elements which are part and parcel of his life.

GREAT SPIRITUAL FORCE

Great physical forces themselves defy the efforts of science to fully describe and comprehend them. Science has not given the constituency^o of gravity. What is light? What is electricity? What is heat? As I understand it, we know these great forces of nature only by the effects which they produce. We see their manifestations and we conclude that they exist, but can we describe them? I believe that with all the advancement made in the processes of scientific research and investigation they are yet mysteries to the intelligence of man. Is it unthinkable that just as light, heat and gravity are great forces of nature, bringing to bear upon the whole universe the results and manifestations of their power, that there may be in the world of men a force somewhat comparable, coming from God, which takes lodgment in the very beings of men and there brings about these transformations, these remarkable manifestations, not at all incomparable with those manifestations that come from the operation of the physical forces.

That a transformation is worked in the being of a man into whose heart comes the testimony of Christ is beyond all question. Examples are so numerous that they would, of course, not bear extensive repeating at this time.

THE MIRACULOUS CHANGE WROUGHT BY TESTIMONY

When Saul received into his heart and soul that something which we call a testimony, was he the same man who before had persecuted the Christians. No, he was a changed man. All his ideals, his conceptions, his works were changed by something that came into his life and wrought a miracle within it. When our missionaries go out into their fields of labor, stand upon their feet, and there proclaim the testimonies within them, do they not give expression to a force, a power, which has been operative within the very structures of their lives, and does not that very force in some way go from them to others to work a miracle? Is it just what they say, or the description which they give of the gospel plan, or their appeal to reason, which touches the hearts of this one and that one, out of great multitudes, and brings someone to say: "I know what they have said is true?" Or is there a transfusion in some indescribable way of a thing of essence from the personality of that humble servant of God into the convert that makes him feel and know? What is it that causes a man who has strayed from the path of truth, who has been inactive in the Church, after years, perhaps, of waywardness, when all at once confronted with the necessity of defending the faith, prompts him to rise and stand up like a man and say: "After all, I know the gospel is true"? Has there not been something ingrained within him that stays with him, a very integral part of his makeup?

TESTIMONY COMPARABLE TO PHYSICAL FORCE

Sometimes I have thought that testimony, this something which has such tremendous force and power in the life of a man, is not uncomparable to those antitoxins which science has discovered to procure immunity from disease. I doubt not that but a few years ago if the world had been told that there were ways of warding off yellow fever, typhoid, smallpox and other highly contagious diseases that there would have been general disbelief. Today these are proven facts. The mere injection of a serum into the blood will procure a substantial immunity which has saved the lives of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people from these diseases which once mowed down the human family in great epidemics, as the machine would mow down the ripened grain. May there not be something akin to this in the form of testimony that is injected into the very blood of a man, which wards off the disease of sin and makes a man immune from those microbes that come from the hand of Satan, scattered about among the human family to encourage wrong-doing and departure from the established course of righteousness? I do not know that such a comparison is proper or illuminating, but this I do know, that sin is disease and that the testimony of Christ procures immunity from that disease. Not that man is deprived of his agency, but that while he reacts and responds to the great force and power of testimony, disease in the form of sin has no power over him, and into his life there comes a protection against a more dreaded disease than any of those contagions which have been mitigated by the discoveries of science. This protection, this immunity from disease and sin, is open to all.

THE BLOOD OF ISRAEL SUSCEPTIBLE TO THE INFLUENCE OF THE SPIRIT

It seems to me, however, that there runs in some blood strains a higher susceptibility to the refining and saving influence of testimony than in other strains. I don't know that I understand it, but I have thought that the significance of the "blood of Israel" is that there is in that great blood strain, following the blessings and promises of God, a susceptibility to the influence of the Holy Spirit, that does not run in other strains. Science has made some rather remarkable discoveries upon the inherited traits and qualities that go with blood strains. I have been reading of late some very interesting material with reference to the development of that phase of scientific research. It is pointed out that experiments conducted on very large scales demonstrate beyond substantially any doubt that intelligence is inheritable, and, we with our training, can readily believe it. It would not take much to convince us that there descends from father to son tendencies and traits which make for or against the improvement of the race. These very things are said to run in the blood itself. I believe that testimony runs in the blood. I believe that it is inheritable, and that the tendency to faith may descend from father to son. It seems to me that Paul had that in mind when writing to Timothy, he said in substance: "I do perceive in thee the faith that was in thy grandmother Lois," thus recognizing that this tendency to faith, this susceptibility to testimony, courses along in the very blood strains of the race.

IS TESTIMONY SUSCEPTIBLE TO PROOF?

Is this that we call testimony susceptible of definite, tangible proof? To me it is. I recognize that by the use of my ordinary senses,—hearing, smelling, seeing, and touch, I demonstrate the existence of things. I prove to my satisfaction their materiality and the operation of the laws of nature so far as I know them. To me the operations of the Spirit of God within the structure of my life are as tangible, as susceptible of definite, concrete proof as the operations of many of the laws of nature. When I respond to this that I call my testimony, my heart warms, my body thrills. I feel the tingle of it. A satisfaction, a peace, a contentment, a joy that transcends description, envelops me. It is the proof to me that it is there, and so I assert it is susceptible of tangible proof and demonstration. Is it susceptible of scientific analysis? Yes, if the scientist will apply the test which is prescribed to demonstrate its truth. We may say to any scientist, to any man who inquires, just what God has said: "If you do my work and my will and keep my commandments you shall know whether it be the work of God or man." Are we justified in taking any other method than the method prescribed to determine the existence of testimony? I leave that thought for the reflection of those who would test the actuality of a testimony, for I know that it will come to every one who applies the prescribed method of attaining it.

TESTIMONY PRODUCES GOOD FRUITS

This testimony which is such an actuality always produces good fruits. Its results never vary. I know that it is said that monstrous and terrible crimes have been committed in the name of religion. That may be true, but I say that no crime and no offense against the justice of God has ever been committed under the influence of the testimony of Jesus and the Spirit of God. Men who have professed religion in organized or individual capacity have been guilty of heinous sin, but they were not under the influence of the testimony of Christ when they committed such sin. Testimony always brings to pass those things desirable for the race, because it is consistent with truth, being the very spirit of truth.

THE CRIME OF PLACING OBSTACLES IN THE WAY OF OBTAINING TESTIMONY

This testimony is acquired by many with difficulty. I suppose that we often wish that it could be more easily obtained, and that it would come more generally to the people of the world, but God in his providence has made it somewhat difficult of attainment. Being so difficult to acquire, it seems to me to be a very serious thing to place one obstacle in the way of its attainment. I have wondered how it is that men who profess great learning and intelligence can throw an obstacle into the way of him who seeks the acquisition of this testimony. It may be that it is often done innocently. It may be that those who destroy faith are not fully aware of the consequences of their acts. If it be so, I trust God will be merciful to them, but I cannot think but that the Lord will hold responsible any man or woman who has increased the difficulty of another to obtain this light, this testimony of the divinity of Jesus Christ.

It is a matter of great regret that in our schools and colleges there are those who pass under the designation of educated men and women, who seem to rejoice in the destruction of the testimony and the faith of young people. I warn them that a persistence on their part to destroy faith and to keep this great thing we call testimony from reaching the hearts of students, young men and young women, will constitute an offense in the sight of God for which they shall be held accountable.

LET NOT THE THEORIES OF DOCTORS OF PHILOSOPHY DESTROY YOUR TESTIMONY

I could wish that the faith of our young folks were so well established as to give them security, even in the face of these dangerous situations. We can say to them, God has revealed the truth, that truth will never change, all the discoveries of science will in the end but serve to confirm it. Therefore, young men, young women, keep your minds open, do not forsake the wisdom of the ages for the theories of a Ph. D.

TESTIMONY INSEPARABLY ASSOCIATED WITH HAPPINESS AND JOY

I thank God that I have a testimony. It is the greatest possession of my own life. It is inseparably associated with all that makes for happiness and joy. It contemplates with me everything that really makes life worth living—my intelligence, my priesthood, my relationship to God, to man, to my family,—all comes from this testimony, that God has been good enough and kind enough to implant within my soul. I know that it exists. I know that it has essence, that it is a real thing, and that it will always be in me. I do not know that I will always respond to it as I ought. I pray to God that I shall always have the courage to do it, because I know that it will always lead me to right and to happiness.

I pray too that everyone may feel the full import and impress of this great and wonderful blessing that God has given, a testimony of the Christ. Would that all of our young people could know just what happiness it brings and just how it enriches their lives. May the Lord in his mercy make it possible for every young man and every young woman to receive a testimony of Jesus Christ as a bulwark against sin and danger and temptation, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A soprano solo, "Calvary," was sung by Mrs. Edna Stromberg.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

The virility of the Church is the testimony of which Brother Stephen L. Richards has just spoken. We have in the mission field thousands who are giving their time and paying their own expenses, and preaching the gospel—because in their souls there burns this satisfying and impelling testimony. I predict that many of our older and more experienced church members who have this same testimony burning in their hearts will respond to the appeal that has been made by President Grant to go for about six months into the various parts of the United States and our neighboring countries at their own expense and preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. What but this testimony could induce people to render such a service?

A TRIP TO THE MEXICAN MISSION

I returned recently from an extremely interesting trip with President Rey L. Pratt and Dr. George W. Middleton through the Mexican mission. Our neighbor on the south is a country with great resources and unusual possibilities. The climate, especially in those great valleys around the City of Mexico, is neither too warm nor too cold. The temperature rarely reaches 70 degrees and very rarely gets as low as 60 degrees. No provision is made for heated buildings, artificial heat being unnecessary. The history of the country thrills with romance. The ancient ruins of temples, cities, and palaces, showing a knowledge of engineering and construction which it is well nigh impossible to explain, has an intense interest to all of us who are familiar with, and interested in, the Book of Mormon.

The president of this mission is thoroughly filled with a love for the Mexican or Indian people who reside in our neighbor republic. Average people have hardly a greater interest in their blood relatives than has President Rey L. Pratt in the Mexican people. An eloquent speaker, he knows their language more perfectly than many of them know it themselves.

You who have sons and daughters in that mission have reason to be proud of them. They are dignified, business-like, earnest and unselfish. They are carrying to the people of Mexico lessons in sanitation, agriculture, and even in ventilation. They are helping to build churches; and, more important than all else, they are carrying to them lessons in honor and honesty, truth, virtue, and faith, which constitute the gospel.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN J. MCCLELLAN

While I would like to say more about the Mexican mission, I shall not do so now because I feel that this occasion demands that I say something concerning the life and accomplishments of my friend, and yours, that master musician, the late John J. McClellan. I little thought six months ago when, in conference, we were stirred by the strains of the great organ, operated under his skillful touch, that he would not be here today.

It is twenty-nine years since he came to Salt Lake City. A little more than thirty years ago he and I were boys together in Ann Arbor, Michigan. I was a student in the Department of Civil Engineering at the University, and he was studying in the Michigan School of Music. I have sat at the end of his piano by the hour, thrilled by the story which his music told. In those days he was kind enough to say that my enjoyment of his music was his greatest encouragement.

His heart was deeply and truly religious as well as musical. Once when a group of young people in that college city were holding a testimony meeting, I said, "John, will you play for us?" Thinking I had asked him to pray, he arose and poured out the genuine fervor of his soul in a prayer that touched our hearts.

At twenty he led the Catholic choir in Ann Arbor. He composed the mass presented in that great music center on Easter. He not only led the choir and prepared the parts for the singers, but also arranged the parts for the orchestra. Elsewhere this achievement would have been greatly to his credit, but it was unusually so in that great musical center.

The Columbian organ, constructed for the World's Fair of 1893, and secured by the Michigan School of Music, was the first great organ on which McClellan played. His teacher was Professor Stanley, and when the professor himself could not appear at recitals, McClellan was his substitute. Even in those, his boyhood days, he thrilled the audiences which filled University Hall.

Shortly before his death Elbert Hubbard cancelled his reservations to hear McClellan play. Later in the Fra he wrote:

"If any man has the spirit of old Bach it is this man McClellan. He is a wizard of the keys.

"I thought I had heard organ playing before, but the exquisite modulations, the tones and tints of sweet sounds that this man produces cannot be described. They must be heard—and more, they must be felt. McClellan does not play with his hands and feet; he plays with his heart and head, and the keys respond to love's caress. Only high intelligence, sympathy, and superb imagination can produce such music.

"What Paderewski is to the piano, McClellan is to the pipe-organ.

"The 'Mormons' make great use of instrumental music. Their choral societies deserve to rank as a pattern for all America."

When his death was announced, telegrams and letters of sympathy came to his family from England, France, Germany, even from Japan and the islands of the sea. Wherever people are found who are interested in music, there it seems John J. McClellan is not only known but loved.

A letter to the professor himself from one of his students in France, which came after his death, says in part:

"We have quite a little colony here, and you are often the subject of our conversation. We are all intensely interested in your welfare. . . Dupre gave a recital on the new organ recently. It was of course a great performance. He talked to us after the concert and inquired especially of you. He expressed deep interest in you personally, in your work and asked to be remembered to you most sincerely." (Dupre is one of the world's greatest organists.)

The secretary of the Municipal Band of Long Beach, Calif., writes:

"Mr. McClellan was known to nearly every member of this band, and they admired and esteemed him for his high character and they felt honored in his friendship. In his personal and professional life he has left a monument in which his family and friends may take the utmost pride. . . Many in Long Beach have been looking forward to the time when we might have a new auditorium, with John J. McClellan seated at a wonderful organ exercising the magic of his musicianship on the keyboard in the style in which he had so few peers."

Mr. H. C. Bush wrote from Chicago:

"He was a genius in his personality as well as in his art, and his light shone brightly all over this broad land. . . He was ambitious beyond his physical strength, and like a good soldier, he died fighting."

Wrote one tourist from West Virginia:

"John J. McClellan was born with the soul of a genius and the heart of an artist. Probably a million people heard him in Tabernacle recitals. As one of the million I attended a recital eight years ago. I acknowledge therefore a debt which I can never repay."

King Albert of Belgium was so pleased with his music that he decorated McClellan with the order of the crown. He never played games, he was not interested in football, no one ever saw him dance. He devoted himself exclusively to his art. He and I were young men together in the old Salt Lake stake when it covered all of Salt Lake County. On many occasions while I was stake superintendent of the Mutuals he went with me to do the playing, Thomas Ashworth to do the singing, and B. F. Grant to do the speaking. The meeting houses in Salt Lake County were never large enough to hold the multitudes who came out to attend.
